News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—The entire block on the west side of Center, between Leonard and Worth streets, was burned this afternoon. Loss estimated at $500,000.

Public school No. 5 in Jersey City was burned. One hundred and fifty girls escaped.

Barnum's Museum was burned. The camel and elephant were the only animals saved.

The loss by the burning of Barnum's Museum and some adjacent buildings is fully $500,000.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.—A fire destroyed Clifford Hotel, corner of Thirty-First street and Broadway. The guests escaped.

The details of the accident at Goose Creek, Pennsylvania, near Pleasant station, are horrible. Cars burning, and no water. Uphill, a telegraph operator, was killed. No Southerners in theolist. Twenty-one persons were killed, sixteen of whom were charred beyond recognition. The bones of three additional victims are still under the wreck. The shrieks of the sufferers lasted nearly an hour. Several of the rescued will die.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—The King of the Sandwich Islands is dead.

King Kamehameha the Fifth, who has just died at the age of forty-two, is the last of the royal line; he did not name his successor.

MEMPHIS, Dec. 27.—Last night the ice gorged at the Hen and Chickens, just above the city, and at two o'clock the gorge broke and the ice came down with terrific force, sweeping off the dry docks, then cutting down ten barges of coal belonging to Brown & Jones; then steamer after steamer lying at the wharf until it was thought not a single one of the large number lying there could be saved. The following is a list of boats lost: Laura, Belle Pike, R. P. Walt, Undine, West Wind.

The City of Augusta and towboat Nellie Thomas are lying in a critical condition. It is doubtful whether they can be saved, as the ice is running very heavily. The West Wind and Walt are loaded with cotton.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—The appeal of the New Orleans committee to the people of the United States has been printed in pamphlet, with an appendix quoting the laws bearing upon the case. They will memorialize Congress for a committee of investigation, upon whose report they hope that body will devise some means of relief for Louisiana.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., Dec. 28.—The supply of coal here is entirely exhausted. No trains have arrived from Memphis for three days.

NEW YORK, Dec. 30.—The Louisiana Commission, in a long letter published this morning, denies the statement made by Senator Kellogg in his bill of complaint filed in the United States Circuit Court, and says Kellogg's object in wishing to get possession of the Louisiana election returns was expressed in what he charged upon the returning officers and the Governor—that is, to falsify and suppress, or destroy them, in order to make it appear that he had been elected Governor.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 31.—The ice gorge in the river below here broke up this evening, and is being carried off by the current in heavy masses. Some damage has been done, but to what extent has not yet been ascertained.

FOREIGN.

ROME, Dec. 24.—The Pope delivered an allocution to the consistory composed of twenty-two cardinals. He said the church was still sorely persecuted. A purpose to destroy her was shown in the act of the Italian government which compelled the clergy to serve in the army and imposed heavy taxes on church property. He solemnly protested against the bill now pending in the Italian Parliament for the suppression of religious corporations and declared that a title to property acquired by this means would be null and void. He repeated his censures of those who encroached on the rights of the church, and denounced Germany, where the pitfalls of open violence, calumny and ridicule were employed to destroy the church, by men who, ignorant of religion, sought to define its dogmas. The allocution concluded with a protest against clergy dotation.

BERLIN, Dec. 28.—The North German Gazette stigmatizes the allocution of the Pope, delivered at the consistory held in Rome, on the twenty-third instant; as an unpardonable insult to the Emperor of Germany. The colossal impudence of the Pope, says the Gazette, proves the inevitable necessity for the immediate passage of a law defining the boundaries between the State and the Roman Catholic Church.

After the first of January persons going to Germany from France will not be required to provide themselves with a passport.

BERLIN, Dec. 30.—The journals of Koenigsburg and Posen have been threatened with immediate confiscation if they publish insulting references to Germany in the recent papal allocution. The Charge d'Affidres of the German Legation will probably be instructed not to attend the reception of the diplomatic body by the Pope on the first of January, on account of the allocution.

ROME, December 30.—The German Charge d'Affidres informed Cardinal Antonelli, last week, that he had been instructed to take an unlimited leave of absence. He has since closed the legation and quit Rome for Berlin.

Letter from China.

MR. EDITOR: You have no doubt often heard of the tribe of Miantze, the aborigines of China, who inhabit the hill-country west. The present government of China are trying to destroy them, root and branch. They have never been conquered by the Chinese, and are said to be a brave people. I will give you some account of the bloody deeds of this cruel people, the Chinese, who are classed among civilized nations. Before I speak of these poor, persecuted people, the Miantze, I will allude to what occurred not long since near Swatow, south of this. A notice was issued by General Pang for one hundred bamboo cages to be made. It seems about that number of men were to be beheaded, and these cages were required to be used in taking these men to the execution ground. Shortly after the above notice eighty of these men were placed in cages—the rest remaining in prison—and were then carried out to the execution ground. When they had arrived the men were placed in long rows, each row being ten feet apart, so as to give plenty of room for the executioner, when leaving one, to get a good swing before reaching another. Swords or choppers were arranged at suitable intervals, for the executioner uses a fresh one for every half dozen men. When he commenced his bloody work he went bounding down one row and up another, and at every fall of the bloody chopper a man's head fell from the body. It was said to be more like the slaughter of hogs than of human beings. During the past three years General Pang has beheaded some three thousand, and the most of the work is said to have been done by a loan of stout build, with a hawked nose, who goes about with General Pang, and executes his orders in the destruction of human life. The story of this man is as follows: The people of Swatow say that on one occasion, when the rebels were in the country, General Pang had a number of rebels kneeling before him for execution. The executioner began his work, but went on in such a bungling way that it attracted the attention of the hawked-nose man, who was among the number to be executed. Being accustomed to such scenes, he did not fear, and at once called out to Pang to know if they were all to be hacked to pieces in that way, and then asked to be set at liberty, and he would show them how to do it. Pang was greatly surprised at this, and ordered the man to be released for that purpose. He soon made short work of all his comrades, and then, kneeling as before, asked them to finish him. Pang said: "No; that man is too useful to be slain; I want him myself." Since then he has led a bloody and equal life in slaying his fellow-men, and boasting that he never misses or requires a second blow at a man's head.

The war against the Miantze, the children of the forest, is carried on in the southwestern part of China. The governor of one of the provinces west says the execution of the great Miantze chief, Koo-ho, would have been postponed had not the distance between there and Pekin been so great, and must necessarily have required a long time before an answer could have been returned; and as the chieftain since his capture had refused food, he feared he would starve, and thus die an easy death before the Imperial will could be known concerning him. Therefore a council of war had been held, and decided he should suffer the penalty of treason and rebellion—that is, "degraded, and cut into a thousand pieces." The manner in which this was done was horrible, but it was all given in full, as if for the gratification of the Emperor.

"The criminal judge, attended by the executioners, in the presence of the assembled armies, ordered the body of Koo-ho to be stripped naked and wound around with strong iron wire, each coil being a few inches from the other, and drawn so tightly into the flesh that it caused it to rise between the coils. When this was done, and he was securely bound to a stake, the executioners began their work of slowly picking the flesh from the bones with sharp iron instruments, something like a three-pronged fork, the flesh being handed, as it was torn off, to others, who stood by, to receive it, and with sharp shears cut it into still smaller pieces, throwing them on the ground, and then stamping on them. When this was finished he was left standing, while several inferior rebel chiefs were beheaded, and their heads sent round the camp for the admiration of the multitude, and to give a little variety to their amusement! Then the executioners returned to Koo-ho, cut off the head from the still bleeding, living skeleton of bones, and also sent it around the camp. It was received with a shout of exultation by the officers and people, who all rejoiced and praised their gods for this glorious triumph over their enemies. Again the torturers returned to their prey, slowly sawed the bones of the rebel chief in small pieces, and handed them over to assistants to grind them to powder, and scatter to the 'four winds of heaven,' which they did before the eyes of an applauding, rejoicing multitude!"

To this description is then added the names of those officers who took a most conspicuous part in the execution of these deeds of cruelty, and recommending that these loyal subjects of the Emperor be promoted.

Such is China at the present day, with all her boasted civilization. Truly this is a land of darkness, where they know not the true God. The hearts of these people are full of all subtlety, deceit and cruelty. When will the true light shine in their hearts and subdue their evil natures? When will they learn to fear God? Pray for us in this land of darkness, idolatry and superstition, that God may help us right early. I remain yours in Christian love.—J. W. Lambuth, in Nashville Christian Advocate.

Little Rock Conference.

The session of this Conference was held at Pine Bluff, Arkansas, beginning on Wednesday, December 4, and closing on Monday following, Bishop Wightman presiding.

The visit of Dr. A. L. P. Green was highly appreciated. He represented ably and successfully the interests of the Central University, and of the Publishing House at Nashville. The Conference, by a unanimous vote, gave its co-operation with the other Conferences to the university, requested the appointment of an agent, and elected the following as its Board of Trustees, viz: A. Hunter, W. C. Hearn, J. L. De Yampert and Dr. S. E. Cule.

For the rising Publishing House, and as a mark of affectionate respect for Dr. Summers, the Conference pledged the payment of $700 for the fitting up of his office. It would have affected the generous heart of the doctor could he have witnessed the enthusiasm of the Conference in making this very handsome contribution. The amounts are to be forwarded by the first of June.

The Missionary Anniversary was the greatest success of the season. Under the persuasive eloquence of Dr. Winfield, the noble sum of $2,857 was contributed for this great cause.

After a very harmonious and most enjoyable session, the Conference closed on Monday night by the reading out of the following

M. E. Church (North.)

The Bishops, at their late meeting, arranged for the episcopal visitation of our foreign missions as follows:

1. Bishop Bowman was appointed to visit our mission in South America in the summer of 1873.

2. Bishop Harris was appointed to visit the missions of our church in Asia and Europe. It is expected that he will leave San Francisco early in the coming summer, going thence to Japan, China and India, presiding at the session of the India Conference in January, 1874; thence by the way of Bombay, Constantinople and Italy; to western Europe, presiding in the Mission Conference of Germany and Switzerland at its session in 1874; and thence to the Irish and British Conferences as one of the delegates to those bodies from the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

3. Bishop Foster was appointed to visit our missions in Europe during the coming summer, and preside in the Mission Conference of Germany and Switzerland at its session of 1873.

4. Bishop Haven was appointed to visit Mexico during the current winter to supervise the planting of our mission in that country.

In pursuance of the action of the General Conference, as recited in the Journal of 1872, pages 403, 440, the following persons were appointed a delegation to bear the fraternal greetings of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its next ensuing session, namely: Rev. Albert S. Hunt, Rev. Charles H. Fowler, D. D., and General Clinton B. Fisk. Rev. Benjamin F. Crary was appointed alternate for either ministerial delegate, and Governor William Claflin was appointed the alternate of General Fisk.

The Bishops also adopted the following minute, namely:

"Inasmuch as the late General Conference addressed a fraternal letter to the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church; and inasmuch as we are satisfied that the failure to appoint a fraternal delegation to that body was purely an oversight; therefore,

"Resolved, That we request Rev. David Sherman, of the New England Conference, and Rev. Benjamin Brown, of the Washington Conference, to visit the said General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, at its next session, to bear the aforesaid letter and our fraternal greetings to that body."

In obedience to the action of the late General Conference, as set forth in the Journal of 1872, page 291, the following persons were appointed a commission to prepare a code of ecclesiastical jurisprudence, and report the same to the next General Conference, namely: Rev. John Miley, D. D., of the New York Conference; Rev. John B. Wentworth, D. D., of the Western New York Conference; Rev. Fernando C. Holliday, D. D., of the Southeastern Indiana Conference; Hon. William Lawrence, of Bellefontaine, Ohio; Hon. Daniel M. Bates, of Wilmington, Delaware, and Hon. George G. Reynolds, of Brooklyn, New York.

Texas Conference.

The editor of the Galveston Christian Advocate, writing from the Texas Conference, says:

"We reached Bryan at two A. M., December 4, and, after a few hours' rest, met with our brethren in the Conference room. Bishop Keener opened the Conference with an address, which fell with peculiar weight on the heart of every preacher who heard it. We wish we could echo his earnest, impressive words, so that they would reach the ear of the entire church.

He reminded us of the solemnity of that hour when the annual pastorate of the Methodist preacher ends, and his report of work performed or neglected must be made. It is God's work, involving issues of the gravest character, and the question, How have its obligations been met? is one of solemn import to all who are engaged in that work. The preacher is an earthen vessel, but he may hold elements of great power. Commissioned of God to preach, he is the embodiment of divine energy, and becomes the grand agency for the redemption of our race. The evidence that we hold that relation is in the fruit of our labors. These testify of us, if we indeed build upon Christ. When we can point to the field where we have wrought, and say, Behold what, through the power of grace, has been done! we may accept the results as seals to our ministry more authoritative than any man may confer. He referred to the discouragements often felt because the times seemed out of joint, and the elements of evil appear to hold undisputed sway. Thus it was when the gospel was established. Earth has never seen a darker home than that which preceded the rising of the Sun of Righteousness. The power of evil was dominant in the church and the world when Luther began his work; while Wesley found the church resting under the bonds of a ritualism which yielded no evidence of spiritual life. If our day is dark, it is a time for us to work. The existence of the evils which abound in the world, or the lack of faithful men upon the walls, is a call to the man of God to work for the Master who has sent him forth. He regarded it as an encouraging thought that Mr. Wesley's system had abated none of its force, and that his theology had lost none of its power. The world extends to them a recognition and respect which grows stronger and deeper as the church widens its influence, and the power of that system and the truthfulness of that theology are tested. The strong sense of the English mind, the spirituality of the Moravians, the sturdy power of the Germans, are recognizing its value and force. One law in nature often finds a thousand grand developments, and the gospel announced by Christ, simple, yet grand in its utterances, expands and develops to meet all the moral and spiritual wants of our race in every age. The secret of our power as a ministry and a church is to hold on to those central elements of spiritual life and power, realizing them in our hearts, and proclaiming them from the pulpit, and by our lives we may accomplish the great work assigned us.

Books and Periodicals.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND JOURNAL OF REV. HEMAN BANGS. With an introduction by Rev. Bishop James, D. D. Edited by his daughters. New York: N. Tibbals & Son. 1872.

Heman Bangs was born in 1790, and died in 1869. He had received and filled fifty-four appointments as an itinerant preacher. His active life embraced the most important part of Methodist history in the United States. He was himself a prominent actor in the affairs of the church for half a century. A man above reproach, of perfect independence and courage, and a clear and intelligent observer of passing events, and, above all, of great faith, and deep and childlike piety. The autobiography and journal of such a man is bound to be a book of interest to almost every class of devout readers, and especially to those who love to study the character and achievements of the truly heroic, the great and the good. Heman Bangs, during the last years of his life, stood almost alone among his brethren protesting against the ultra views and extreme measures to which the Northern Methodist Church committed herself. But he never lost the respect of those with whom he differed. During his ministry he had received ten thousand members into the church, and the monuments of his laborious zeal and sagacity, in the form of churches and institutions of learning and benevolence, still bear witness to his rare devotion and usefulness. The book is to us a refreshment, and full of interest from beginning to end. The autobiographical part comprises but thirty-eight pages of the volume, and comes down to 1817. At this point the journal begins, and the last entry is August 4, 1869, and the last words of this entry are: "I am saved by grace through faith." The journal is by no means a lifeless array of dates, but abounds in incidents, reflections, sketches of sermons and matters of historical and personal interest. An excellent engraved likeness of Mr. Bangs adorns the volume, and true to the life, as we saw and heard the noble old preacher at the session of the Louisiana Conference in 1861. The book closes with a memorial of his wife, Mrs. Sally Burritt Bangs, a woman of rare gifts and piety, who died a few years before her honored husband. Good taste, sound judgment and tender affection are exhibited in the editing and preparation of the work for the press.

SERMONS AND DISCOURSES. By Thomas Chalmers, D. D., LL. D. Now completed by the introduction of his posthumous sermons. Two volumes in one. New York: Robert Carter & Bros.

A very stout octavo of 1,103 pages, containing all the sermons of the celebrated preacher. The frontispiece is a handsomely engraved likeness of Dr. Chalmers. The introduction of the posthumous sermons is a most valuable feature of the work. It is not necessary to write a criticism or to make my new estimate of these sermons. The most of them have been before the public for many years, and it is only needful to announce that this new, cheap and complete edition is ready for the buyer. No library should be without it. Chalmers, at the time of his death, was the greatest preacher in the world, and here are the sermons which made his reputation. For sale by R. J. Harp, Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Price, $3.

THE CHURCH HYMN BOOK, WITH TUNES, FOR THE WORSHIP OF GOD. Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Co., New York and Chicago. 1872.

A splendid octavo of 586 pages, tinted paper and beautiful typography. The best hymns in our language are in it, and those which, by long use, are precious to all Christians—Watts, Wesley, Doddridge, Montgomery, Newton and other of the old writers are represented, besides the choicest effusions of later authors. The music embraces the bulk of the old familiar tunes, and many new ones of great merit. A complete and useful compilation, and admirably adapted to social and congregational worship. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE WORLD OF MORAL AND RELIGIOUS ANECDOTE. Illustrations and incidents gathered from the words, thoughts and deeds of the lives of men, women and books. By Edwin Paxton Hood. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1872. Octavo, 752 pages.

This seems to be a companion volume to "the World of Anecdote" noticed by us some time ago, and is by the same author. In such a mass of anecdotes there is much chaff much that is utterly stale and unprofitable—along with a great deal that is truly interesting and instructive. Preachers will find in the volume plenty of material wherewith to spice their sermons, and to illustrate topics of religious discourse. For sale by Gresham, Camp street, New Orleans.

WHO WON? By the author of Win and Wear. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1873.

Another story for the children, and with a good moral to it. A handsome dodecimo, elegantly bound, of over 400 pages. For sale by R. J. Harp Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

UPLANDS AND LOWLANDS. Three chapters in a life. By Rose Porter. New York: Anson D. F. Randolph & Co.

Miss Porter has achieved a high and enviable reputation as a writer. Her style is fresh and picturesque, and the moral of her stories is always good. This volume is probably one of her best, and is a work of great interest and merit. Duodecimo, 303 pages. For sale by R. J. Harp, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

NEW SCHOOL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. By J. S. Blackburn and W. N. McDonald, A. M. Baltimore: W. J. C. Dulany & Co. 1872.

Much more voluminous than the Grammar School History by the same authors, and adapted to more advanced pupils. The history of the late war is written from a Southern standpoint, making the work a safe and desirable text book for our schools. For sale at the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

A GRAMMAR SCHOOL HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES, from the discovery of America to the present time. By J. S. Blackburn and W. N. McDonald, A. M. Baltimore: W. J. C. Dulany. 1872.

This is written for the use of young pupils, and is admirably adapted as a text book in our schools. The style is simple, clear and compact. The very thing for our Southern children. For sale at our Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street.

STORIES AND POEMS. By Mother and Daughter, Caroline Gilman and Caroline Howard Jervey. Illustrated. Boston: Lee & Shepard. New York: Lee, Shepard & Dillingham. 1872.

The dedicatory address of the many good stories and poems to interest and instruct young people. The moral and religious tone of the work seems to be decided and prominent. For sale at the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

PARLOR PLAYS. By Mrs. L. C. Wamer. New York: Robert F. Randolph & Co. 1872.

Written by a lady, the work is more especially addressed to ladies. It puts the subject of gardening in a very attractive form and contains a great deal of valuable information concerning the cultivation of flowers. A wholesome and useful book. For sale by R. J. Harp, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

COMFORTER. By the author of "Talks with a Child on the Beatitudes," etc. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1872.

For bereaved parents. Much in the little volume that is very good indeed; but it is the exception of sweet-tempered organisms at last. A book which we cannot recommend. For sale by J. A. Gresham, Camp street, New Orleans.

THE BOY'S BOOK ABOUT INDIANS. By Rev. Edmund R. Tuttle. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. 1872.

The book is dedicated to General W. T. Sherman. It contains much information concerning the Indians, and many entertaining incidents and sketches. The volume is handsomely illustrated. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

KITTY'S BOOKS. By Joanna H. Mathews. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1872.

A sweet little story for very little children. Contents, binding, illustrations and print all of the best. For sale by R. J. Harp, at the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

VICK'S ILLUSTRATED FLORAL GUIDE, for 1873. The handsomest number yet issued. The engravings and the engraving are excellent, and the catalogue and descriptions of flowers, bulbs and seeds complete. All who take any interest in the flower and vegetable garden should have this splendid publication. The work is now published quarterly, at only five cents a year. James Vick, Rochester, New York.

TIPPECANOE AND TYLER TOO. A Vermont periodical, fully entitled to Southern support and a hearty welcome, not only from patriotic motives, but because of its literary merit. The housekeeping department is well filled with receipts, and recipes, such as are characteristic of Virginia cookery of long ago.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL PAPERS for January, 1873, are to hand and each is perfect after its kind. Methodist Visitor, Little People and Youth's Companion, Pleasant Hours, Berean Leaf, Sunday School Visitor, Sunday School Advocate, Sunbeam, Child's Paper, Little Pilgrim, Child's Friend, Child's Companion, Infant Class Teacher, Primary Teacher, Lesson Leaves, Lesson Quarterly, Lesson Monthly, Lesson Manual, Lesson Paper, Lesson Hymns, Lesson Pictures, Lesson Commentary, Lesson Illustrations, Lesson Index, Lesson Compend, Lesson Expositor, Lesson Quarterly Review, Lesson Leaf, Lesson Hymn Book, Lesson Hymn Sheet, Lesson Hymn Card, Lesson Hymn Book Supplement, Lesson Hymn Book Index, Lesson Hymn Book Appendix, Lesson Hymn Book Table of Contents, Lesson Hymn Book Preface, Lesson Hymn Book Introduction, Lesson Hymn Book Dedication, Lesson Hymn Book Frontispiece, Lesson Hymn Book Title Page, Lesson Hymn Book Publication Info, Lesson Hymn Book Copyright, Lesson Hymn Book Table of Contents, Lesson Hymn Book Preface, Lesson Hymn Book Introduction, Lesson Hymn Book Dedication, Lesson Hymn Book Frontispiece, Lesson Hymn Book Title Page, Lesson Hymn Book Publication Info, Lesson Hymn Book Copyright.

THE CATHOLIC ALMANAC for 1873. Baltimore: Kelly & Piet. 1873.

Contains much information concerning the Catholic Church in the United States, Europe and elsewhere. Also a calendar, and much miscellaneous matter. For sale by Ellis & Bro., New Orleans.

MOBILE ALMANAC for 1873. Mobile: Farrow & Dennett. 1873.

Contains much information concerning Mobile, Alabama.

NEW AND THE BEST THOUGHTS from the best thinkers of the best thoughts of the best thinkers. Boston: R. F. Walcutt. New York: R. J. Harp. Mobile, Alabama.

A collection of thoughts from many sources, arranged under appropriate heads. For sale by R. J. Harp, Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

HYMN FOR ADVENT.

BY ARTHUR PENRHYN STANLEY, D. D., DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.

The Lord is come! On Syrian soil,
The Child of poverty and toil—
The Man of Sorrows, born to know
Each varying shade of human woe:
His joy, his glory to fulfill:
In earth and heaven, his Father's will;
On lonely mount, by festive board,
On bitter cross—despised, adored.

The Lord is come! Dull hearts to wake,
He speaks, as never man yet spake,
The truth which makes his servants free,
The royal law of liberty.
Though heaven and earth shall pass away,
His living words our spirits stay.
And from his treasures, new and old,
The eternal mysteries unfold.

The Lord is come! With joy behold
The gracious signs, declared of old;
The ear that hears, the eye that sees,
The sick restored to health and ease;
The poor, that from their low estate
Are roused to seek a nobler fate;
The minds with doubt and dread possessed,
That find in him their perfect rest.

The Lord is come! The world's great stage
Begins a better, brighter age:
The old gives place unto the new;
The false retires before the true;
A progress that shall never tire,
A central heat of sacred fire,
A hope that soars beyond the tomb,
Reveal that Christ has truly come.

The Lord is come! In him we trace
The fullness of God's truth and grace;
Throughout those words and acts divine
Gleams of the eternal splendor shine;
And from his inmost Spirit flow,
As from a height of sunlit snow,
The rivers of perennial life
To heal and sweeten Nature's strife.

The Lord is come! In every heart
Where Truth and Mercy claim a part;
In every land where right is might,
And deeds of darkness shun the light;
In every church where Faith and Love
Lift earthward thoughts to things above;
In every holy, happy home,
We bless thee, Lord, that thou hast come!

That "Pastoral Visit."

MR. EDITOR: "Our Pastoral Visit," in the ADVOCATE of the twenty-eighth of November, was real crispy, brown and nice. I liked it. And as I have not yet given my modicum of advice to "our editor," I will do so now. Give us more of such neat and tidy little talks. Come down from your "high and lifted-up" place of heavy and learned "leaders," and talk to us common readers in this popular and friendly way. They strike a sympathetic chord in the hearts of the people, and move them toward the editor—make them forget that a grave D. D. drives the ADVOCATE quill? helps them to the fact that a warm-hearted, loving pastor sits at the desk, seeking earnestly and prayerfully their spiritual comfort and peace.

But this en passant. "The Pastoral Visit" was to me suggestive. I was made to think of pastoral work in general, and of pastoral visits in particular. I know this is a trite, common-place subject. Whatever others might be able to do, I cannot expect to say anything new relative to it. However, with your permission I want to say some few old things in my own old way.

I will begin by asking questions. They are as follows: How can a minister of Jesus, with the solemn vows of the church upon him, neglect or fail to do with his whole heart the one specific thing he has promised to do and keep a good conscience? How can he be careless and not stultify himself? How can he be indifferent without moral perfidy, if not perjury? I know these are strong questions—a strong presentation of the matter; but I mean it. Ordinarily, when a man gives a promise—pledges his word—and fails to meet the obligation without a just cause, he must lose caste as a man of integrity. A Methodist preacher gives a most solemn personal pledge, and that, too, under the most solemn and engaging circumstances. The spirit of his vow calls for earnest, laborious diligence in this pastoral work—visiting "from house to house and diligently instructing the children." Can he become careless and neglectful in the face of his personal pledges? How can he, I ask, and maintain his integrity? I have the strongest possible faith in the good intentions and pure motives of those assuming such vows. But, however good the intention and pure the motive in the beginning, if the subsequent life does not comport with it, the man must sustain the loss.

It is reasonable to suppose that all desire success—desire to preach well, to stand fair with their brethren, to be acceptable to the people, to be sought after; in a word, to succeed. Not, indeed, for the mere sake of success. This spirit is in harmony with a worldly, unsanctified ambition, but not with the work of the Christian minister. Self is to be left out. He brings his ships to land, forsakes all and follows Christ. The condition of success—true success—is found in faithfulness to the pastoral work. Had I the space to elaborate it, I would say that here, and here only, the conditions are to be found. To preach well the preacher must be spiritual—truly religious—in full and active harmony with his message. To say no more, how can a man be counted morally honest when he, in fact or in spirit, does not do what he has promised most solemnly to do?

To preach well—to fill the pulpit—is to give to each his portion in due season. How can the preacher do this when he is out of sympathy with his people—don't know what their wants are, much less their particular "seasons?"

To preach well the preacher must have the heart and ear of his people. This he gets only as a pastor. He may flash up for a Sabbath or two, but unless he has the heart, the tongue, the eye, the hand, the foot of the true, sympathizing pastor his Sunday scintillations will only serve to reveal the barrenness of his work, and adorn the completeness of his failure.

The mellow light of the fireside—the precious circle—guides, cheers the home a safe and assured gospel preacher to

If one can have the ease, [illegible] to regard the ministry, for a moment, in the light of a mere profession, it will serve to strengthen this matter; for as a profession even, a selfish, worldly success can be attained fully only by laborious, painstaking pastoral work. It chills the heart, however, to think of the subject from this standpoint. When the contrast is considered—when it is known that the salvation of the soul is involved; that it is no personal enterprise, but that "necessity is laid upon the man;" that it is a question of comfort to torn and lacerated hearts; that it is the work of drying wet cheeks and restoring light and gladness to darkened and cheerless houses; that it is a ministry of joy to the angels in heaven, and gives gladness to the spirits of the redeemed—in what grand proportion does the work of the spiritual pastor stand out before the eye! And how glaring and fearful the sin of the faithless one! ***

The Time to Hold the Louisiana Annual Conference.

MR. EDITOR: We have on several occasions, at our Annual Conferences, discussed this subject; but down to the present time we have been undetermined as to the best season of the year for holding our sessions. The following reasons compel me to contend for the early part of April as not only the most suitable time for our Conference sessions, but the only suitable time.

1. By holding our Conference in April we will have navigable streams, affording us facilities of travel that we very seldom have in January, and never have in December.

2. We will have pleasant weather for traveling to and from Conference, which we cannot have in mid-winter. This is an important consideration. How few of us return home from our mid-winter Conferences without severe colds; and we all know well of valuable lives lost by this exposure.

3. In case of change (which occurs at each Conference with some) we will have pleasant, comfortable weather in which to remove our families to our new fields of labor. The vast importance of this is patent to every one. Our last Annual Conference, and its results of hardships and exposure in the removal of families, is sufficient to impress us with the importance of remedying this great evil, if possible.

4. We will enter upon our new fields of labor at a season of promise, and will be enabled to begin effective work immediately. Going to a new field in mid-winter, being unacquainted with the families, the roads, the neighborhoods, and the weather being cold, the roads bad, the waters up, it is impossible to do much effective work until the spring is opening. Now this time is almost entirely lost, for if it were at the close of the Conference year we, being acquainted with all these things, could do very effective work in bringing up collections and visiting the people pastorally. If we can save almost one-fourth of the year, which is now almost entirely unavailable for good, we should undoubtedly make the change.

5. We will thus close our Conference year with the commercial year, and by so doing be enabled to bring up all the pecuniary interests of the church much more effectively. As it is, we arrive at our work at a season of the year so very inclement that we cannot lay effective plans until the money of the country is spent. Then it is unusual to pay the laborer in advance, and the people will pay more liberally to an acquaintance; and we leave our circuits before the crops are sold, and the consequence is that our salaries and collections for our various church enterprises are very meager. Holding the Conference in April, we enter effectively upon our work immediately—we get all the plans laid and different interests of the church before the people; then in mid-winter, when the money is in hand, and we can do but little else, being acquainted with country and people, we can take up our collections privately, if not publicly; and, having done our work, the people will feel it incumbent to pay us, and the consequence will be that we will be enabled to increase our receipts fifty per cent., if not to double them. Now you see that to hold our Conference in April will subserve every interest of both church and preacher. "Well," says one, "what about houses to live in, and gardens?" Well, this plan will have a tendency to lead the church to provide parsonages, which, in my opinion, is very important; and if A.'s family are in a hired house up to Conference, and he is removed, B. can always occupy the same, if he desire it. I have never been in city, town or country but that there were vacant houses to let at all seasons of the year. Such cases are extremely rare when it is difficult to obtain a house at any season. Then the stewards will, of course, always assist in this work, and the more readily as they have nice, pleasant weather in which to travel about and do this work, as well as a season of leisure for farmers. As to the gardens, there are but few of us, if we do our work properly, who have time to cultivate the soil; and that is indeed a very unfortunate people who cannot or will not supply the preacher with cabbage and potatoes. I think that, if I felt pretty certain that Bro. B. and family were soon to occupy the house that I live in, I would take great pleasure in leaving him a good garden. The smile of his wife and the enjoyment of his children at finding a good garden would more than repay me for the toil in its cultivation. Do not say that "this would not be the case generally," for we will conclude that you judge others by yourself. I do not wish to control the Bishop or the Conference in this matter, if I could; but I do honestly believe that to hold our Conference early in each April will subserve every interest of the church, the preacher and his family more effectually than at any other season of the year. ## The Wine Question in Society.

It is universally admitted among sensible and candid people that drunkenness is the great curse of our social and national life. It is not characteristically American, for the same may be said with greater emphasis of the social and national life of Great Britain; but it is one of those things about which there is no doubt. Cholera and smallpox bring smaller fatality, and almost infinitely smaller sorrow. There are fathers and mothers, and sisters and wives, and innocent and wondering children, within every circle that embraces a hundred lives, who grieve to-day over some hopeless victim of the seductive destroyer.

In the city and in the country—North, East, South and West—there are men and women who cannot be trusted with wine in their hands—men and women who are conscious, too, that they are going to destruction, and who have ceased to fight an appetite that has the power to transform every soul and every home it occupies into a hell. Oh, the wild prayers for help that go up from a hundred thousand despairing slaves of strong drink to-day! Oh, the shame, the disappointment, the fear, the disgust, the awful pity, the mad protests that rise from a hundred thousand homes! And still the smoke of the everlasting torment rises, and still we discuss the "wine question," and the "grape culture," and live on as if we had no share in the responsibility for so much sin and shame and suffering.

Society bids us furnish wines at our feasts, and we furnish it as generously as if we did not know that a certain percentage of all the men who drink it will die miserable drunkards, and inflict lives of pitiful suffering upon those who are so closely associated with them. There are literally hundreds of thousands of people in polite life in America who would not dare to give a dinner or a party without wine, notwithstanding the fact that in many instances they can select the very guests who will drink too much on every occasion that gives them an opportunity.

There are old men and women who invite young men to their feasts, whom they know cannot drink the wine they propose to furnish without danger to themselves and disgrace to their companions and friends. They do this sadly, often, but under the compulsions of social usage. Now we understand the power of this influence; and every sensitive man must feel it keenly. Wine has stood so long as an emblem and representative of good cheer and generous hospitality that it seems stingy to shut it away from our festivities, and deny it to our guests. Then, again, it is generally offered at the tables of our friends, and it is so difficult, apparently, for those who are accustomed to it to make a dinner without it, that we hesitate to offer water to them. It has a niggardly—almost an unfriendly—seeming; yet what shall a man do who wishes to throw what influence he has on the side of temperance?

The question is not new. It has been up for an answer every year and every moment since men thought or talked about temperance at all. A man cannot, without sultifying and morally debasing himself, fight in public that which he tolerates in private. We have heard of such things as writing temperance addresses with a demijohn under the table; and society has learned by heart the old talk against drinking too much—"the excess of the thing, you know"—by those who have the power of drinking a little, but who would sooner part with their right eye than with that little.

A man who talks temperance with a wine-glass in his hand is simply trying to brace himself so that he can hold it without shame. We do not deny that many men have self-control, or that they can drink wine through life without suffering, to themselves or others. It may seem hard that they should be deprived of a comfort or a pleasure because others are less fortunate in their temperament or power of will. But the question is whether a man is willing to sell his power to do good to a great multitude for a glass of wine at dinner. That is the question in its plainest terms. If he is, then he has very little benevolence, or a very inadequate apprehension of the evils of intemperance.

What we need in our metropolitan society is a declaration of independence. There are a great many men and women in New York who lament the drinking habits of society most sincerely. Let these all declare that they will minister no longer at the social altars of the great destroyer. Let them declare that the indiscriminate offer of wine at dinners and social assemblies is not only criminal but vulgar, as it undoubtedly is. Let them declare that for the sake of the young, the weak, the vicious—for the sake of personal character, and family peace, and social purity and national strength—they will discard wine from their feasts from this time forth and forever, and the work will be done.

Let them declare that it shall be vulgar—as it undeniably is—for a man to quarrel with his dinner because his host fails to furnish wine. This can be done now, and it needs to be done now, for it is becoming every day more difficult to do it. The habit of wine-drinking at dinners is quite prevalent already. European travel is doing much to make it universal; and if we go on extending it at the present rate, we shall soon arrive at the European indifference to the whole subject. There are many clergymen in New York who have wine upon their tables and who furnish it to their guests. We keep no man's conscience, but we are compelled to say that they sell influence at a shameful rate. What can they do in the great fight with this tremendous evil? They can do nothing, and are counted upon to do nothing.

If the men and women of good society wish to have less drinking to excess, let them stop drinking moderately. If they are not willing to break off the indulgence of a feeble appetite for the sake of doing a great good to a great many people, how can they expect a poor, broken down wretch to deny an appetite that is stronger than the love of wife and children, and even life itself? The punishment for the failure to do duty in this business is sickening to contemplate. The sacrifice of life and peace and wealth will go on.

Every year young men will rush wildly to the devil, middle-aged men will booze away into apoplexy, and old men will swell up with the sweet poison and become disgusting idiots. What will become of the women? We should think they had suffered enough from this evil to hold it under everlasting ban, yet there are drinking women as well as drinking clergymen. Society, however, has a great advantage in the fact that it is vulgar for a woman to drink. There are some things that a woman may not do, and maintain her social standing. Let her not quarrel with the fact that society demands more of her than it does of men. It is her safeguard in many ways.—Holland.

The Primitive Methodist Preacher in Court.

At the recent Primitive Methodist missionary meeting at Birmingham, the Rev. R. W. Burnett told the following story:

"In the early days of Primitive Methodism, under the labors of one of our veteran home missionaries, a notoriously bad character was converted. Quite in harmony with the custom of those times, he soon began preaching. On one occasion he had a large crowd of people gathered by the wayside, and to these he preached Jesus. An officious constable came up and took our friend into custody. The news spread like wild-fire that old Tom was locked up for preaching. Had it been said that it was for poaching, no one would have doubted it, but this preaching gave quite a different character to the affair. On the following morning the court was crowded to hear the trial. The charge was read over, and the prisoner asked what he had to say in reply. Now, this man had been in that dock so often that he did not feel at all concerned—seemed quite at home. Very quietly folding his arms, he addressed the magistrates to the following effect: 'Gentlemen, do you mean business?'

"'Bushess, bushess! Of course we do.'

"'Well, gentlemen, please excuse me; but if you mean business, allow me to say that of late a great change has come over me, and I never now commence any business without first praying about it. If you please, we'll pray.'

"He did not wait to know whether they pleased or not; but with all the fervor of a new convert, poured out his soul in prayer. All in the court and on the magistrates' bench were deeply moved—some to tears. But he prayed rather long, and, good as it was, they thought he might now close; so the presiding magistrate said in an undertone: 'That will do; just stop him.' The constable, shaking our friend's sleeve, said, 'Stop;' but he prayed away. Pulling his sleeve yet more vigorously, he said, 'Stop, man, stop!' but he prayed with increasing fervor.

"One of the magistrates saw one of our preachers in the body of the court, and, calling to him, said: 'Mr. —, you come and stop him.' But our dear old brother enjoyed this novel prayer meeting too much to be induced to stop it; so he replied, loud enough for all to hear: 'Nay, nay, you've started him; I can't stop him.'

"However, our friend in the dock drew his devotions to a close, stood upon his feet, and, again folding his arms, said with becoming meekness: 'Now, gentlemen, if you please, I am quite ready for bushness.'

"The prisoner was ordered into an ante-room while his case was considered. One of the magistrates, moved to tears, said: 'We have often had this man before us, but never under such circumstances. If this is a sample of the work achieved by the labors of the Primitive Methodists, I wish them success wherever they go.' It did not take them long to decide that he had broken no law, and therefore they would very gladly acquit him.

"'Well, gentlemen,' said an officer of the court, 'shall we call him in and say he is acquitted?'

"'What, what! call him in? No, never, or you'll have him on his knees returning thanks. Let him go out at a side-door, but tell him he is fully at liberty to carry on his good work.'"

Harmony of Gospel Doctrines.

Having scattered over an open field the bones of the human body, bring an anatomist to the scene. Conduct him to the valley where Ezekiel stood, with his eye on the skulls, and dismembered skeletons of an unburied host. Observe the man of science how he fits bone to bone, and part to part, till from those scattered members he constructs a framework which, apart from our horror at the eyeless sockets and fleshless form, appears perfectly, divinely beautiful. In hands which have the patience to collect, and the skill to arrange these materials, how perfectly they fit! bone to bone, and joint to joint, till the whole figure rises to the polished dome, and the dumb skeleton seems to say: "I am fearfully and wonderfully made." Now, as with these parts of the human frame, so is it with the doctrines of the gospel, in so far as they are intelligible to our understandings. Scattered over the pages of sacred Scripture, let them also be collected and arranged in systematic order, and how beautifully they fit! doctrine to doctrine, duty to duty; till, all connected with each other, all members one of another, "they rise up into a form of perfect symmetry, and present that very system which, with minor differences but substantial unity, is embodied in the confessions, creeds and catechisms of evangelical Christendom." I have said so far as they are intelligible to us; for it is ever to be borne in mind that while the gospel has shallows through which a child may wade and walk on his way to heaven, it has deep, dark, unfathomed pools, which no eye can penetrate, and where the first step takes a giant beyond his depth.—Dr. Guthrie.

Obituaries.

JOHN H. POWELL was born March 1, 1824, in Suffolk county, Virginia, and died January 2, 1872, in Yazoo county, Mississippi.

Dreary and lonely has been our once tranquil and happy home since the all-pervading monster, Death, drew his cold and icy mantle around our father, and bade him depart. Yes, he took from our midst our parent, but not without warning; for long ere he made his grim and doleful appearance, full well did we know that his coming was near at hand. We felt that our little flock was about to be approached, and that our little group must needs part ere long, and our number made sadly less.

We could see clearly that life's limpid stream had nearly reached the great rapids of the turbulent waters of death, and that soon, yea, very soon, we must bid farewell to our father upon earth to meet no more.

O, those are sad partings! But not so sad as to say farewell forever. Thank God, we did not use a term which implies so much. We only said: "Farewell, till we meet in heaven." And now while we, with hearts filled to overflowing with grief and sorrow, mourn his loss to us here, we would not fail to consider that our loss is his eternal and everlasting gain; for well are we convinced that after braving death's sullen battle, and passing triumphantly victorious over the dark and cheerless valley, he has winged his way to that gloriously illuminated city in the spirit land! We praise God's holy name for the blessed assurance of another sacred tie in heaven. O, happy thought, that our father is in heaven! O, ye speaking orbs! Is it possible that our parent is in your midst? O, yes! "He fought a good fight, he kept the faith," and now he is roving the elysium fields of glory. Our father was a pious Christian from his youth. Having been blessed with Christ-following parents, the glorious principles of Christianity were instilled into his tender heart, and there retained till the messenger from the glory-land summoned him to that celestial spot to enjoy the sweet realms of bliss, where sad farewells are never spoken, and the parting hand never extended.

And now, as the balmy breezes glide silently and serenely by, I hear its murmuring tones saying:

"Come, ye disconsolate, where'er you languish,
Come to the throne of God, fervently kneel;
Here bring your wounded hearts, here tell your anguish;
Earth has no sorrow that Heaven cannot heal."

While we thus kneel at the shrine of Omnipotence with heavy hearts, there is a train of light reaching from us to the brilliant and glorious galaxy where repose the people of aerial dreams, and where fair illusions forever transport to the soul refreshing beams of glory.

CLARENCE A. P.

DIED, on the eighth of December, 1872, at her home near Plaquemine, Louisiana, Mrs. MARY A. GAY, wife of Andrew H. Gay, and daughter of Mrs. A. M. Dickinson, of Iberville parish.

The writer makes this sad announcement to the readers of your paper (many of whom will recognize the circle of relationship) with emotions too oppressive to enable him at this time to make a complete delineation of her character. The mind dwells upon the loss; the sorrow weighs heavily upon the current of expression. We asked a friend who knew Mary Gay, as did the writer, from infancy, to prepare an obituary. She gave her estimate in one word: "She was the loveliest character I ever knew." She was a Christian from the earliest years of her life, and bloomed, as a flower blooms, in the garden of the Lord, pouring all around her presence the perfume of piety, the sweetness of Christian love. We never knew any transition state with her. As a child she worshiped God, sang his praises and prayed to him, and kept his commandments with a joyous spirit. As a woman she had the child's simple piety, with only the addition of constantly acquired knowledge, and the experience of the deeper emotions which belong to mature age. Among the companions of her earlier life she was the playmate and the school-girl whom all loved. As a sister she twined her arms, and drew the cords of gentlest and sweetest affection around her only brother; as a daughter the dearest comfort a mother could have; as a wife and mother the center and source of a domestic happiness rarely seen—a disciple of the Master. She, like her namesake, sat at Jesus' feet, and loved to walk (in pastures green and sweet to her) in the way of God's commandments, discharging all duties, public and private, of Sunday school teacher and member of the church as the pleasure of her life.

The lesson of her life is this: She was trained by her mother as a lamb of Jesus' fold, and the Good Shepherd kept her, never to wander, and now has taken her to the fold of his eternal love.

Hers was a happy life. Some common trials she had, as all have here on earth, but no sorrow marred her happiness. If ever a cloud of anxiety crossed her vision, her spirit was always bathed in the radiance of hope and joy. God gave to her this beautiful and happy life. He has now secured its perpetuity by translation to the home where the future is forever beyond the reach of change.

MRS. SARAH C. ELLIOTT, consort of George R. Elliott, and daughter of Peter and Catherine Summy, was born in Green county, Alabama, September 5, 1821, and departed this life, at her home in Hale county, Alabama, October 15, 1872, aged fifty-one years, one month and ten days.

Sister Elliott professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in her twenty-first year, at Havana, Alabama, under the ministry of Rev. Thomas Scales, and lived a consistent member of the same until her death. She told her husband, but a short time before her decease, that it had been a constant habit with her to pray in secret three times each day for the last twenty-six years; which practice accounts for that beautiful character which adorned her life as a wife, a mother and a Christian. By thus daily communing with God in prayer she lived in an atmosphere of quietness, gentleness, peace and love; and all her children, thirteen in number, growing up and living in the presence of so beautiful an example of Christian purity. No wonder they all soon fell into their mother's way of living unto God, and loving each other. Some of them preceded her to the better land, and those that remain are on their way minding the same things and following the same rule.

Blessed is the pious house
Where zeal and friendship meet;
Their songs of praise, their mingled vows
Make their communion sweet.

Sister Elliott's last illness was protracted and painful; but meekly, patiently she bore it all, never complaining, never murmuring; desiring to get well and live, it is true, but willing and ready, at any time, to depart and be with Christ.

I saw her frequently during her sickness, and always found her cheerful, happy, sometimes joyous, and strong in faith and hope.

Once, while the chilling waves of death were lashing her frail bark, her exultant spirit rose superior to the swellings of Jordan, and in words bathed in the spirit of heaven she encouraged husband, children, friends, all to be steadfast, and not to be led off by the fashions and follies of a sinful world, until she could talk no more. And thus she lingered on the verge of heaven till the fifteenth of October, 1872, when she calmly slept in Jesus.

G. HAWKINS.

MISS LIZZIE V. POWELL was the daughter of Edward U. and S. P. Powell, and died of malignant fever, at her mother's residence near Rocky Spring, Mississippi, November 4, 1872. Several years ago, just as she was blooming into womanhood, in keeping with her early training, she assumed her baptismal vows and entered into covenant union with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and continued to "witness a good confession", until death. Lizzie was comely in person, remarkably amiable in disposition, polished in manners, well educated and, above all, adorned with all the graces of a pure Christianity. For some years she had been successfully engaged in teaching, and we allowed ourselves to hope that she had just entered upon a long career of usefulness to the church and country, when the Good Shepherd saw it best to take her into his heavenly fold. If the great object of our probation on earth is to acquire, through the riches of divine grace, a preparation for heaven, then, from the most satisfactory evidence, we believe Lizzie fully attained that object. She met death with great composure and resignation, assuring her mother, in reply to questions asked her, that she loved the Savior, and felt that she put her whole trust in him. The family and church wept much in giving up this beloved youthful disciple, but it was meet that she should reunite with her sainted father, who preceded her to paradise less than a year.

J. G. JONES.

MRS. MARY A. CHARLTON, wife of P. W. Charlton, was born in Giles county, Tennessee, July 21, 1817, and died near Clinton, Mississippi, November 18, 1872, in her fifty-sixth year. She was married to Mr. Charlton on the ninth day of June, 1836; made a public profession of religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1846, at Clinton.

The deceased left a noble example in all the relations she sustained in life—a loving, obedient child, an ever-affectionate and devoted wife and mother, a confiding friend, a pure Christian, and unsurpassed in all that constitutes a neighbor.

Her gentle spirit was shortened by years of suffering, which she bore with joyful patience, and when she felt the cold finger of Death fastening on her frail tenement, with the calm eye of faith she commended her spirit, in a clear voice, to her Maker and Savior.

She has been transferred from a company of mourning relatives and friends on earth to a host of blissful spirits in heaven. As our loss is her gain, let us bow in meek submission to the will of him who is too wise to err and too good to be unkind.

A FRIEND.

BRO. THOMAS HILLEY was born in Elbert county, Georgia, June 26, 1797, and died at his residence in Claiborne parish, Louisiana, September 20, 1872. He connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1808, in which he remained a consistent member until the day of his death. Bro. Hilley was seldom, if ever, absent from the church when it was in his power to attend. During his sickness he often spoke of the great privation it was to him in not being able to attend church. He was among the kindest of husbands, always interested in the temporal and spiritual welfare of his children; a worthy citizen and a true friend, and, above all, a firm and decided Christian. He has left an aged companion, with whom he lived happily for more than forty years, to mourn her great loss; yet her loss, no doubt, is his eternal gain. He has left a bright testimony behind that he has gone to rest. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. Blessed be the name of the Lord. J. L. W.

A CORRESPONDENT at Rome writes: "The excavations in the 'Via Sacra' have brought to light the shops mentioned by Ovid, between the Arch of Titus and the Meta Sudans, where the gladiators used to wash their wounds. The Italian government has brought more Roman antiquities to light in a year than the Popes have done in a century. Even the relics of Roman glory were considered dangerous, as they were calculated to set the people thinking what a contrast these suggested between the greatness of their ancestors and the degeneracy of the Romans under the debasing influence of the papal government and church.

1873.—NUNC DIMITTIS.

BY LILY E. BARR.

O true companion! O sweet year of grace!
Whose memory, like a perfume, fills my heart;
Show me once more thy strong and steadfast face,
And then thou mayst depart.

I set my window free that I might catch
Thy earliest smile upon my chamber door;
And now with strengthened heart and eyes I watch
Thy going from my door.

Never I knew thee either "Young" and "New"—
A grave, strong friend that looked into my eyes;
And lo! my duties into blessings grew,
A constant sweet surprise.

We were no strangers. Where the palm trees bend,
And tropic woods with color glow like flame,
I knew thee well. Thou art a dear old friend,
Whatever be thy name.

And now if thou must go I cannot weep;
Thou wilt return with gifts and added grace—
Return so quick that when I wake from sleep
I shall behold thy face.

Yet stay one moment—I have wronged thee much;
I do accuse my heart, my deeds condemn;
Yet suffer me with loving hand to touch
Thy glittering raiment hem.

For fair art thou; nor gray, nor weak of sight,
Nor staggering to thy rest among the dead;
But a crowned king, whose title is in right
Of work accomplished.

Yet have I wronged thee—loitering 'mid the flowers,
Or working with a cold, reluctant heart,
Or idly dreaming out the precious hours—
Forgive me ere we part!

"Part?" Ah! never, never! Still the same
Unfading face and god-like strength I see;
For I do know thee by thy real name—
Thou art Eternity.

CHUROH OF THE MATERIALISTS.

It is a singular fact that while every class of believers associate to maintain and extend their faith, the same is virtually true of disbelievers. It is yet more singular, that while Churches of Christ, the Spiritual Redeemer, are charged with bigotry and intolerance, with exclusiveness and ostracism, the false charge is true in those who most urge it. "The greatest thief cries thief first," is an adage which teaches two important lessons—first, that a wrong spirit is most realized, and hence most suspected in others by those who have most to say about it; and second, that what is in the heart is most sure to come to the lip.

The extreme Materialists of modern days—those who believe not only in the idea of stellar and planetary development by spontaneous mechanical forces, but also in the doctrine of spontaneous generation without an original germ and in gradual development as the source of all vegetable and animal life—these extreme Materialists have a virtual association and affiliation which must be designated a church; they have a creed which, though unwritten, is definite in character; and they exercise the authority to receive and exclude according as their "shibboleth" can or cannot be pronounced. Their Articles of Faith are a sort of parody on those generally received by the Churches of Christ. They aver: We believe in no God but the ancient Persian Fire; we accept no Revelation but each man's own imagination; we trust in no Redeemer, for man has no soul to save; we observe no Sabbath, for man's work is like that of gravity and vegetable growth; we engage in no worship, for there is no intelligent Deity to whom prayer can be addressed; and we live for nothing but material accumulation, for there is no future world. Into the church having this creed the most stringent measures have been employed to compel every man who aspires to reputation as a man of science. It was attempted with Faraday in England, and it is now asserting itself as a new popedom in our country. It has been seeking to gain control over the National Academy of Science established by the United States Congress some few years since. The following remarks of Prof. Agassiz at the late meeting at Cambridge call attention to its galling yoke:

PROF. AGASSIZ'S POSITION AS TO THE DEVELOPMENT THEORY.

Thursday's session closed with a broadside delivered by Prof. Agassiz at the development theory, and a warm defense of his position as a scientist. His subject was announced as "Critical Remarks about Scientific Views entertained upon Theoretical grounds." The professor at the outset promised to be brief, and observed his promise; but he left no doubt upon the minds of any one as to his position. As I grow older in the ranks of science, said the professor, I feel more and more the danger of stretching inferences from a few observations to a wide field. I see that the younger generation among naturalists are at this moment falling into the mistake of making assertions and presenting views as scientific principles which are not even based upon real observations. I think it is time that some positive remonstrance be made against that tendency. The manner in which the evolution theory in zoology is treated would lead those who are not special zoologists to suppose that observations have been made, by which it can be inferred that there is in nature such a thing as change among organized beings actually taking place. There is no such thing on record. It is shifting the ground from one field of observation to another to make this statement, and when the assertions go so far as to exclude from the domain of science those who will not be dragged into this mire of mere assertion, then it is time to protest. He thought it was intolerant to say that he was not on scientific grounds because he was not falling into the path which was occupied by those who maintain that all organized beings have been derived from a few original progenitors. Other supporters of the transmutation doctrine assume that they can demonstrate the changes to have taken place by showing certain degrees of resemblance; but what they never touch is the quality and condition of those few first progenitors from which they were evolved. They assume that they contained all that is necessary to evolve what exists now. That is begging the question at the outset; for if these first prototypes contained the principle of evolution, we should know something about them from observation, and it should be shown that there are such organized beings as are capable of evolution. I ask, Whence came these properties? If this power and capacity of change is not inherent to the first progenitors, then I ask, Whence came the impulses by which those progenitors which have not this power of change in themselves, acquire it? What is the power by which they are started in directions which are not determined by their primitive nature? From the total silence of the supporters of the transmutation theory on these and other points, he did not think it worth while to take the slightest notice of this doctrine of evolution in his scientific considerations. He acknowledged what the evolutionists had done incidentally in scientific research; none had done more than Mr. Darwin. He believed he had been injured wofully by his adherents. He was a far better man than most of his school made him.

Prof. Agassiz was listened to with attention, but his position was not publicly assailed.

Those who have listened to and read for some years past the public lectures of Prof. Agassiz must have observed how repeatedly he has asserted that the order of plant and animal development in the geological ages indicate the opposite of successive and spontaneous generation and evolution, and that the sudden breaks, the wide leaps and the frequent retrogrades in the succession of organisms compel belief in the interposition of an intelligent and designing Creator. For this honesty of utterance there has been an effort to read out of the party this eminent scientist. With such men as Guyot and Henry, it seems, as with Faraday, to appear duty to separate the fields of physical science and of religious faith. Perhaps it is well that a man of less decided religious conviction should throw down the gauntlet.—W., in New York Observer.

DR. LIVINGSTONE DESORIBED.

Mr. Stanley, in his newly published work, How I Found Dr. Livingstone, gives a graphic and pleasant description of the great missionary explorer. He says: "I lived with Dr. Livingstone from November 10, 1871, to March 14, 1872; witnessed his conduct in the camp and on the march, and my feelings for him are those of unqualified admiration. He is about sixty years old, though after he was restored to health he appeared more like a man who had not passed his fiftieth year. His hair has a brownish color yet, but is here and there streaked with gray lines over the temples; his beard and mustache are very gray. His eyes, which are hazel, are remarkably bright; he has a sight keen as a hawk's. His teeth alone indicate the weakness of age; the hard fare of Lunda has made havoc in their lines. His form, which soon assumed a stoutish appearance, is a little over the ordinary height, with the slightest possible bow in the shoulders. When walking, he has a firm but heavy tread, like that of an overworked or fatigued man. He is accustomed to wear a naval cap with a semi-circular peak, by which he has been identified throughout Africa. His dress, when first I saw him, exhibited traces of patching and repairing, but was scrupulously clean.

"I was led to believe that Livingstone possessed a spleuetic, misanthropic temper. Some have said that he is garrulous, that he is demented; that he has utterly changed from the David Livingstone whom people knew as the reverend missionary; that he takes no notes or observations but such as those which no other person could read but himself; and it was reported, before I proceeded to Central Africa, that he was married to an African princess. I respectfully beg to differ with all and each of the above statements. During the four months I was with him, I noticed him every evening making most careful notes; and a large tin box that he has with him contains numbers of field note-books, the contents of which, I dare say, will see light some time. His maps, also, evince great care and industry. As to the report of his African marriage, it is unnecessary to say more than that it is untrue, and it is utterly beneath a gentleman even to hint at such a thing in connection with the name of Livingstone.

"In Livingstone I have seen many amiable traits. His gentleness never forsakes him; his hopefulness never deserts him. No harassing anxieties, distraction of mind, long separation from home and kindred, can make him complain. He thinks 'all will come out right at last;' he has such faith in the goodness of Providence.

"There is a good-natured abandon about Livingstone which was not lost on me. Whenever he began to laugh, there was a contagion about it that compelled me to imitate him. * * * If he told a story, he related it in such a way as to convince one of its truthfulness; his face was so lit up by the sly fun it contained, that I was sure the story was worth relating, and worth listening to.

"The wan features which had shocked me at first meeting, the heavy step which told of age and hard travel, the gray beard and bowed shoulders, belied the man. Underneath that well-worn exterior lay an endless fund of high spirits and inexhaustible humor; that rugged frame of his inclosed a young and most exuberant soul. * * * Another thing which specially attracted my attention was his wonderfully retentive memory. * * *

"The study of Dr. Livingstone would not be complete if we did not take the religious side of his character into consideration. His religion is not of the theoretical kind, but it is a constant, earnest, sincere practice. It is neither demonstrative nor loud, but manifests itself in a quiet, practical way, and is always at work. It is not aggressive, which sometimes is troublesome, if not impertinent. In him, religion exhibits its loveliest features; it governs his conduct not only toward his servants, but toward the natives, the bigoted Mohammedans, and all who come in contact with him. Without it, Livingstone, with his ardent temperament, his enthusiasm, his high spirit and courage, must have become uncompanionable, and a hard master. Religion has tamed him, and made him a Christian gentleman; the crude and willful have been refined and subdued; religion has made him the most companionable of men and indulgent of masters—a man whose society is pleasurable to a degree."

ENGLISH MOTHERS.

It is a marked feature of social life in England, and certainly one of its especial charms, that mothers and daughters are so uniformly seen together at home. Not only is the mother the first lady to whom you are introduced at the house where you visit, but mistress of the ceremonies throughout; not only does she preside at the dinner-table, but in the evening party she sits as queen. Whatever may be your first impressions of such an arrangement—if it happens that your sympathies are with the younger ladies—you will very soon learn to think that the mother's absence would be very sincerely regretted by the daughters. As a picture, all must admit the arrangement to be perfect. The portly form and matronly dignity of the mother are an exquisite foil to the youthful beauty and maiden coyness of the daughters. And you will find nothing to mar, but everything to enhance the interest of the picture. The mother's presence never seems to operate as an unwelcome restraint.

Between her and the daughters you will mark the most joyous, playful, loving freedom, without the sacrifices of a little of parental dignity and authority on the one hand, or of sweet and graceful filial duty on the other. It may be said of English families generally, that these two things are eminently characteristic; namely, uniform parental authority, and the most charming freedom of intercourse between parents and their children.

A FEMALE CIRCUS CLOWN is the latest development of woman's intellectual supremacy in England. Who says that "woman's sphere" is not unlarging?

THE nerve which never relaxes, the eye which never blanches, the thought which never wanders—these are the masters of victory.

THE power of honesty is so great that we love it even in an enemy.

NOTHING is more worthy of a great and brave man than clemency.

OURIOUS VICISSITUDES.

Pope's skull, according to the secretary of an archæological society, had a narrow escape of becoming, some years ago, a chief feature of some collection of curiosities. Notabilities, when dead, seem especially liable to have their mortal remains, or part of them, undergo strange vicissitudes. The heel-bone of Edward the Fourth, about a year since, was sold for 10s. 6d.; while not much more remotely a gentleman wrote in jubilation that he had discovered the tomb of King Stephen, carrying off the leg bones as a memento. The heart of the First Napoleon had a narrow escape of disappearing forever, elsewhere than in the tomb. It is recorded that when he died at St. Helena his heart was extracted for preservation. The English doctor who had charge of it placed it in a silver basin containing water, and leaving tapers burning beside it retired to rest. Sleep, however, visited him not, and suddenly, breaking the silence, he heard first a rustling, then a plunge in the water of the basin, then a fall with a rebound on the floor, all in quick succession. Springing from his couch, the doctor saw an enormous rat dragging Bonaparte's heart to its hole; in a few moments more it would have formed a meal for rat-dom. Byron's heart was not sent to England with his body; the Greeks begged it, and inclosed it in a silver case. Some four years later a sallying party, carrying the relic, escaped from Missolonghi, then besieged by the Turks, and after much sacrifice of life cut their way through the opposing lines. The heart of the poet was, however, less in crossing the marshes, and no notice of its recovery is on record. That of another poet, namely, Shelley, also was saved from becoming veritable ashes only by friendly intervention.

The Right Way of Correcting Mistakes.

A story is told of a prominent man who lived in Detroit forty years ago, and who at that time owned more steamboat stock than any other man in the western country, besides other wealth to a large amount. He had just completed a splendid new warehouse at Buffalo, and wanting a suitable clerk to take charge of it, he advertised for one in the papers. The next morning, early, a candidate for the position presented himself, a rather flashy young man in appearance, when the following conversation occurred:

"Young man, when you make a mistake in any of your books, how do you correct it?"

The young man explained in a very profuse manner, how he should proceed to make it all right.

"A good way, no doubt, to do it," replied the old gentleman, "but I shan't want you."

Very soon another aspirant put in an appearance. A similar question was asked him, and in a long and eloquent manner he pointed out the remedy in all such cases. All the reply was: "Young man, I shan't want you."

Some three or four others dropped in during the day, and to each one the same question was put, and they all had some smart way of rectifying mistakes in their books. The old gentleman was entirely ignorant himself of the art of book-keeping, but he had wisdom in all things, which is more than a match for learning. Just at the close of the day a plainly dressed man with a bright eye and a brisk step called for the situation.

"Take a seat, sir," said the old gentleman, "I want to ask you just one question. When you make a false entry on your books, how do you go to work to correct it?"

Turning upon the questioner a cold, sharp look, the young man replied: "I don't make that kind of mistakes, sir."

"Ah! my dear sir, you are just the man I have been looking for all day," and in a few moments the man who corrected his blunders by not making them, was installed in the office.—Norwich Bulletin.

IT IS VERY SAD for a man to make himself servant to a thing; his manhood all taken out of him by the hydraulic pressure of excessive business. I should not like to be merely a great doctor, a great lawyer, a great minister, a great politician; I should like to be also something of a man.—Theodore Parker.

"I RESORT to wine to stimulate my wits," said a young spendthrift to an old one.

"Ah," replied the veteran, "that is the way I began; but now I have to resort to my wits to get my wine."

A COUNSEL being questioned by a judge for whom he was concerned, replied: "I am—concerned for the plaintiff, my lord; but I'm employed by the defendant."

THE despondent-looking man who suddenly started on seeing new apples for sale, and cried, "Now my children shall have bread," was a doctor.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE Episcopal Bishop of Nebraska has built thirty-five churches in six years.

PECATONICA, ILLINOIS, has decided to amalgamate its six churches of divers belief into one of broader faith and stronger life.

AN ENGLISH PAPER notices the murder of the Rev. Mr. McChesney, an American missionary in China, by a band of pirates.

THE Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia propose to raise during the coming year $50,000 for the special work of the organization.

REV. DR. C. H. FOWLER, of the Centenary Methodist church of Chicago has been elected by the trustees of the Northern University at Evanston president of that institution in place of Dr. Havens, resigned. It is understood that Dr. Fowler will accept.

IT WAS SAID, in April last, of Vienna, in Austria: "In this large city, with a million of nominal Christians and nearly thirty thousand Protestants, there is no Sunday school." Since then, says the London Sunday School Teacher, one such school has been commenced, with fourteen scholars, and its numbers have already increased to twenty. Is there any danger of that Sunday school diminishing household religion in Austria?

THE Protestant population of Bohemia and Moravia, about one in fifty, is mainly rural, Kolin and Chazlan being the only towns, except Prague, where there are Reformed churches, and these have but recently been opened. This fact goes to prove that the Protestant movement in these countries is the springing to life of germs that have remained from the old Protestantism, rather than a new importation. Had it been the latter, the movement would have manifested itself first in the great centers of thought. An entire emancipation from State control, and the organizing of churches in the centers of population seem now necessary to the advance of Protestantism in Bohemia.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC HOSPICE.—On Lake George, near the southern point, the traveler finds opening to his left, one of the most exquisite scenes of enchanting beauty and loveliness, this little world can present. In full view of this, Mr. O'Conor, the celebrated lawyer in New York, who preferred his legal practice to the presidency, has erected a beautiful hospice. It contains fourteen rooms, and will accommodate twenty-four priests. Thither that number may resort, and for a couple of weeks rusticate. No expense attends this luxury, and the servants of the Pope in this case, certainly, have something to boast of above any parties of the clergy of the Protestant church. Such crumbs of comfort of necessity are confined to the few.

MR. HEPWORTH'S church of the Disciples, New York, is Congregational in government—orthodox in sentiment—but independent. It is proposed to put the new enterprise into fellowship with the evangelical sects. A council has been summoned to meet on the fourth of December, to examine and install the pastor in his new position. The services will be held in the brick church on Murray Hill, and the sermon preached by Rev. Dr. Storrs. The council will be a "mixed one," composed of several denominations. The order of deaconesses is to be introduced into the church. The new tabernacle will be dedicated in January, when Rev. Henry Ward Beecher will preach the sermon. The structure is a queer looking affair, built of wood, brick and iron—in style, a cross between a circus and a gas-house.

THE death of M. Vallette, chaplain to the late Duchesse D'Orleans, occurred on Sunday, the twentieth of October, the day on which his friend, Dr. Merle D'Aubigne, retired to rest in the evening, not again to awaken in this world. The funeral service of Pastour Vallette was celebrated in the Church des Billettes at Paris on the Tuesday following, and was attended by a great crowd, assembled to do honor to a man who had so long been the ornament of the English Protestant Church by his fidelity to the faith and his works of charity. At the age of eighteen he became tutor in a distinguished family at Geneva, and at the same time commenced his studies in theology, just when the great revival was exciting attention. At the age of twenty-seven he undertook a mission to Italy, and afterward became the successor of M. Adolph Monod at Naples, where he remained till 1841, when he was called to Paris—a post which he never quitted till his death, after his thirtieth anniversary. All the leading Protestant ministers of Paris assisted in doing homage to his memory either at the temple or the cemetery.

METHODISM IN CANADA.—The joint committees of the Canada Wesleyan Conference and the Wesleyan Conference of Eastern British America have been negotiating a union, in Montreal, on the following plan: The Wesleyan Conference will divide into three Annual Conferences, and the Eastern into two, somewhat as follows: The Ontario Conference to embrace the Toronto, Bradford, Barrie, Owen Sound, Whitby, Cobourg, Peterboro and Belleville districts. The Huron Conference to consist of the Hamilton, Niagara, Brantford, London, Chatham, Sarnia, Guelph and Goderich districts. The St. Lawrence Conference to embrace the Montreal, Quebec, Stanstead, Brockville, Ottawa, Pembroke, Perth and Kingston districts. The Nova Scotia Conference and the Conference of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island will probably be constituted hereafter. The constitution is not clearly sketched, but it would seem that the Annual Conferences relegate all legislation to a delegated General Conference to be held once in four years. Lay delegation will probably be adopted in both Annual and General Conferences. This union, if completed, will give great strength to Methodism in Canada. The two bodies named above have an aggregate of about six hundred and fifty ministers, eighty-nine thousand members in full connection, and four thousand five hundred members on trial.

THE wonderful hold of Juggernaut upon the Hindoo race, according to Mr. Hunter, the author of "Orissa," is due to the fact that he is the god of the people. The apostles of the god preach everywhere throughout India the sacrament of the Holy Food, which brings even to the lowest castes the assurance that before the Lord of the world all are equal, and that food once offered to the god cannot become polluted. Mr. Hunter has even seen a Puri priest receiving the sacred rice from a Christian hand. That this liberty and equality is more theoretical than practical is proven by the fact that now, in direct violation of the spirit of reformed Vishnuvism, the gates of the temple are closed against the low caste population. Another source of Juggernaut's power is the catholicity of his worship, embracing all forms of Indian faith; so that the Hindoo, of whatever belief, can find his favorite deity honored in some form within the sacred temple. Of the indecencies and licentiousness with which this worship has been charged Mr. Hunter says but little. The sacred rites are secret, and none but a Hindoo can pronounce accurately concerning them; but all, both educated and uneducated, either deplore the introduction of obscenities, whether carved in the walls of their temples or exhibited in the rites celebrated within, or else spiritualize them into solemn mysteries. The pilgrims, as a class, are decent and well-behaved. They are mainly women, not more than ten per cent. being men; and one native writer gives the proportion of male devotees as even less than three per cent. This remarkable disparity of numbers is mainly the result of the ignorance and credulity of Hindoo women, who are visited by the pilgrim hunters, about three thousand of whom, in the employ of the priests, ransack every province in search of victims. These pilgrim guides, entering small villages, easily persuade and alarm the old men and women, while the able-bodied workers are busy in their fields; and the novelty of the long journey, which promises such a pleasing variety in an Indian woman's aimless and secluded life, makes this call of duty a welcome sound to her ears. The larger part of their journey is usually performed by rail, though they generally walk from three to six hundred miles. The weaker women perish by the way, and by the time the sacred city is reached nine out of ten of a pilgrim band are suffering cruelly from lameness. After being despoiled by priests and rapacious landlords, the wretched sufferers, without means or strength, attempt the homeward journey. It is then that the horrors of the pilgrimage are most manifest. A native official calculates that ten thousand die annually, aside from the ordinary death rate. Bishop Wilson placed the numbers as high as fifty thousand. The Asiatic cholera, also, which is generated from filth and squalor preceeding yearly from Puri, makes its way with greater or less force across India into Europe or America. The British government can only feebly devise sanitary measures to reduce the loss of life; and these sanitary precautions always run counter to the prejudices of the natives. In view of this fearful mortality, and of the danger to other nations from the outbreaks of cholera, Mr. Hunter argues that Europe has a right to demand from the Indian government the prevention of this yearly slaughter; though how this can be done without a prohibition of the pilgrimage is not evident, and such a prohibition would naturally be regarded by the Hindoos as bitter wrong on the part of the British government.—Independent.

With this number we begin a new volume. The past year has not been without encouragement. The new volume begins with good prospects, and we trust that our circulation may continue to increase. Our paper this week is in new type, and on beautiful paper. The supplement must not be overlooked nor hastily thrown aside. Let our friends begin the year with renewed efforts to extend our subscription list.

THE LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE, Methodist Episcopal Church South, will meet at the Carondelet Street Church of this city, January 8, at nine o'clock A. M. Preachers and lay members of the Conference are requested to call at the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, where they will be directed to their homes.

Setting up the Tabernacle.

The tabernacle of the tent of the congregation was, by express command, set up on the first day of the first month. Long preparations had been made, and everything was in readiness. It might have been done on another day; but as it had to be done some time, it was well that it should be reared on the first day which opened the New Year. It was, at any rate, a religious beginning, and an event that harmonized with the birthday of the world. It was an epoch in the progress of revelation and worship, and worthy to be recalled as the years revolved. The years is by no means an arbitrary division of time. God himself has marked its limits by the movement of the earth around the sun, so that we have completeness only in the full and rounded sum of the three hundred and sixty-five days, with its fractional hours, minutes and seconds. This period embraces all the seasons, with their beautiful and refreshing vicissitudes, the seed-time and the harvest, the cold and the heat, the dry and the wet. In accordance with this wise arrangement of the seasons nearly every pursuit and business opens and closes within the twelve-month. In some respects, to have passed through one year is to have sampled all the years. The spring, summer, autumn and winter have exhibited to us in kind all that a thousand years could have done. And ordinarily human experience, within a given year, passes through those shades and variations which make up the register of a lifetime. The joys and sorrows have been mixed, the successes and misfortunes, the spiritual privileges and their improvement or neglect, the satisfaction and the dissatisfaction, have made up the common inventory. A year is not a fragment, broken off from the main body and mass; but it is perfect in itself, and contains all the attributes of the longest measures of duration.

It is a sad thing to be storing up in purpose and resolve the good actions which ought to have been performed when first thought of; but it somehow runs in our nature to celebrate the New Year by this kind of anticipation. What sort of tabernacles are we going to set up this New Year? Let us be sure that they are not castles in the air—cloud structures dazzling in the sunrise, to be dispersed ere the meridian. Our plans for happiness may rest upon no substantial foundation, the things we pursue may elude our grasp. If God is not in them will he certain to disappoint. Let us be sure that it is the Lord's tabernacle we are building, and that it is with the expectation that he will dwell in it. A better life may be the one chief thing upon which we have set our hearts. If this be not begun in God's strength, the end is not doubtful. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots?" How these attempts at a better life melt away with the trials and temptations of the year! There is bitterness and weakness in the remembrance of these failures, but let this year be noted as the beginning of better times. Set about reformation in the strength of the divine arm, and by leaning on him who is "mighty to save." Then, as Christians, there are neglected duties to be resumed. If the family altar has fallen down, or if it has never been erected, let this be a year of family prayer. Set up the tabernacle in the family on the first day of the first month, and the divine glory will shine there between the cherubim. "Are the consolations of God small with thee? Is there any secret thing?" Christ is ever knocking at the door, and if he does not reign in the heart and fill it with peace, there is fault somewhere. To be a better man at heart is the only thing worth aiming at. A bare escape from spiritual shipwreck is put down in the log-book for the past year. There is occasion for alarm and for a deeper work of grace in the soul. To set up the tabernacle in the soul, to have the holy of holies within, and the sacred presence ever beaming there, is a becoming purpose, and such as should glow in every devout mind."

In how many ways our readers may have signalized the beginning of the New Year we know not; but this we do know, that the wisest and best is to raise up the Lord's tabernacle. By so doing his presence will go with us, and he will give us rest. However long the pilgrimage, and however weary, the beneficent cloud will cover our heads in the day, and illuminate and guide by night. Begin the year religiously, and its autumn will come to you full of luscious fruits and golden sheaves. Let this be the first thing. This was the prominent lesson intended by the command: "In the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation." Before any other work, and before any other enterprise, is the salvation of the soul and the service of him who has given us all things. At any other time let us build our own houses and enlarge our possessions, but let us raise up the tabernacle of God first. Thus only shall we secure a right beginning for another year, and go forth to its untried experience with the comforting assurance that God will be "our refuge and strength, and a very present help in trouble." "A happy New Year" will be more than an idle salutation—it will be as an inspired prediction—if it comes to hearts thus consecrated to the work and glory of Christ.

North Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: You will see the statistics, etc., of our young Conference, published by Dr. Summers, who was on the spot taking notes. As you did not seem to have a representative there it may not be unacceptable to give you a brief sketch of the session.

And first you would be struck with the absence of old men, but few of the body being past the meridian. Bro. A. S. Driskill is an exception to the rule, having been for the past fifty years in the ministry of the Tennessee Conference. By the partition of territory he fell on the Alabama side, and was appointed this year to preach us a semi-centennial sermon, which I regretted my inability to hear, as I was compelled to leave the Conference before its close. The Rev. Finch P. Scruggs is another valuable old man, polished and elegant in style, but warm with gospel fervor. Our own presiding elder, Daniel Duncan, has completed his threescore and ten, but his leaf is yet green and unwithered, so that he seems rather to belong to the class of young men.

The Rev. Benito B. Ross, who was received by transfer from South Alabama, and stationed at Huntsville, was formerly a North Alabamian, and took his rise in old LaGrange College. He referred to Bro. Driskill as his spiritual father, and was gladly welcomed to his old home. Your correspondent, also guided by that instinct which often leads human beings back to their starting point after an absence of many years, was readmitted to the church of his origin, and appointed to labor amid the scenes of his youth and of his early religious associations.

Fourteen young men were admitted on trial, and the work had expanded sufficiently to employ them. One new district and several new circuits and stations were formed. The Huntsville, Athens and Tuskaloosa female colleges were all reported to be in a flourishing condition, but the Conference refused to commit itself to any special college for the education of young men. The lamentable failures at Florence and Auburn have driven public sentiment to the necessity of supporting existing schools, instead of attempting to build new ones. At the same time, private enterprises having a quasi relation to the church are received with favor, and there are many who would be willing to merge all our public church schools into one central institution, leaving the rest to local and individual energy.

In regard to preaching, Bishop Doggett, who was making his first appearances before our Conference, unquestionably afforded us an example of pulpit eloquence worthy of all imitation. His sermon on Sunday morning, on the Mediatorial Reign of Christ as Supplementary to the Eternal Kingdom of God, was instinct with all the truth and power of the gospel. It has ever since been ringing in my ears, like some great poem read at a single sitting, and leaving the impression that you will never hear its like again. It was worthy to be compared with Dr. Chalmers' celebrated Astronomical Discourses, of which Hugh Miller said that they constitute a great epic without the faculty of verse.

On the following Sunday the Bishop dedicated the new church at Birmingham, delivering a sermon inferior only to his own at Tuskaloosa, in unity and unction, but fully equal to an occasion so interesting as the establishment of a new church in a new and rapidly-growing city. The Bishop has gone on his useful way to south Alabama, where he will doubtless leave the savor of the gospel in every place which he may visit.

"Jesus, let all thy lovers shine
Illustrious as the sun,
And bright with borrowed rays divine
Their glorious circuit run."

To the Ministers and Members

OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH, WITHIN THE BOUNDS OF WHAT HAS BEEN AND NOW IS THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: Our late Conference at Brandon, by a unanimous vote, requested me to prepare for publication a history of the Mississippi Conference as it was and is now. It is no voluntary humility in me to say, that in my limited abilities as a writer in connection with my advanced age and domestic circumstances, suggests my incompetency for the successful prosecution of such an undertaking. But, while I have never asked or sought any more elevated position in the church than that of a plain traveling elder, I have never allowed myself to shrink from any responsibilities legitimately laid on me by the spontaneous behests of my compeers. Great and complicated as the task is, by the help of God, I have determined to undertake it, having commenced the day after my return from Conference. But as I will not be able to travel extensively in search of materials, I will have to collect them mainly by correspondence, except what I can glean from our published minutes and other isolated documents. I therefore affectionately request aid from all the ministers and members of the church within our Conference or elsewhere, who can furnish me with well-authenticated facts for such a history. I do not intend to encumber the volume with merely statistical matter, dry details or puerile anecdotes, but to make it a true history of the church as found in the holy and useful lives of her ministers—both local and itinerant—and her members, both male and female. In order to this I shall need information on the following subjects:

1. When and by what ministers and members was Methodism first introduced into those great centers from which it spread into all the region round about?

2. I have some knowledge of most of the traveling preachers who have, or do now, belong to the Mississippi Conference, but I shall need much more, especially as to the time and place of their birth, conversion, entrance into the ministry, usefulness, etc.

3. Of the local preachers I know less; but such a valuable class of ministers must be well represented in the book. I shall want correct information of such pioneer local preachers as Newit Vick; the Fords, of Pearl river; the patriarch Blackburn; the father of Dr. Armstrong; I. Blackburn and —— Fletcher, east of Pearl river; —— French, of Clarke county, Alabama, etc.

4. I shall also want reliable information of a large number of leading Methodist families who have been conspicuous for personal piety and usefulness; such as the Godfreys and McRaes, of Chickasawha; the Carrs of Covington county, Mississippi—the Regans, Rawles, Lenoirs etc.; of Pearl river; the Warners and Bullocks, of Bogue Chitto, etc. I merely mention these few names as a sample of what I must ask surviving relatives and friends to do. Write, brethren and sisters, in your own style, and I will prepare it for the press. Give me facts and, if need be, I will dress them up. My post-office is Port Gibson, Mississippi.

J. G. JONES.

Visit to the Alabama Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Leaving New Orleans at quarter-past five P. M., December 12, on the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad, I spent the night quite comfortably in one of Pullman's sleeping cars, and waked up next morning to find myself within a few miles of Montgomery, Alabama. There being but one passenger train per day thence to Eufaula, viz.: at five P. M., time was afforded for a brief survey of this center of intelligence and trade. Notwithstanding the embarrassments under which Montgomery, in common with her sister cities of the South, has suffered, there are abundant evidences of a vigorous and thriving trade. The busy aspect of her streets, her large and well-filled stores, containing extensive and attractive assortments of staple and fancy merchandise, indicate a growing demand not only for the necessaries, but also for the luxuries of life, the latter being well represented in the classes of goods displayed. In walking leisurely through her streets, and observing the apparent condition of things, a thoughtful person will naturally ask himself if this be Montgomery under the depressing effects of floods and caterpillar in much of the country tributary to her trade, and the more disheartening embarrassments of unwise and oppressive legislation, what may she be when the country recovers from these calamities, when the contiguous coal mines and manufactories are developed, and when judicious and economical legislation shall protect her industries.

The road connecting Eufaula, and which has been recently completed, extends through some fifty miles of productive prairie lands, which, passing through, as we did, in the night, we could only observe by moonlight sufficiently to see, from the breadth of its fields, the number and size of its villas and cotton gins, and the piles of cotton bales at the depots, that it was an important part of the productive wealth of the State. We arrived at Eufaula at ten P. M., where a hospitable reception awaited us, and found that the business of the Conference was progressing smoothly, and without the undue haste which so often renders legislation incomplete and defective. Bishop Doggett, though anxious to close the labors of his episcopal tour and return home, gave ample time to thoroughly investigate every subject brought before them. We feel justified in saying that, for the portion of the session at which it was our pleasure to be present, we have never seen the business of a Conference transacted with a more manifest consciousness of its solemn importance.

The Alabama Conference is composed of a noble class of men, and the product of their labors will be a rich inheritance to coming generations. The patience and self-abnegation with which they have shared so largely and so cheerfully in the disasters and misfortunes of their people indicate a moral heroism which is truly sublime. No body of Alabamians of equal numbers has ever been assembled possessing average intelligence equal to that of the assemblage of itinerant preachers in its Conferences; no class of men can more fully appreciate the comforts and luxuries of home or the desirableness of permanent settlements eligible to social and educational advantages, while no body of representative men was ever assembled possessing so little of the wealth of this world, and so few homes for permanent occupancy, as a body of traveling preachers; and yet, fully prescient, as they are, of the hardships and privations which await them and their families, they submit themselves with cheerful obedience to the will of the church, through her representatives, to select for them the places of their residence and labors—not with reference to what may be most convenient and desirable for them, so much as to what, in their judgment, will be most for the good of others and the glory of God.

The hospitality of the citizens of Eufaula will never be forgotten, and many prayers will ascend to Heaven in behalf of the inhabitants of the beautiful little city on the Chattahoochie. During the eight years since we were there, she has grown beyond recognition. Solid blocks of buildings, stores, warehouses and elegant residences have been erected on grounds which were then vacant, and her streets are filled with wagons and carts, bringing in the produce of the surrounding country to sell or exchange for merchandise. After finishing the business of the Conference (as per account already forwarded,) on Wednesday evening, the nineteenth, we took leave of our worthy host, Judge Ellington and his kind family, to whose assiduous and thoughtful attentions we are much indebted for the pleasure of our brief sojourn and which we appreciate none the less on account of their being worthy members of the Baptist Church, and took the freight train—the only available conveyance to Montgomery—which we found besieged by preachers, who, like ourself, preferred a temporary inconvenience rather than be delayed for the passenger train the next day. The conductor protested against carrying so large a number as freights; his caboose was closely packed. He declared it unsafe to proceed with such a load. Nobody moved; all waited for some one to lead. He changed his plan of attack; said he would cut loose the caboose and leave it. This was effectual, and the crowd began to relax and find their way into a freight car, which was soon filled, mostly with those on the standing committee; but some were fortunate enough to have trunks and valises, with which seats were improvised. We were soon moving. We found our conductor a clever and attentive officer, and came to the conclusion that he was right, and thus spent most of the night, which was dark and rainy; but pleasant company beguiled the temporary inconvenience, and the anticipation of hardship (as is often the case) was never realized. A certificate of our having passed over the roads and paying full fare was placed in our hands by the secretaries of the Conference, which the Montgomery and Eufaula road kindly respected, passing us free on return. The conductor on the Mobile and Montgomery road, however, had instructions not to respect them. Of course, such instructions could not be given without some knowledge or expectation that such certificates would be issued. Upon what authority they were issued, I am not advised. I certainly should never have asked any favors of the company, nor should I have accepted under any other supposition than that the proposition came from them. It has been customary for railroads to encourage the selection of places for holding conventions for various purposes, which must, necessarily, attract passengers over their roads, by making concessions of half the fare. This has been done for fairs, for political conventions and, in some instances, for horse races; and we naturally inferred that the arrangement had been made in view of the usual courtesy, and to encourage the selection of such places, when, otherwise desirable, as would give increased patronage to their road. But in this, it appears, we were mistaken. "Positive orders not to respect the certificates of the secretary." This was in striking contrast with the conduct of the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company last year, which had return tickets issued to all in attendance at the Mississippi Conference, and requested a list of the names of all the members, that they might issue to them half-fare tickets, good for one year. Some years ago I was appointed a committee of one to return the thanks of the Louisiana Conference to the late lamented William G. Hewes, president of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western railroad, for free tickets to thirty-five ministers to go and return over the entire length of the road to attend the session of the Conference at Franklin. The reply of Mr. Hewes so impressed me that after returning home I wrote it down. He said among other things: "We are the obliged parties, not you. It is a small return for the services which your body renders to the public, and our corporation is interested in these services, as its prosperity depends to a great extent on the morality and intelligence of the people upon whom we rely for patronage." Such were the views of this noble-minded man, though regarded as a Roman Catholic, and such are the views and feelings under which we should consent to accept favors from roads, and should promptly decline them if they come as a charity. If people become more moral, enterprising, industrious and intelligent, and, consequently more wealthy, as the result of the gospel, and in the opinion of railroad companies their corporations are benefited by its effects in raising men from savage to civilized life, then I am willing to accept it; but as a charity I wish ever to decline it.

In Mobile.

Dr. McFerrin passed through Mobile, on his recent trip to Texas, and writes to the Western Methodist as follows of the churches in Mobile:

"I preached Mobile on Saturday afternoon, behind time, but nothing lost. Sunday morning I visited the St. Francis Street Sunday school, under the supervision of the Rev. William Shapard, the pastor, and Colonel William Baker, son of my old friend, Hon. H. A. Baker, deceased. The school is one of the best regulated I have seen anywhere. About three hundred children, a full supply of competent teachers, a good library, a blackboard and a most active superintendent can give nothing else than a prosperous school. Hundreds of dollars are spent annually in clothing destitute children and giving them proper outfits for the Sunday school. At the head of the infant class I found a daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Dorman, whose skill and perseverance lead the little ones right forward in the acquisition of biblical knowledge. How pleasant to see the children of prominent Methodists in the footsteps of their honored parents! I preached in the forenoon for Bro. Urquhart and had the privilege of communion. It was the time of the last quarterly meeting for the St. Francis Street charge. The work on the Mobile district has been prosperous to some extent, and the preachers in the city, Bros. Shapard, Rush and Faust, all have favor with the people. I preached for Bro. Faust, at St. Paul's, at seven o'clock P. M.; to a large and live congregation. I was glad to learn that class meetings are kept up in the Methodist churches in Mobile. They have times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

You will doubtless be pleased to hear that James O. Andrew, son—the only son—of Bishop Andrew has been licensed to preach and will be an applicant for admission next week into the Alabama Conference. He has the reputation of being a pious and intelligent young man. Thus the name of the beloved and honored Bishop is to be perpetuated.

Mobile has sad remembrances as well as bright reminiscences. Many of our beloved brethren in the ministry and laity sleep here. Among the former we call to mind the names of Powell, Hughes, Starr, Dorman, Neely and Mallitt, burning and shining lights, who closed their labors in Mobile and await the resurrection of the just.

Our Chrysostom.

The Rev. F. M. Grace, in an interesting letter to the Nashville Christian Advocate, writes as follows of Bishop Doggett's sermon at the recent session of the North Alabama Conference:

But the grand event of the Conference was, beyond question, the sermon of the Bishop on Sunday. It had been our good fortune to hear this gifted man once or twice before, at long intervals, when he was indeed surpassingly eloquent, and especially do we remember the powerful sermon addressed to the members of the Holston Conference, at Abingdon, in 1869; but perhaps he was never so perfectly successful as on the last occasion at Tuskaloosa. His theme itself was grand and awful, the eternal kingdom of God and the mediatorial reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, and their relations toward each other.—First Cor. xv. 24-28. The hymns selected—741, founded on Psalms lxxii., and 159, on the regal state of Christ—were persuasive, and were admirably rendered by the choir, with whom the vast congregation of preachers and people heartily united. The prayer was soothing, elevating and assuring. From the very first sentence of the sermon the Bishop fairly launched his theme in the limitless regions of high poetic thought, and never for a moment did he relax the tireless wing of imagination till he had reached the impregnable conclusion of the text: "For he must reign till he hath put all things under his feet." Once, indeed, staggering under the weight of a mighty conception of the grandeur of his theme, did he affectionately appeal to the prayers of his audience. The responses were deep and not inaudible from many a sympathizing heart, and then the noble preacher addressed himself again to the utterance of his great thoughts, when it did seem as if God appeared visibly in his behalf, and helped his servant to speak with more than mere human power. The audience were transported, tears and prayers gushed from a hundred faces, and the preacher gave vent to his feelings in rapturous expressions of thanksgiving and praise. Grasping his venerable brother, Dr. McFerrin, by the hand he took his seat, while the congregation expressed their gratitude and praise to God in an appropriate hymn that was spontaneously sung with triumphant echoes from every portion of the extensive edifice.

DEATH OF THE REV. G. W. D. HARRIS, D. D.—Just as we are about to send our last forms to press, says the Western Methodist, we receive intelligence of the death of the Rev. G. W. D. Harris, D. D., and of the extreme illness of his wife—the partner of his joys and sorrows through a long course of years. The Rev. H. B. Avery, of Dyersburg, Tennessee, December 9, writes: "Our venerable father in Israel, the Rev. G. W. D. Harris, died in great peace this morning at half-past three o'clock. He was taken ill the day after he reached home from Conference, at Somerville. His disease was pneumonia, and, though his sufferings were great, he endured them with great patience—a murmur did not escape his lips. He said that it was all right, and that the religion he had so long recommended to others sustained him in his last afflictions. Sister Harris is also at the point of death—it is not thought that she will survive through this day. Suitable memoirs will be prepared in due time."

AN IDOL is anything which is the occasion or temptation of wandering from God.

Texas Conference.

The editor of the Galveston Christian Advocate, concludes an excellent article as follows:

The doctor (McFerrin) did us noble service. Our board was in debt; he met us in counsel, aided us liberally out of the resources of the Parent Board, and then, in the collection of $1,151 at the missionary anniversary, lifted us out of the bog of indebtedness, and enabled us to enter without embarrassment upon the work of the ensuing year. Sunday was a profitable day. The love-feast in the morning was followed by a sermon weighty and impressive, from the Bishop. The morning services were concluded by the ordination of deacons. Dr. McFerrin preached in the afternoon, moving many hearts by his reminiscences of the early days of Methodism, and arousing the preachers by his pointed appeals respecting their personal obligations. At night Dr. Walker preached on family prayer, and the communion service closed the labors of the day. In connection with the report on education, Dr. Pitts made some statements of great interest to the church respecting Chappell Hill Female College. Out of the ashes a new building has sprung up, ample in size, and admirable in all its appointments. An able faculty has been secured, and the enterprise is moving off under the most encouraging auspices.

The appointments were read out on Tuesday afternoon, and in a few hours the men who had met in Conference departed to their different fields.

The statistical report sums up as follows: Number of members, 6,075; local preachers, 77; infants baptized, 447; adults baptized, 311; Sunday schools, 49; teachers, 386; scholars, 2,851. Amount necessary for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans of preachers, $800; collected on the above, $850, distributed as follows: Dr. Hollin's children, $100; Sister Drake and child, $150; Sister Wooldridge and child, $200; Sister Carden and child, $150; Bro. Wilson's child, $50; Bro. J. H. Addison's child, $100; Bro. R. Alexander, $100. Total, $850. Contributed for missions, $3,329.10.

There was a manifest improvement in ministerial support. The church is giving practical evidence of its high appreciation of the preached gospel.

News from the Work.

DEWITT CIRCUIT, LITTLE ROCK CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have been enjoying a most glorious revival at Dewitt for the three weeks just past. Over forty have been converted, and twenty joined our church.

Our Baptist friends kindly gave us the use of their church-house, and they and the Presbyterians heartily co-operated with us in the meeting. The very best feeling exists between all the churches and people. All united in our blessed Master's cause, and the Lord met with and blessed us. Twelve joined the Baptists, and six joined the Presbyterians.

N. S. BURNETT, P. C.

A LADY once asked Mr. Wesley: "Supposing that you knew that you were to die at twelve o'clock to-morrow night, how would you spend the intervening time?" "How, madam?" he replied, "Why just as I intend to spend it now. I should preach this evening at Gloucester, and again at five to-morrow morning; after that I should ride to Tewkesbury, preach in the afternoon, and meet the societies in the evening. I should then repair to friend Martin's house, who expects to entertain me, converse and pray with the family as usual, retire to my room at ten o'clock, commend myself to my heavenly Father, lie down to rest, and wake up in glory."

BECKWITH SEWING MACHINE.—Our readers will please note that the price of the above Machine has been advanced to $12, which will be the uniform price for the future. It has recently had some valuable improvements added to it, which have so enhanced the cost of manufacturing it as to make this advance necessary. We are assured that the sale of this Machine has far exceeded the expectation of the agent here, and further, that they have given universal satisfaction. With the recent valuable improvement the Machine must be still more acceptable, and meet with an increased demand from every part of the country. We ask the perusal of the advertisement in another column.

DR. J. J. LYONS, whose card appears in our advertising columns, has been known to us for nearly twenty years. We have been familiar with his practice and many of his patients for about fifteen years, witnessed much of his treatment in the epidemics which have prevailed during that time, and take pleasure in recommending him to our friends, in the vicinity of his present location, as a high-toned and honorable gentleman, a conscientious, attentive and skillful practitioner and worthy of the entire confidence of those who may employ him.

NEW VARIETY STORE ON CANAL STREET.—Mr. Bastian, of the firm of Bastian Brothers, book dealers and stationers, which still continues at the old stand, No. 190 Canal street, has opened, at No. 145 Canal street, a new and very attractive assortment of toys, stationery and fancy goods. We call attention to his advertisement in another column.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO MINISTERS.—The agents of the celebrated Wilson Sewing Machine, 189 Canal street, whose advertisement appears in these columns, wishes to say that all ministers, as purchasers, will have a very liberal discount from the already extremely low rates at which their machine is sold. Would respectfully refer to Rev. R. J. Harp.

THE SOUTHERN ORGAN, a twelve-page weekly paper, devoted to temperance, literature, agriculture and social progress, and published in this city, at 139 Poydras street, by Messrs. Scott & Berry, offers special inducements to subscribers for the ensuing year. Specimen copies furnished upon application to the publishers.

MR. W. A. KOWALSKI, No. 103 Tchoupitoulas street, has just received a large shipment of lamps, family glassware and non-explosive oils. He claims for his new burner a bright light, equal to gas, and very economical. Dealers and consumers will do well to examine his stock.

HUMAN HAIR MANUFACTORY.—Mr. J. G. Bermel, at No. 121 Canal street, offers for sale a full assortment of human hair goods; also a fine stock of fancy and variety goods. Mr. Bermel, being an extensive manufacturer of hair goods, affords extraordinary inducements to purchasers.

DRY GOODS.—Dress goods, woolens and flannels, shawls and cloaks, and laces and hosiery in large quantities, great variety and excellent quality, are offered for sale at low prices by Messrs. Braselman & Adams, corner Magazine and St. Andrew streets, in the "Upper City."

THE NEW WILSON UNDER-FEED SEWING MACHINE.—Messrs. William Gregg & Co., at No. 189 Canal street, are the general Southern agents of this excellent sewing machine. We take pleasure in calling attention to their advertisement, which appears in this issue.

WASHBURN'S ART GALLERY, No. 113 CANAL STREET.—This well-known artist photographer publishes a card in this issue of the ADVOCATE, to which we call the attention of our readers. Mr. Washburn distributes a pamphlet which contains many good suggestions to those who sit for photographs.

FINE BOOTS AND SHOES.—Mr. R. F. W. Bachman, of No. 18 Camp street, under the City Hotel, makes a specialty of dealing in fine custom-made boots and shoes. Ladies, misses, children and gentlemen are invited to call at Mr. Bachman's neat store.

TALLOW.—Messrs. B. L. Mann & Co., No. 103 Peters street, offer for sale a superior article of tallow, prepared expressly for engineers and machinery use in general; put up in convenient packages forty-pound cans, barrels, half barrels, kegs and egkes.

GOOD WORDS.—James A. Gresham, our excellent neighbor, of No. 92 Camp street, advertises in our columns of this issue an excellent and appropriate holiday book Good Words. See advertisement.

LADIES' HAIR STORE.—Our lady readers will find at the establishment of George T. Shilling, No. 381 Bryades street, an excellent assortment of human hair, hair goods, perfumery, etc.

COAL.—Messrs. H. & C. Tyler, No. 9 Carondelet street, have for sale, in quantities to suit purchasers, and at the lowest market rates, Pittsburg, anthracite and cannel coal.

AT THE establishment of Captain Cross, 62 Camp street, will be found a full line of lamps, trimmings and Japanned ware. He is also the agent of the Sepoline Oil Company.

IN THE active pursuit of pleasure or gain the inestimable blessing of health is too often forgotten, until disease is firmly seated, and the fact only realized by great bodily and mental suffering. The Liver is the vulnerable point in most persons, and the disarrangement of the organ involves almost the whole system; hence the reason why, under Liver disease, there is enumerated such a number of afflictions, and we claim the Simmons Liver Regulator to be a remedy for them all.

A WARNING.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a grave-yard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many grave-yards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility or similar functional derangements to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to all the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

The Sea Captain's Story.

Rev. P. Kitwood narrated the following at a recent Sunday-school teachers' meeting, Milwaukee, Wisconsin. We copy from the Sunday School Times:

When I was in the city of London, several years ago, I attended service in a sailors' chapel. At the close of the regular worship, an experience and prayer meeting was opened for the benefit of those who wished to remain and participate in the exercises. Soon a lad of sixteen years of age made his appearance at the door, and walked down the aisle to the altar, followed by fifteen men, the foremost being a tall, noble-looking man in the prime of life. When the opportunity to speak was offered, the tall, handsome man, who seemed to be a leader, arose, and placing his hand upon the head of the boy, said: "This boy has been a blessing to me. Under Providence I owe much to him. Allow me to state the case. A small company of Sunday school teachers in England visited a poor-house, and asked permission of the superintendent to teach school there on the Sabbath. At first the superintendent laughed at the idea of teaching paupers in classes on the Sabbath; but he finally gave his consent, and this boy Johnny was among those who availed themselves of the advantages of the school. He soon mastered the alphabet, in a short time was taught how to spell, and very soon he was able to read the New Testament. I am a sea captain. It so happened that I wanted a cabin boy, and some one directed me to the poor-house in question. 'There,' said the superintendent, 'is an able-bodied boy,' pointing to Johnny; 'you can have him; he is industrious, intelligent and faithful, but he is very pious.' I said, with an oath, that I did not care anything for his piety, that I would soon kick his religion out of him, because I did not intend to have anything of the sort in my ship. I consented to take the boy, and, just before leaving port, his Sunday school teacher called to see him. He presented a Bible to him, and asked him to make three promises, which were that he would read a few verses every day, that he would pray every day, and that he would be faithful and obedient. The wind blew a gale when we left port, making the sea rough, and Johnny so sick that he was confined to his berth a number of days. When he was able to attend to his duties, I happened one day to find him on his knees in the cabin, praying. I gave him a kick and told him to stop praying, stating, with words not fit to repeat, that I would not permit any praying on board of my ship. Johnny knew not what to do, or where to go, but he deemed it his duty to pray, so he climbed to the maintop the next time he poured out his heart in worship. I caught him at his devotion, and taking a rope in my hand I went for him, and flogged him severely. His next hiding-place for praying was under the bowsprit. He thought no one would look for him in such a place; and there, with the waves of the sea dashing and roaring under him, he kept the promise he made to his teacher, and to the great Teacher above. When off the coast of Newfoundland, we were overtaken by a severe storm. The wind blew as though it were blowing its last, and the churned waters rolled heavily against the ship and over it. Louder blew the wind and higher rolled the sea, until the ship became unmanageable, and soon she was thrown upon her beam ends. It seemed as though our last hour had come. It appeared to me that no human effort could save the ship from sinking. The heavens were black with storms, and the merciless waters yawned like open mouths to swallow us. In this dilemma I looked about for my mates and men, and found all hands save my cabin boy, Johnny. I inquired for him. One of the mates said he supposed he was washed overboard. I then began to think of my cruelty to him, and of my great wickedness. While I was thinking about his courage, his fidelity, and his religion, which I needed at that moment to sustain me, I heard a low voice from under the deck. I commanded the men to be still, and then lowering myself with a rope, I found Johnny in a secure place, praying for his captain and all hands. I threw my arms about his neck, begged his forgiveness, and assured him that he might pray as much as he pleased. 'Had you not better pray for yourself?' asked Johnny, modestly. 'If the ship goes down, are you prepared to meet your Master?' I did pray for myself; so did my mates and the seamen; and Johnny prayed that He who holds the winds in his fists and the waves in the hollow of His hand would save the ship and the souls on board. Directly the wind lulled, a calm soon followed, the ship was righted, and when she reached her destination, we all went ashore and publicly acknowledged the goodness and mercy of God. Here we are, glad of the opportunity to consecrate ourselves afresh to the service of the Divine Master."

The Rev. Mr. Kitwood stated further that the captain and the boy both became eminent preachers of the Gospel; that he had often heard the former preach the Gospel. Mr. Kitwood, who is a Methodist minister in Brooklyn, has been a sailor many years, coming the Gospel whenever opportunities were offered to him.

How to Kill an Enemy.

"Children," said a kind father to his little family, as he took a seat by the fireside, and gathered them round him for a pleasant talk, "which is the best way to kill an enemy?"

"Why, shoot him, to be sure," said one.

"No, stab him," said a second.

"No, starve him," said a third.

"But I think," said their father, "I can show you a better way than this. An enemy may be killed without taking from him his life, or shedding a single drop of his blood. Let me tell you a story, to show how.

"There was a farmer once, who was a very cross, surly, disagreeable man. Everybody in the neighborhood knew him, and everybody disliked him. He was sure to make the most of whatever went wrong about him, and the poor offender always met with severe punishment. There was not a boy in all the neighborhood who didn't feel uncomfortable as he passed his gate; and the poor dog that barked at his geese, or the neighbor's rooster that crowed on his wall, was speedily visited either with the lash of his whip or the shot from his gun. The very cat knew his footsteps, and shunk away from him in terror. He was a complete pest, as much so to himself as to those about him. Every day brought him some fresh trouble, and found him in continual 'hot water;' indeed, his life was made up of broils.

"After a time good farmer Green came to live near him, and was soon told the character of his not over-pleasant neighbor.

"'Well,' says he, 'if he "shows off" on me, I'll very soon kill him!'

"This remark of Farmer Green's soon got afloat, and all sorts of things were said about it. He seemed the very last man to 'kill' any one, for his looks, and words, and actions, all told of a loving heart which throbbed in his bosom, and directed his life. Nobody could think for a moment of his becoming a murderer. Mr. Green's intention at length came to the ears of the ill-natured farmer, and you may be sure he was not at all pleased about it. Everything he could do to tease, annoy, and even injure Mr. Green, was done; but, somehow, the man who was to 'kill' this ugly tempered farmer took it all in good part, and spoke as calmly and looked as kindly as ever.

"One day Mrs. Green sent to the wife of our surly friend a basket of nice plums, but her husband wouldn't let her have them. He told the person who brought them, very gruffly, that 'it was only done to get some of his pears in return, and he wasn't going to give any of them away.'

"At another time Mr. Green's team of oxen stuck fast in a bog, and when he asked his neighbor for a little help, he told him, in a rough way, that 'he had enough to do to mind his own business,' and refused to help him.

"'Never mind,' said Green to one standing by, 'I'll kill him very soon; see if I don't.'

"Soon after this the team of the ill-natured man was in the same plight that his neighbor's had been in. Mr. Green saw it. He ran for his oxen and chains, and set off to the bog. He spoke kindly, offered his help, and began to render it. But what did he receive in reply? Why, a fierce look and an angry word—'I don't want your help! Take your oxen away.'

"'No,' said the other, 'I must help you, for the night is coming one, and what is bad enough by day is ten times worse in the dark.' Away pulled the oxen and the men, and soon all was set right again.

"A strange feeling did that rough, cross man carry home with him that evening; something which he had never felt before. And a strange look did his wife give him as he said, 'Peg, Farmer Green has killed me! He said he would, and he has done it.'

"'Yes, the 'enemy' was killed,' without the loss of a single life, or one drop of blood. He went in the morning to confess his ingratitude to his kind neighbor, and to ask his forgiveness, and the very man who had been noted for nothing but his wickedness, became the friend of all.—Christian Weekly.

"I Scrubs."

"What have my class done for the Savior since last we met?" asked the teacher of a large infant class one Sunday morning.

One said, "I have earned some money for the heathen by doing errands;" another, "I tend our sick baby;" another, "I fetch hunchback Billy to school." One after another told, in a half-bashful, half-exultant way, of the little activities and self-denials of the week, so pleasing to the teacher, and still more to him who said: "Suffer little children to come unto me."

At last a little four-year old hand was stretched up, and moved hastily to and fro to attract the teacher's attention.

"Well, my dear, what are you doing to please Jesus?"

The little eager face flushed with excitement as the unexpected reply came: "I scrubs, ma'am!"

Some of the older children tittered, but the teacher sobered them at once by saying:

"Yes, little Molly's share in the work my class is doing for Jesus is as important as any. If she tries to help her mother by scrubbing a bench or table, even if it has to be done over after her, she earns the same smile of love as the older ones who can do errands and earn money for the missionary box."

"She hath done what she could" is the highest praise that can be spoken of any one, and little Molly has done that.—American Messenger.

RESPECT to age, and kindness to children, are among the tests of an amiable disposition.

How to Fatten Chickens.

It is hopeless to attempt to fatten chickens while they are at liberty. They must be put in a proper coop; and this, like most other poultry appurtenances, need not be expensive. To fatten twelve fowls, a coop may be three feet long, eighteen inches high and eighteen inches deep, made entirely of bars. No part solid—neither top, sides nor bottom. Discretion must be used, according to the size of the chickens put up. They do not want room; indeed, the closer they are the better—provided they can all stand up at the same time. Care must be taken to put up such as have been accustomed to be together, or they will fight. If one is quarrelsome, it is better to remove it at once, as, like other bad examples, it soon finds imitators. A diseased chicken should not be put up. The food should be ground oats; and may either be put in a trough or on a flat board running along the front of the coop. It may be mixed with water or milk—the latter is the better. It should be well-soaked, forming a pulp as loose as can be, provided it does not run off the board. They must be well fed three or four times a day—the first time as soon after daybreak as may be possible or convenient, and then at intervals of four hours. Each meal should be as much and no more than they can eat up clean. When they have done feeding, the board should we wiped, and some gravel may be spread. It causes them to feed and thrive.

After a fortnight of this treatment you will have good fat fowls. If, however, there are but five or six to be fatted they must not have as much as though there were twelve. Nothing is easier than to allow them the proper space, as it is only necessary to have two or three pieces of wood to pass between the bars and form a partition. This may also serve when fowls are up at different degrees of fatness. This requires attention, or fowls will not keep fat and healthy.

As soon as the fowl is sufficiently fatted it must be killed; otherwise it will not get fatter, but will lose flesh. If fowls are intended for the market, of course, they are or may be all fatted at once; but if for home consumption, it is better to put them up at such intervals as will suit the time when they will be required for the table.

When the time arrives for killing, whether they are meant for market or otherwise, they should be fasted without food or water for twelve or fifteen hours. This enables them to be kept for some time after being killed, even in hot weather.—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

The Percheron Horse.

The true Percheron or Norman diligence horse combines more strength with activity than any horse I have ever sat behind. All travelers on entering France are struck with the properties of these horses as displayed in drawing the diligence, by which they are conveyed through the kingdom, at the rate fully equal to the average of stage traveling in this country.

English horsemen confess that their coast horses could not hold out the same pace before the same load.

The origin of this race, according to French authorities, dates from the occupation of the Netherlands by the Spaniards, who introduced the Andalusian horse, which soon became the favorite horse all over the continent. The French horse, with which he was crossed, was the old Norman draught horse, which still exists in the country in all its purity, and is perhaps the best of all horses for draught.

The average height of these horses is seventeen to eighteen hands, and they may be described as follows:

Head short, wide and hollow between the eyes; jaws heavy; ears small and pointed well forward; neck very short and thick; mane heavy; shoulders well inclined backward; back extremely short; rump steep; quarters very broad; chest deep and wide; legs short, tendons large, and muscles excessively developed.

An English writer in the British Journal of Agriculture, thus speaks of the Percheron horse. After giving an account of its origin, which he agrees in tracing to the Spanish horse, he observes: "The horses of Normandy are a capital race for hard work and scanty fare; they are enduring and energetic beyond description; they keep their condition when other horses would die of neglect and hard treatment. A better cross for some of our horses cannot be imagined than those of Normandy."

CHICKEN CHOLERA.—The symptoms of this disease are a high fever, feathers ruffled, the skin turns black, the eyes are closed, and the patient will not move unless driven. Death usually takes place in about three hours. I have lost about one hundred chickens this winter, besides turkeys, ducks and geese. I tried all the remedies I could hear of, but without effect, until the following came to my notice: Take corn-meal and shorts in equal parts, wet the compound, and mix with lime as strong as they will eat it. For turkeys, geese and ducks, corn soaked in lime water will effect a cure.—Correspondent of Rural American.

AN ALDERNEY OR JERSEY-BORN COW.—A correspondent of the Mark Lane says: "There is in this cow a refined air and carriage, a certain comely 'presence,' which forbids all thoughts of the butcher, and never carries one's appetite beyond a syllabub or bread and butter. A short horn bears 'beefsteaks' on his very visage, whereas we shudder at the notion of cutting prime pieces out of old Daffodil, or putting a round of Nora into the beef barrel. It would be worse than killing and eating the pet lamb."

FUCHSIAS, except a few winter-flowering ones, are better stored in the cellar for the winter, as they are generally poor parlor plants.

Lost Grace.

One may lose grace, and not know it. "Not only so, he may look upon himself as established in the faith, when he has actually lost the saving grace of God altogether out of his heart.

Read the third chapter of Revelation, commencing at the fourteenth verse, and you will find that some will into this state in the early days of Christianity. The church of the Laodiceans still exists. It is large and flourishing. Its accessions are numerous and important. Many preachers and men of renown belong to it. There is no other church so respectable in the eyes of the world. It threatens to swallow up all others. Those who have lost the saving grace of God, and do not know it, are in the most dangerous condition that a human being can possibly be in. It was to such that the wise man had reference when he said:

"Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? There is more hope of a fool than of him."—Prov. xxvi, 12.

Our Savior addresses the same class when he says: "The publicans and the harlots enter into the kingdom of God before you." If, then, such is our danger, we need to guard well against it. Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith.

1. If you have lost patience, you have lost grace. No matter what is the nature or the number of your trials. If you keep saved, the trying of your faith worketh patience.—James i, 3. If you cannot take reproof, but feel like turning upon those who tell you of your faults, real or imaginary, it proves beyond a doubt, whether you are right or wrong in this particular instance, that you certainly are deficient in the saving grace of God. You are not as well off as you think you are. Instead of "getting the victory over your brethren," you ought to get down before God and get the victory over yourself. You have need to have your pride subdued and your spirit chastened.

2. If you have lost love, you have lost grace. There is nothing plainer than this. True religion consists very much in love to God and love to man. If you have lost either, you have lost grace. How is it with you in this respect? Are you as ready to make sacrifices for the cause of God as formerly? Do you take as much delight in his worship as you once did?

Have you suffered no loss of love for the children of God? There was a time when you loved them as your own soul. You loved their society, and lost no opportunity of waiting with them for worship. You loved those most who loved God most. The ground of your preference was not engaging manners or social position, but love for Jesus. Now, if all this has changed, and you court the society of the worldly, and forsake the humble disciples of Jesus, it is an unmistakable evidence of the loss of grace. You may attribute it to this cause or that; to a loss of confidence, or to personal neglects which you have received; but the real cause is the fact that you have backslidden in heart from God. Seek to disguise it as you may, in the depth of your soul you know this is the case.

3. The loss of true humility is another unmistakable evidence of the loss of grace. You may have increased greatly in gifts, you may talk or pray with greater fluency, you may have a greater knowledge of divine truth, and be able to state it and defend it with greater clearness and ability; but if, notwithstanding all this, you have lost humility, you have lost grace. If you feel your importance, or put on dignified airs, or think that nothing can be done right unless you have a hand in it, there can be no question as to your spiritual position—you have lost grace.

We entreat you to be honest with God and with your own soul. Begin to look at your condition as it is. Admit the unwelcome truth that you have lost grace from your heart. The first step necessary to regain your first love is to remember whence thou art fallen.

Having seen your loss, repent. Confess your state before God and before men. Go to work as you did first. Prompt action is demanded. You are in great danger. Unless you recover your lost grace, you will lose your present light. You will adopt a wrong theory of religion. You will put darkness for light. You will take that which passes current among men as being current with God. If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great that darkness!—Rev. B. T. Roberts, in American Wesleyan.

RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTS.—Plato, seeing a child do mischief in the streets, went forth and corrected his father for it; that father which does not correct his child when he does amiss, is justly corrected for his faults; and it is the pattern of God's judicial proceedings; as he visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children who imitate them, so he visits the iniquities of the children upon the fathers who countenance and indulge them. Jacob was accountable to Laban for the whole flock; not a sheep or a lamb was lost or torn, but it was required at his hands (Gen. xxxi, 39.) Thus must family governors be accountable to God for every lamb in the field, for every child in the family, for every servant in the house. God will one day cry aloud in thine ears: Husband, father, master, wife, give an account of thy fathership, give an account of thy mastership. This made Joshua undertake for his house as well as for himself (Jos. xxiv, 15.) And this made David careful of his house as well as his heart: "I will walk within my house with a perfect heart," (Ps. ci, 2. —Kitchen.

God is the author; men are only the players. These grand pieces which are played upon earth have been composed in heaven.—Balzac.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

There are in the State of Texas thousands of acres of land belonging to unknown heirs of parties who went to that State at an early date, bought or located lands, and have since died, owning them. Being in possession of facts in reference to original titles of lands, that have made many wealthy who were unaware they owned a dollar in that State, we invite all parties who had relatives who emigrated there, and have since died, to open a correspondence in reference thereto. We make no charge unless successful, and, if good titles are found, expect an interest for looking them up and removing clouds from titles, etc. Parties interested will do well to address

MEDICAL.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR

AND BLOOD RENOVATOR.

Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use.

It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the Stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is PERMANENT AND LASTING.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND

PECTORAL BALM,

FOR THE CURE OF

COUGHS, COLDS,

HOARSENESS,

BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA,

and the various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of Consumptive patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral BALM completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Disorders which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of Inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the splitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

ANNIHILATOR.

A PURELY VEGETABLE COMPOUND,

whose extraordinary virtues, in those painful diseases, are attested by certificates from many prominent citizens of every section of the country.

No medicine of the century has attracted as much attention.

Of the many to whom the proprietor is authorized to refer, may be mentioned the following well-known gentlemen:

Rev. Fisher T. Itawsun, Delhi, Louisiana.
Rev. James E. Bradley, Floyd, Louisiana.
Rev. P. M. Goodwyn, New Orleans, Louisiana.

POPE'S CURE

FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, AND ALL AFFECTIONS OF THE THROAT AND LUNGS.

This preparation was introduced many years ago, after consulting the views of several of the most prominent physicians of New Orleans regarding its formula. The late Dr. Edward Jenner Coxe, author of the work on Inhalations for Diseases of Respiratory Organs, was pleased to say: "In my opinion, no better combination for the purpose of relieving the ordinary coughs and colds which prevail can readily be thought of." And nearly twenty years of actual trial has gone far to verify his remark. In bottles, seventy-five cents each. Try it.

New Orleans Markets.

(From the New Orleans Price Current.)

The weather continued cold and inclement on Saturday, but has since been clear and pleasant. Our accounts from the country present no new feature with regard to cotton. We hear of considerable quantities yet to come forward, indicating that our receipts will hold out much better than was anticipated a few weeks since.

The river is 14 feet 6 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-seventh ult.:

| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... 12,396 |
| Lake | 22 |
| Tennessee | 2,051 |
| Arkansas | 1,491 |
| Mobile | 3,955 |
| Florida | 11 |
| Texas | 58 |
| Total | 19,984 |

On Saturday the market opened with a fair inquiry, but scant supply, and only a limited business was done during the morning, but later in the day, additional samples having been opened, the movement became quite animated, and, under the competition among buyers, prices hardened, closing at a partial improvement of ⅛c. A considerable part of the business was at figures showing no change. The sales summed up 5,800 bales. On Monday buyers came forward with increased spirit, and although operations were restricted by scant supplies and more stringent pretensions on the part of factors, yet, under an advance of ⅛c. at New York and 1-16d. at Liverpool, the demand was active throughout the day, and 8,000 bales changed hands at still higher prices, a part of the business showing an advance of ⅛c., but the bulk of it fully ⅛c., good ordinary closing at 18⅛@18¾c., and low middling at 19⅛@19⅝c., the outside figures, of course, for strict. Tuesday the market opened with a light supply and only limited demand. The movement consequently exhibited but little animation, and prices were manifestly less buoyant, while later in the day, buyers holding back, the tendency to easier rates became still more marked and the bulk of the business was at a decline of 1-16@⅛c. from Monday's figures, the falling off being the most marked in the lower grades, ordinary and good ordinary being reduced ⅛c., low middling ⅛c., and the higher grades even less. The sales were confined to 3,200 bales.

We quote:

| Good ordinary | 18⅛@18⅝ |
| Low middling | 19⅛@19⅝ |

SUGAR.—The market has been dragging since our last review, with the tendency of prices in favor of buyers. The stock on hand is accumulating. The receipts on Saturday and Monday embraced 3,500 hhds., while the sales barely reached 2,500 hhds. at 6¼c. for inferior, 6⅞@7⅛c. for common, 7⅝@7½c. for good common, 7¾@8⅛c. for fair to good fair, 8⅜@8¾c. for fully fair, 9c. for prime, 9¼@9½c. for strictly prime, 9¾@10c. for choice, 7⅛@8¼c. for centrifugal, 7½@9¼c. for seconds, 9¼@10⅝c. for yellow clarified and 10⅛@11⅝c. for white.

MOLASSES.—On Tuesday the receipts comprised 2,380 bbls. The supplies were sold, though slowly, at 31@40c. for centrifugal, 47@51 for fair to good fair, 54@55c. for prime, 56@57c. for strictly prime, one or two small lots strictly prime commanding 58c. ₱ gallon.

CORN.—On Monday the stock on the levee embraced 13,001 sacks (including some being sacked,) and prices were lower, when 2,500 sacks were sold at 80c. ₱ bushel.

OATS.—On Saturday, with only a moderate inquiry, sales were confined to 650 sacks at 50c. ₱ bushel for prime and 52c. for choice. On Monday the movement embraced 3,600 sacks in one lot at 50c. ₱ bushel.

BRAN.—On Saturday 150 sacks sold, in lots, at $1.50 ₱ 100 lbs. No sales were reported on Monday.

PORK.—Round lots of mess are offering at $13.75 ₱ bbl. for new. It is retailing at $14@14.50 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday there were few or no sides on hand, and the market was without any movement excepting 100 casks shoulders sold, in two lots, at 5½c. ₱ lb. Shoulders were quoted in the job trade at 5¾c.; clear rib sides 9¼c.; clear sides 10⅜@11c. ₱ lb.

HAMS.—Choice sugar-cured are scarce, and the market is bare of new. They are in demand at 18@18½c. ₱ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday 50 tierces steam-rendered and 105 tierces packers' sold on private terms, and 15 tierces refined at 8½c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Monday 10 boxes sold at 7⅛c. for rib sides, and 10c. for hams. There are few or no sides on hand. Shoulders are retailing at 6½c., and quoted at wholesale at 6c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—The stock is small, but the demand is very limited. Western is quoted at 10½c., Northern 11½@12c. ₱ lb.

CORN MEAL.—On Tuesday the market was dull, with a good stock offering at $4 ₱ bbl., and no sales, excepting 300 bbls. on the landing on private terms.

BEEF.—Texas is in good supply, but the stock of Northern and Western is light, and sales are restricted by the scarcity of shipping in port. Texas is quoted nominally at $11@11.50, extra mess $12.50 ₱ bbl., and $7@7.50 for half bbls. Tierces $16.50@17 for mess, and $17.50@18 for prime mess; Western mess $16@17.50, and $9@10.50 ₱ half bbl., and Fulton market $17.50@12 ₱ half bbl.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 111¼@111⅜ (against 112 at New York,) and closed at 111⅛@111⅜ (against 111⅝ at New York.)

In silver we have noticed only retail sales. American half dollars are now quoted at 110@111, and Mexican dollars at par to 2½ ₱ cent. premium in gold.

THE CUTTING OF DIAMONDS.

Until a very recent date Amsterdam has held the monopoly of the business of cntting and polishing diamonds, and by an experience of hundreds of years, during which period generation after generation has been born to and educated in the art, that city has attained an almost world-wide renown. The work is now done in New York and Boston. The business is divided into three distinct branches, and snch is the proficiency necessary in each branch that it is extremely seldom that a workman can he found who is master of all three.

The rough diamond is first handed to the "cleaver." He is expected to see in an instant where any flaw in the stone is situated; he must be able to tell what parts must he split off in order to get rid of any flaw, and at the same time retain as much weight as possible, with the greatest brilliancy. He calculates how much the clippings will be worth; whether they will make small brilliants or rose diamonds, and having reached his decision he fastens the stone in the end of a wooden stick, seenring it by a cement made of rosin and brick-dust. Another diamond already split, and having a very sharp edge, is served in like manner, and with this he cnts a notch in the diamond he is abont to split. This operation is performed over a small box containing a sieve which catches the diamond dnst. The notches being made the cleaver takes a small steel rnle, which he places on the line in the direction of which the cleavage should be made. Having apparently taken his aim, he places the rule in the notch, and with one or two qnick taps with a steel rod the stone is split. Heating the cement the workman removes the diamond; it has been so split that the flaw has been entirely removed. The diamond may be worth hnndreds, perhaps thonsands of dollars, and any ignorance or error on the part of the cleaver might destroy for his employer more than they can recover in weeks.

From the cleaver the stone is handed to the "cntter," and secnred in exactly the same way. The diamond to be shaped is held in the left hand, which is protected by a heavy leathern glove. In the right hand is the stone to be nsed in grinding down the facets of the diamond which is under treatment. The process is very slow, and when the stone leaves the hands of the cutter it has lost whatever brilliancy it may have had, and looks mere like a common pebble. But new comes a great transformation.

Visiting the polishing room the attention is first attracted by what seem to be round steel tables. Upon a closer examination these are seen to be the disks which are nsed in polishing the diamonds. They are making two thousand revolutions per minnte, and are covered with a compennd of oil and diamond dust. The first process is to solder the stone into a sort of brass cnp, leaving visible only that portion of the diamond which is to be polished. Taking into consideration the fact that every stone has sixty-four different surfaces to be polished, it will be immediately seen how difficult the work of this operator is, and how exact he must be. Taking the stone he places it in the solder, now in almost a liqnid state, and with his finger shapes the metal around the diamond. This is then plunged into the water, and as the steam arises from the melten mass, one naturally turns to see if the workman is provided with hands of iron. But no—practice has made him invulnerable.

The polisher now takes the diamond, touches the point with the oil and diamond dust, clamps the cup containing the precions stone in a wooden rest, so that the diamond shall just touch the polishing disk. By weights he regulates the pressure. Experts will have three diamonds nndergoing this process at the same time. At times the stone may be so hard that months are required to give it the proper brilliancy; but sooner or later the luster appears, and the diamond comes forth a perfect gem.—New Jersey Mechanic.

M. Merget has demonstrated that mercury gives off vapor continually at all temperatures, even when frozen. He proposes the nse, in rooms where looking-glasses are made, of chlorine, as a protection to workmen against the vapors of mercury. Calomel would thus be formed, which is less dangerous.

It is an unhappy, and yet I fear a true reflection, that they who have nncommon easiness and softness of temper, have seldom very noble and nice sensations of soul.—Greville.

Bible promises are like the beams of the sun, which shines as freely in at the window of the poor man's cottage as at the rich man's palace.

SCIENTIFIC.

Pine Trees as Medical Agents.—Althongh some forests are regarded as sonrces of malaria, and oak trees and hazel bushes have been connted insalnbrious in Europe, like the tamarind tree in the East, yet the air of pine tree forests appears always grateful to the lungs, and has been considered wholesome, althongh of its absolnte curative influence there is little evidence, and, indeed, it must he difficult to procure such. The idea of pine forests exercising a balmy influence on the lungs is a very ancient one. Pliny considered that the air of the pine forests was more useful in phthisis and in convalescence from acnte diseases than the voyage to Egypt recommended in snch cases in those days. Both Bonrnemonth and Arachon at the present day owe a good deal of their reputation to their pine woods. The air of the latter is said to be distinctly sedative. On the whole, then, the air of the pine woods of the Black Forest may be regarded as an element entering into the consideration of the valne of its baths.

Bnt besides merely inhaling the air of its forests, people have of late years made much use of the products of pine in baths, vapor baths and inhalations. Even this is not entirely modern; for the ancients recommended chiefly the internal use of decoctions of strobili and of pine tops, and thonght pine nnts very nsefnl in diseases of the chest; and at a more modern time, besides the internal nse of drinks made from the sprnce and the tar-water so long in vogne, we had inhalations of tar and of various resins. The ancients did, indeed, recommend in gont baths of water in which cedar wood had been boiled, bnt the nse of the pine extract hath is qnite modern. It has spread rapidly, and is in nse at Gleisweiler, Rehhnrg, Diehenstein, Rnhla and Eisenach. These aromatic extracts are procured from various pines—as from the Abies excelsa or Norway sprnce, silver fir, pinus sylvestris or Scotch fir, pinns maritima or Bordeaux pine, the Weymonth pine, also from the common larch, and the most fragrant of all from pine pumilio, the mountain pine. The baths vary considerably in strength and in odor, according to the way in which they are prepared. The commonest way of making the bath is by adding to common water a certain quantity of the decoction got by passing steam through the yonng pine tops.—London Lancet.

Rubies.—It is not a little remarkable, and we might philosophize for some time about it, that while the diamond is made up of pure carbon, or simple black and opaque charcoal, the ruby, the next in value and beauty, is nearly made up of pure alumina or common clay—98.5 per cent.—the coloring matter, iron, making up the rest of it; the mere trace of lime found in it being unappreciable. Nothing, we may venture to say, in nature's chemistry is more wonderful than this fact of the dull, colorless and lifeless clay becoming metamorphosed, by some hidden and almost miraculous way, into the transparently clear, red-colored and almost living gem! Imagination itself fails to find a theory to accouut for all this, and no progress in chemistry can invent a theory to fit it. It is a somewhat curious coincidence that the ruby, as well as the diamond and other precious stones, are so often found associated with gold; where they are there gold is almost sure to be present. Natnre produces these, her riches, together, and it afterward is the province of art to keep them together, and to exhibit them as one object. How much remains to be done before this artistic feat is well performed; for, as things are, the beauty of the stone is as often as not spoiled in the cutting and filing. We are inclined to think that no colored stone should be cut at all. Rubies, for instance, always look richer by they being simply polished or cut en cabochon or tallow-topped, as it is termed. It is the marvelous depth and purity, and intensity of color, as seen in the ruby, the sapphire, the emerald and snch like colored stones that make np the beanty and value of them, and not, as in the colorless diamond, in the colored sparks of light which are seen in it. The blue sapphire, it may be noticed, is simply a variety of ruby or corundum.—Builder.

To protect delicate drawings in pencil or chalk, such as are easily smudged if roughly handled, and to give them more permanence and solidity it is well to coat them with ordinary collodion, sold by all dealers in photographic materials. The same may, if desired, be used with an admixture of paraffine, stearine or castor oil, and affords then an excellent coating. Pencil sketches are in this way rendered clearer, and may, therefore, be copied the more easily when so treated.

Utah Bismuth.—The discovery of bismuth in Utah, about two hnndred miles south of Salt Lake City, is regarded as important. The mines of Saxony and Bohemia, from whence the supply now comes, are nearly exhausted.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching should not be offensive to the thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are like

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.

Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.

G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.

T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.

———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

|---|---|
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College | $60 00 |
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department | 40 00 |
| Contingent expenses | 5 00 |

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE attention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

THE PATENT BRIDGE

after a brief usage. There are many other advantages to which we could call attention, but our space will not admit. Catalogues and Price Lists, containing full particulars of this and other popular games, mailed to any address on application. Thirteen different styles of Croquet, from $4 to $20 a set. Address

HOME, SWEET HOME.

The venerable and justly beloved Dr. Muhlenberg, bearing delicious fruit in his age, has written a new song, which we are happy in presenting to our readers. He is known, wherever sacred poetry is read and sung, as the author of

"I would not live alway, I ask not to stay;" and we are quite sure that the hymn, which is adapted to the choicest of our fireside melodies, will become a household song in millions of sweet homes.

O'er the wild, foaming waste of the sea, as we roam,
How tender and sweet come the visions of home,
How lovely the scenes of our own native shore,
Be the way smoothe or rough, so we hail them once more.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Best of earth that we love,
Then, the one home above!

The fond ones that never forget us in prayer,
Loving friends and dear kindred that long for us there;
With hearts true to ours, in joy or in pain,
Oh, happy the day that unites us again!
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Best of earth that we love,
Then, the one home above!

Our ship she has weathered so many a gale;
Her commander, so cheering and ne'er known to fail;
We are buoyant with hope, owning still his command,
Who holdeth the winds and the waves in his hand.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Best of earth that we love,
Then, the one home above!

But the voyage of life—out on its troubled tide,
Our bark, to the haven of rest, who shall guide?
Salvation's great Captain, his word he'll fulfill,
Bear us safe o'er the billows, or bid them be still.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Best of earth that we love,
Then, the one home above!

And at last when the dark mortal passage is near,
As with myriads before us, he'll calm all our fear;
Oh! our faith fixed on him, keep we steadfast and whole,
And we never shall make the dire shipwreck of soul.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Best of earth that we love,
Then, the one home above!

Now bless we the Lord, for so far on our way,
With thankfulness praise, and with confidence pray;
Only be we his children—his arm us around—
Then, happen what may, we are still homeward bound.
Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Best of earth that we love,
Then, the one home above!

SOME WONDERFUL PLANTS.

In the west of India are found thorny plants or trees nearly destitute of verdure, except what appears to be long, shaggy hair, which derives its nourishment from the atmosphere rather than moisture from the earth.

The "moving plant" is a native of the basin of the Ganges. Its leaves revolve in various directions during the day and night, except occasionally, on a very hot day, when the plant seems to desist from its habitual motion for temporary repose. A high wind is said to have the effect to produce a cessation of its action. At times again only certain parts of the plant are noticed to be in motion—a leaf, or, perhaps, a branch; and it seldom occurs that some portions of it are not quite motionless while the remainder is active.

In the valley of the Irrawaddy grows the Borassus flabelliformis, which bears a leaf of wonderful dimensions, and which is said to be of sufficient size to cover twelve men standing upright.

At Timor, near the island of Java, a plant is found, the leaf of which, being of a thorny nature, possesses a fatal sting when penetrating the flesh. The victim, if not fatally poisoned, frequently suffers protracted illness. This plant is well called "Devil's leaf."

"Club-mosses" grow in these islands to a length of several feet, among which the Rafflesia Arnoldi, a floral, giant, parasitical plant, is prominent. It is peculiar for its carrion-scented flower, of brick-red color, which it bears, and which measures between three and four feet in diameter, weighing about fifteen pounds, and bearing a natural cup in the center, which often contains several pints of water.

In New Zealand is found the Metrosideros robusta growing to a great size, and sending shoots from its trunk and branches to the ground, which, in due time, sustain the old stem when vitality has left it. Here also are arborescent ferns, attaining a height of forty feet; and in this island vegetation flourishes in water too hot for animal life.

There grows near Quito the olive (Agava Americana,) the leaves of which are used by the poorer classes instead of writing paper. They also thatch their houses with them. When tapped before being torn from the stalk, a sirup flows freely that contains so much alkali as to make a rich lather with salt or fresh water for washing. With the same juice excellent pickles are made. The long stems are admirable in the construction of huts used by the natives. The fibres of the leaves and roots are woven into sandals; and the short, wiry sprigs are used as needles.

In Florida and Alabama—where abound the "air plants," which cover the boughs of forest trees, where they hang in festoons—is found also the Cheirostemon, the imprint of which leaf resembles the human hand.

In Jamaica the Tillansia retrifolulata is a noteworthy plant, growing on old decayed trees, with leaves so adjusted that the water which runs down them is retained at their basis. These, in time, swell out in the form of a bottle, holding about a quart of liquid, by which means travelers and animals are afforded a supply of water often when other resources fail or are not available.

In the Falkland Isles they have the Bolax growing in hemispherical tufts, often four feet high, and more than twelve in circumference, and of a yellow green color. These "mounds" discharge a strong scented resinous substance. The Dactylis respitosa or tussack grass abounds here, flourishing most on the seashore. Each tussack forms a solitary plant, consisting of roots twisted together, and often six feet high, and four or five in diameter, from the summit of which a thick mass of grassy blades, six feet long, droops on all sides. This foliage, joined with that of contiguous plants, forms an arched shelter for sea lions, peaguins and petrels.

In the Auckland Islands, which lie to the south of New Zealand, a plant grows near the sea which has clusters of green, wax-like blossoms, as large as a child's head.

The Marocystis pyrifera, a marine plant, attains a length of five hundred to fifteen hundred feet, and is the largest vegetable production known. On the shores of California there are fields of this plant so dense that ships driven toward the land have been saved by it.

The Lessonia, another marine plant, is found on the coast of the Falkland Isles. Its stems, thicker than a man's leg, and from eight to ten feet in length, cling to the rocks, above high-water mark, by means of fibres. Many branches spring from these stems, bearing long leaves, which hang down into the water. Marine plants form vast submarine forests at the southern extremity of America, and are so strong and buoyant that they frequently raise large stones from the bottom. Myriads of animals and parasitical plants inhabit these forests of the deep. A marine phenomenon exists, discovered in Columbus' time, and called the Sargasso sea, in the ocean west of the Azores, which has the appearance of an intricate mass of floating vegetation, occupying an area equal to that of France.—Henry Kirke, in Appleton's Journal.

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINALS.

Just now a great deal is being said and written about education; whether the mind of a boy is to be trained to its utmost capability of receiving and retaining knowledge; or whether, instead, his head is to be crammed with technical facts in one or two branches. Yet it is just probable that but few schoolboys in England, under whichever system they be brought up, could rightly answer the question: "What is the color of an Australian native?"

It is a common crime with "new chums" to call the blacks "natives," thereby insulting many a true native within hearing; for be it known that blacks are "blacks," or, more politely, aboriginals, whereas "natives" are of good English stock, doing full justice to their ancestors; and they are, moreover, proud of their title of natives.

Of the Australian black there are now two varieties, which may be respectively named tame and wild. The former is that most frequently seen, and presents about the most wretched specimen of humanity conceivable. One or two usually hang about townships, and are ever to be found somewhere near the public house veranda. They dress up in all sorts of, cast-off clothes, and are generally uncommonly dirty. Grog is their great idea; and on it they bestow the numerous sixpences or shillings they get thrown to them. If once the black gives up his health-giving, out-door life, and commences loafing about the more civilized parts, he is sure to die off rapidly.

Nearly every one of these hangers-on is troubled with a distressing cough, which is the result of their unhealthy life, undergoing all sorts of self-imposed privations—now living too well and becoming intoxicated, then starving and wandering in search of food, all the time but half clad, and yet imagining themselves as well off as the English, and so taking none of that trouble for their own well-being which they would do were they in a wilder state.

When in this half-and-half condition, they are about as lazy as it is well possible for man to be, and appear to care for nothing but food and lodging for the moment, and a smoke and a "nip" as frequently as they can get one.

They are very independent; and will but seldom do a stroke of work unless under immediate promise of tobacco or other articles valuable in their eyes.

It is, however, curious that they actually do work well when with parties bent on pleasure, and not on business. They are even hard-working out shooting or fishing in boats, etc.

Little black boys are frequently employed on stations; and then, if they take kindly to the place, are of great use. They early manage to stick on the back of a horse, and are thus able to do much in the way of getting up horses from the paddock and taking short messages. As they get older they become invaluable as bush-riders, as they care for nothing, ride at anything, and apparently never get killed, even by the most crashing falls. At about sixteen years of age they begin to get sulky, give back as good as they get, and finally bolt suddenly. They join some tribe that they have heard of in the neighborhood, and are made men of by passing through the mysteries of the "Borer."

The places used by the blacks for this ceremony are not at all uncommon. A circle, some forty yards in diameter, is surrounded by a mound of earth, through which there is one outlet by a trench, which runs in a straight line for sometimes more than a quarter of a mile. The trees all round about are usually carved and cut in the most extraordinary fashion. The chief visible result of the performances is the knocking out of two particular teeth, after which a black is considered of age, and immediately appropriates to himself a "gin" or wife; in fact, he becomes a man of the tribe, and no longer a child. It is noteworthy that all the black children appear to be greatly under the influence of the "gins," never daring to disobey them.

Being a man, he can now join in the hunting expeditions; moreover he gets "first bites" at meals, for it is a custom of these gentry for the men to seat themselves, and gnaw at their food till satisfied, continually throwing half-picked bones, etc., over their shoulders, to be scrambled for by the "gins" and the children, who in their turn pass them on in the same manner to the dogs.

Occasionally one meets with other works of blacks beside the "Borer" camps. In certain rivers are to be seen vast chains of pools, all artificial, in which tribes of blacks have been wont to catch fish to supply any special gathering of the tribe, as, for instance, the festival of the "Borer."

When in his wild state the black is exceedingly active, and very sharp in all bush-lore. It is thus that he is often of great use to those who are, for any purpose, actually in the wild parts. Steady and continuous work does not suit him at all; but he is very clever at getting hold of almost any sort of animal or bird; he is a great hand at "tracking," and is ever on the lookout for the tracks of everything, of which he takes notice apparently involuntarily.—New Homes for the Old Country, by George S. Baden-Powell.

BEAUTIFUL HANDS.—Two charming women were discussing one day what it is which constitutes beauty in the hand. They differed in opinion as much as the shape of the beautiful member whose merits they were discussing. A gentleman friend presented himself, and by common consent the question was referred to him. It was a delicate matter. He thought of Paris and the three goddesses. Glancing from one to the other of the beautiful white hands presented for his examination, he replied at last: "I will give it up. The question is too hard for me. But ask the poor, and they will tell you the most beautiful hand in the world is the hand that gives."

CONVERSATION.—Good, kind, true, holy words dropped in conversation may be little thought of; but they are like seeds of flowers or fruitful trees falling by the wayside, borne by some bird afar, haply thereafter to fringe with beauty some barren mountain side, or to make glad some lonely wilderness.

PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS

—ARE—

NOT EQUALED FOR PURITY AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE.

Their peculiar construction and arrangement gives them extraordinary power.
Their Solo Stops are most remarkable for beauty and variety of effect.
They are constructed in the most thorough and perfect manner.
They invite special attention to their

SOLO STOPS.

THE VOX HUMANA,

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE EOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The reception at the White House to-day fully equaled in the splendor of its details that of any former occasion. The ceremony commenced with the reception of the diplomatic corps, which formally was executed by Secretary Fish. The ministers were resplendent in full court costume, and many of them, accompanied by the ladies of their families, were headed by Blacque Bey, the dean, followed by Sir Edward Thornton, and all were presented in the order of their rank.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 1.—The loss by ice to-day is estimated at $200,000. The chief loss is in coal barges torn from their moorings.

ATLANTA, Jan. 2.—The up and down passenger trains collided on the Macon and Western railroad, thirty-seven miles from this city, this morning. Eight negroes were killed, and ten or twelve negroes and three whites injured. Three cars and engines were wrecked. Carlotta Patti and troupe were on board. Their wardrobe and piano are a total wreck. Patti was active in giving relief to the wounded. The negroes were emigrating to Mississippi.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.—The Fifth Avenue Theater, on Twenty-Fourth street, adjoining the Fifth Avenue Hotel, was burned to the ground soon after the audience, which had assembled to witness the play of "False Shame," had retired. They had scarcely more than dispersed when the fire was discovered.

HEMPSTEAD, TEXAS, Jan. 2.—Heavy rains caused the Brazos river to rise fifteen feet to-day. The center span of the railroad bridge, five miles west of Hempstead, on the Austin branch railroad, was carried away. This was a temporary structure, used while the new iron bridge is being erected. Loss several thousand dollars. Freights and travel westward obstructed for the present.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 3.—Troops that have been operating against the Apaches near Camp Verde, in Arizona, returned to their camp December 17. Lieutenant Rose, commanding a detachment of the Fifth Cavalry and the Hual Apa scouts, fought Apaches twice in the Red river country. One killed and thirteen warriors captured, among them several women with their children. They destroyed large quantities of Indian supplies.

A detachment under Captain Price captured eleven prisoners, mostly women. Another expedition destroyed several camps.

General Crook has his entire mounted forces in the field, and they are moving in every direction against the Indians.

Captain Randall's force had several engagements in the Basin, and killed twenty-five warriors and captured their women and children.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—There were two hundred and four deaths during the past week, of which sixty were from smallpox.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Jan. 4.—The Selma, Rome and Dalton road, one of the most important lines on the great Southern mail and passenger route, badly damaged by late floods, is now repaired, and trains have resumed on schedule time.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—Stokes was found guilty of murder in the first degree. Sentence deferred till Monday.

The jury came into court at twelve minutes past eleven, having been absent three hours, and, in reply to the usual interrogatories, announced that they found the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree. There was a marked sensation in the court at the announcement of the verdict. The prisoner turned ashy pale, and his sister wept aloud. The district attorney moved that the sentence of law be pronounced, but, at the suggestion of Tremain, the judge deferred passing sentence until Monday. The jury, it transpired, on retiring stood ten for murder in the first degree, and two for manslaughter in the third degree.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6.—Louisiana matters came up in the Senate to-day, upon Senator Sherman's resolution of inquiry into the facts of the election for President in that State and Arkansas.

Although Senator West objected, it is not doubted that the resolution will pass. It will probably lead to a general debate on Louisiana matters.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 7.—In a conversation to-day the President declared that "his purpose in recognizing the Pinchback government was only to enable the parties to make up a case for the court. He did not regard it material which party he recognized; it was necessary only to recognize one or the other. The military were only ordered to preserve the peace. Pinchback's proclamation, ordering citizens not to assemble, he regards as an outrage on the constitution, and puts Pinchback's party in the wrong. The President has now no fear of any violation of the peace, and says the whole difficulty will soon be settled by the proper legal tribunal."

FOREIGN.

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—Prosecutions have been instituted against Roman Catholic journals in this city and in the provinces which have published the recent papal allocution. Excitement on this subject is increasing throughout the empire.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—Hundreds of agricultural laborers are out of employment here, because the farmers refuse to pay the wages they demand. They are preparing to emigrate to Brazil.

ROME, Jan. 3.—The Pope, on receiving Palatine Guard yesterday, made a brief address, alluding to the persecutions of the church, and declaring that the cities of Europe were dancing on perilous ground.

Meeting of the Legislature.

The past few days have been full of excitement in New Orleans, owing to the well-understood purpose of the Legislature to meet and organize, in spite of the Pinchback assembly at Mechanics' Hall. We have never seen so large an assemblage of the citizens of this city as that which gathered in front of Odd Fellows' Hall on Monday, the sixth instant, at noon, to give their presence and moral support to the Legislature chosen by the people. There was no disturbance, and we believe there will be none. Congress will be compelled to order an investigation, and we think the prospects are brightening somewhat for the triumph of right and justice. We give the proceedings of the Legislature on Monday.

THE SENATE.

President Campbell called the Senate to order at about a quarter before one o'clock.

The calling of the roll showed fourteen Senators present, as follows:

Edward Booth, D. S. Cage, H. J. Campbell, E. M. Graham, A. S. Herron, B. F. Jonas, A. H. Leonard, A. J. Lewis, W. B. McDonald, C. J. C. Puckett, J. M. Thompson, A. Voorhies, J. S. White and R. C. White. Lacking five of a quorum.

Up to half-past twelve o'clock the Senate was waiting for a quorum, which was momentarily expected, as five Senators had announced their intention of attending at one o'clock.

At one o'clock the Senate took a recess until two o'clock.

The Senate was again called to order at five minutes past two o'clock. Fourteen members present, as above.

After the calling of the roll, Mr. Thompson arose and said:

"Mr. President, the House has adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, and, as we lack a quorum and can transact no business, I move that we do now also adjourn until twelve o'clock to-morrow."

The motion prevailed.

HOUSE.

At an early hour Lafayette square and vicinity began to fill up with continued and large arrivals of citizens, who, although conjecturing that the Legislature would assemble at Lyceum Hall, drifted toward that building, remaining quiet, and eagerly canvassing on all sides the outlook for the day.

By eleven o'clock there were gathered in the square and on St. Charles street fully ten thousand persons. At that hour intimation was in some manner gained that Odd Fellows' Hall had been selected as the place of meeting, and accordingly the crowd gradually surged thither, completely blocking the streets contiguous thereto.

Shortly after eleven it became clearly defined that Odd Fellows' Hall would be the place of meeting; and hence the anxious ones crowded toward its entrance with a vigor which bespoke an extraordinary eagerness to obtain desirable locations when the doors should open.

At about half-past eleven the legislators, having concluded their caucus at the St. James, proceeded to the hall, into which they made most difficult ingress, the throng pressing closely together in every available space, even up to the first landing of the hall stairway, but here a competent force of sergeants-at-arms barred the progress of all except members and those having an otherwise right to enter.

The hall proper was partitioned about midway, leaving a vacant space at the end fronting Camp street, while in the other division there were arranged chairs for the members, stage for the speaker, etc.

The Senate chamber was improvised much after the same fashion, in what is commonly known as the supper-room.

At ten minutes past twelve Speaker Monroe called the House to order, when, the clerk calling the roll, forty-seven members answered to their names.

ROME AND THE BIBLE.—Von Schulte, the president of the Old Catholic Congress at Cologne, in his closing speech severely denounced the custom of placing the education of the young in the hands of the priests. He said the experiment had been tried for a thousand years in Spain, France and Italy, and the result was that all the men were atheists and all the women bigots. He said five of his best years had been spent in a most Catholic gymnasium, and after that, in the higher studies, he had had the services of a pre-eminently religious teacher, and all that time had never got one glimpse of the Bible in its original languages. "Be assured," said he, "that so long as the work of education is monopolized by ecclesiastics the Bible will be to all Catholics a sealed book."

In a visit to Brazil, some years since, we learned that there were many priests in and about Rio Janeiro who had never read the Scriptures; and we recently met a superior woman, who had been for some months engaged in a very interesting mission work among the commune in Paris, and she assured us that she found these people entirely ignorant of the simplest facts of the gospel.

Rome, in order to control the conscience and will of her people, finds it necessary, so far as possible, to deprive them of the privilege of looking into God's word.—Our Church Work.

Our Defects and the Remedy.

From the able report of the Committee on the State of the Church, prepared by Dr. L. C. Garland, and adopted by the North Mississippi Conference, we extract as follows:

In the first place, class meetings have been revived in only a few localities. These have always been found to be exceedingly valuable in building up and edifying the membership of the church. Can they not be revived everywhere by insisting, more than has been done, upon their utility, and by persuading the people to make a fair trial of them? And may not something be done to render them less repulsive to those who stay away from them? The only objection of which we have heard comes from those who are reticent by their natural constitution, or who are timid and do not like to speak of their spiritual exercises in the presence of others. Why not remove this objection by introducing into these meetings the voluntariness of speech that exists in the love-feasts? There nobody speaks who does not choose to do so. Nobody stays away from fear of being called on to speak. And so it would be in the class meeting, if the same voluntariness prevailed. To get members to attend these meetings at all and upon any terms would be a step forward. For if they will but go and listen to the experience of others, and to the instructions of a judicious leader, they will find much to suit their own cases. They will at least have been brought into the atmosphere of spiritual influence, and in all likelihood they will soon lose their prejudices and come to love the meetings they now neglect.

In the second place, domestic worship is still deplorably neglected. The bearing of family worship upon Christian character is not rightly appreciated. No man who bows in prayer, morning and night, around an altar erected to God within the precincts of his own home can bring in the eyes of his family a reproach upon his religious profession unless he be a consummate hypocrite. The law of consistency, as well as the feeling of self-respect, will exert a powerful restraining influence upon him. A man in a bad temper or in a peevish humor cannot kneel down and pray in the midst of his household without a blush of shame; nor can he rise from his devotions to make such ungodly exhibitions before his family. So important do we consider family prayer that we are prepared to say that a man who observes it is in no danger of backsliding, while one who neglects it is ever in danger of falling away. Besides, who can meet the responsibilities of the parental relation and discharge successfully the difficult and delicate duty of training up children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord without invoking, in a family capacity, the blessing of God upon the task? And who would have their children to grow up without the hallowed associations and sympathies that cluster about the family altar? This means of grace is too important to be neglected. No excuse can be accepted for its omission. If the head of a family cannot pray extempore, let him read a prayer out of some book of devotions. If he can do no more, let him read a portion of the Scriptures and sing a hymn, and then kneel down and repeat the Lord's Prayer.

In the third place, parents are very negligent of another duty, namely, the early consecration of their children to God by infant baptism. The children of the Hebrews were brought into covenant relation with God on the eighth day after birth; and yet there are believing parents among us who do not bring their children into this relation at all. It must be because they know neither their duty nor their children's privilege. The pastors of the church should occasionally discourse upon the obligations of parents in this regard, and upon the advantages which they and their children would derive from the observance of this ordinance.

In the fourth place, the piety of the church is represented as seriously damaged by the intermission of the means of grace for about a third part of the Conference year, in consequence of the condition of many of our houses of worship. The rural churches are generally without the means of being warmed; on which account Sunday schools are closed during the winter season. For a like reason the attendance of the people upon the preached word is small; and through inattention to the appointed means of grace the Christian zeal of the membership is abated, and every interest of the church set back to a degree that requires the labor of half a year to recover from the loss. The church must set about the correction of this evil without delay.

In the fifth place, we are not utilizing the local element in our ministerial organization as we might do and as our English brethren are doing. One of the districts was reported as being entirely destitute of this arm of the service, except on one of the circuits. There is a great amount of service which local ministers can perform, in preaching, in holding social meetings, in visiting the sick, and in other ways, if they be diligent and faithful in their calling. Our system, in this particular, does not need revision, but it needs a proper development to give it its full efficiency. The Quarterly Conferences ought to be more cautious in giving licenses, that none may be given to unworthy men. They should never renew the license of a man who does not preach statedly. And the presiding elders should organize the service of the local ministers so as to bring it into closer sympathy and harmony with the regular itinerant work. Though it was not reported in open Conference, we happen to know what one of our presiding elders has accomplished in this direction, and we hope that the example will be contagious.

Relating to the state of the church, here are other defects which time and space will not allow us to discuss. Having called your attention to the principal ones, the question now is: How are they to be remedied? In no other way than by setting about their correction at once in the diligent use of such means as are likely to prove successful. A work is often as good as done when it is seriously and earnestly commenced. And among the means to be employed, there is one to which we wish specially to direct your attention. Indeed, we consider it to be our only means, yet, thanks be to God, a sufficient one for the radical correction of the evils complained of, and it consists in a plain and simple and earnest proclamation of the doctrines and duties of Christianity, in reliance upon the Holy Ghost to make an application of the truth to the hearts and consciences of the hearers. Omit this means, and whatsoever else you may do will effect nothing. If members of the church, under a faithful ministration of the word, are not brought to see their duty and to feel the weight of their Christian obligations, then all other means are useless. But if you can soundly convert a soul and fill it with the love of God, you prepare it to engage at once in every good work with activity and zeal. Elevate, then, the membership of the church to a higher level of Christian experience; inscribe "Holiness to the Lord" upon every frontlet, and at once you will see all the interests of the church revive. People will flock to the house of the Lord with gladness, and will no longer complain of the length of sermons. Prayer meetings and class meetings will be regularly attended. An altar of prayer will be erected in every home. Children will be early consecrated to God, and will be trained up in the fear of the Lord. Houses of worship will be made comfortable at all seasons of the year. Parsonages will be built and ministers better cared for. Your missionary treasury will overflow with contributions, and prosperity will reign throughout your borders. But, on the other hand, let piety die out of the hearts of the people, or let it but materially decline, and nothing that you may do will arrest the tendency of things from bad to worse. All your church machinery will become as silent and as useless as a frozen waterfall.

Conference Items.

SOUTH GEORGIA.

The South Georgia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South met in annual session, in Thomasville, Georgia, at nine o'clock, December 11, 1872. The exercises were opened with religious service by Bishop E. M. Marvin, of St. Louis, Missouri, who is the presiding officer.

The roll was called by the assistant secretary, Rev. S. D. Clements. Quite a number of the members were absent, at many of them arrived during the day. Four had died, among them the old and efficient secretary, who had served the church in this capacity for over twenty years—Rev. John Blakely Smith. The names of the other three are: Revs. C. R. Jewett, C. A. Crowell and John H. Robinson, all prominent and effective laborers.

Fifteen lay delegates answered to their names, and were enrolled in the list of membership.

Dr. O. L. Smith, president of Emory College, made his report to the Conference. This college has sent out for hundred and eighty-seven graduates, ninety-six of whom have entered the ministry. A strong appeal was made for a sufficient endowment fund, the lack of which has greatly retarded the workings of the institution.

The report was referred to the Committee on Education.

Bishop Pierce, at the request of the president, made a statement in reference to the new college building, which is to cost $40,000. He called for $1000 from each Georgia Conference. The roll was called and the Conference subscribed $1,130.

Rev. Mr. Lyon, a returned missionary from Syria, was introduced.

Rev. J. B. McGehee, president of Andrew Female College, made his report, which was referred to the Committee on Education.

Dr Lovick Pierce made his appearance this morning for the first time during the session. He has now nearly reached his eighty-ninth birthday.

The Conference met in the Methodist church, at three o'clock, for the purpose of engaging in the memorial services of the deceased members of the Conference. Dr. L. Pierce, who was assigned to conducting the exercises, being too feeble to perform his part, his place was filled by the appointment of Rev. S. Anthony, who conducted the exercises.

After a few impressive remarks by Bishop Marvin, Dr. O. L. Smith read the memoir of Rev. J. H. Robinson, a superannuated preacher.

Rev. R. W. Dixon read the memoir of Rev. Churchwell A. Crowell, one of the active members of the Conference. The deceased was born in North Carolina, and died in Sumter county, Georgia, in December of 1871.

Dr. O. L. Smith read the memoir of Rev. Charles R. Jewett, who was born in Macon, Georgia. He had been in the regular work for twenty-eight years and more. He died near Macon, July 10, 1872. He was the pastor of the church in Thomasville for the last two years, where he had become the favorite of the entire church.

Rev. R. W. Dixon read the memoir of Rev. John Blakely Smith, who was also born in North Carolina, and died near Americus, Georgia, in September, 1872.

He was one of the most prominent members of the South Georgia Conference, having filled most all the offices in the church. He had been secretary of the Conference for twenty-two years, and was a most efficient officer, and his place will be hard to fill.

Bishop Pierce made a short address expressing his high appreciation of the deceased ministers, and his sympathy with the Conference and bereaved families.

Bishop Marvin followed in a few remarks, calling upon those who had known the deceased more intimately to speak of them.

Rev. S. Anthony spoke in reference to Rev. Mr. Crowell, and Rev. R. B. Lester in reference to Rev. C. R. Jewett.

Rev. G. S. Johnson detailed the incidents of the last hours of Rev. J. H. Robinson; and Rev. A. M. Wynn the last incidents in the life of Rev. J. B. Smith, and those attendant upon his burial.

Dr. L. Pierce made what he deemed his farewell address to the Conference. The Bishop was requested to appoint him a missionary agent, which will be his sixty-eighth appointment.

The names of the following transfers were announced by the Bishop: G. J. Pearce, G. R. Kramer, H. H. Parks, J. V. M. Morris, M. H. White, J. P. Wardlaw, G. W. Hardaway, B. H. Sasnett and George Bright.

The Committee on the Southern Christian Advocate made their report, which was adopted, indorsing the paper and the editor, Dr. F. M Kennedy, and pledging renewed efforts for its circulation. Bishop Pierce made an impressive speech in its behalf.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals made their report, which was adopted, indorsing the management of the publishing interests at Nashville, and the Southern Review, published at St. Louis.

A collection was taken up to furnish a room for Dr. Haygood in the new Publishing House in Nashville, Tennessee, and $130 were raised.

Missionary money collected during the year, $6,015.88.

Collected for superannuated preachers and their widows and orphans, $5,573.45.

For support of Bishops, $1,430.95.

The statistics show that there are 25,724 members—an increase of 1,272.

Resolutions returning the usual votes of thanks were passed. The Conference proceeded to select a place for holding the next session of the Conference, and Macon was selected.

NORTH GEORGIA.

A correspondent of the Nashville Christian Advocate furnishes the following items of this Conference, which was held at Atlanta, November 27, Bishop Marvin presiding:

On Thursday morning we had a delightful episode. Bishop Andrew, among other bequests to his friends, left for Bishop Marvin an ancient razor that had been handed down to him through another Bishop from Bishop Asbury. This interesting relic Bishop Pierce presented in open Conference to Bishop Marvin. Both of the Bishops were happy in their remarks. As Bishop Marvin does not shave at all, the old razor will not lose its edge. I send you an account of this presentation, taken from the Atlanta Constitution:

"The regular order was suspended by the occurrence of one of the most pleasing and touching episodes of the session.

"Bishop Pierce, whose very presence is an eloquent oration, addressing Bishop Marvin, remarked that he was not a worshiper of images, nor did he believe that there was any atonement in the bones of dead saints. But he was fond of relics of the past, particularly when they are consecrated by association with the great and good. Bishop Andrew, that great and good man, revered by all the church, in his last moments sent messages of love to some of the brethren, and articles of property to others. To Bishop Marvin he had sent—not silver nor gold, nor pearl from the ocean, nor gem from the mountain, for he had none of these—it was a razor and case that had belonged to the revered Bishop Asbury, by whom it was presented to Bishop Andrew. Bishop Pierce entreated that Bishop Marvin would accept this little piece of property, valuable in the associations that are connected with it, with the wish that the time of his possession and use of it might be long, happy and useful.

"Bishop Marvin responded in a feeling and impressive manner. He stated that yesterday he had an intimation that he had been remembered by Bishop Andrew in this way, but he had no thought of any public or formal presentation. He was not raised a Methodist, for his parents were not favorably inclined toward them. Yet his mother made him one. He could never forget the moment of his conversion to the faith, when a boy eight or nine years old. Up to that time he had the most inveterate prejudices against Methodism. His mother, who was deeply pious, instilled into him religious sentiments of the most commanding character. One day two young Methodists came to his mother's house and staid to dinner. They spent the time in conversation about the Scriptures and in singing; in both exercises his mother felt an absorbing interest. As the young men rode down the lane his mother stood at the door watching them, and, drawing a long breath, remarked: 'I don't know but what these Methodists are doing good after all.' This decided him to cling to that faith. While he had no hereditary tie to Methodism, he had ecclesiastically in this memento of two Bishops a strong and enduring one.

"He had known Bishop Andrew since 1813. It was at the Missouri Conference that year that Bishop Andrew ordained him a deacon. He should never forget his remarks to that class—more especially one remark that had exerted a vital and extraordinary influence upon him: 'When the people are starving for bread don't mock them by scattering flowers before them.'

"He afterward, on another occasion, preached on 'Consecration,' from Rom. xii, 1. He had groaned over that sermon; it had deeply graven itself on his mind. He was distinctly conscious that Bishop Andrew had touched his character more deeply than any man, living or dead. To be remembered by him affects him deeply. During last winter he came across Asbury's journal, presented by a daughter of Barnabus McHenry. Reading it, he could see the church grow. His Christian experience was deeper from reading it. He accepted this memento of two Bishops with the utmost gratitude and deepest reverence. He would venerate it, not with superstition, but with a tender and lasting regard. He had recently been presented with another relic. A friend who was present while the pulpit of the City Road Chapel in Europe was being removed, obtained a piece of the wood, and, affixing an inkstand to it, presented it to him. He would cherish them, and long after he was dead hoped that they would be in the hands of Bishops of the church."

Eighteen promising young men were admitted on trial, and on Sunday morning twenty-seven were ordained deacons. The statistical report shows a net gain of over two thousand members. It is believed that since the war Georgia has lost fully ten thousand Methodists by emigration. I wish you would exhort the churches beyond the Mississippi to look after them. Most of them have gone to Arkansas and Texas. It is very sad to think that the wolves may devour some of them before their new shepherds find them out.

BEFORE THE WEDDING.

Milk-white and honey-sweet its flowers
The locust-tree is shedding;
O, if this weather would but stay,
I could not ask a lovelier day,
To-morrow, for my wedding!
Yes, 'tis, in truth, my bridal path
The wind with flowers is strewing,
The thing a woman says she wants
She's always sure of doing;
And, from a child, I have declared
I'd choose a maid to tarry,
And single-handed fight my way,
Before I'd ever marry
(Though he, by all his deeds and words,
Were worth and wisdom proving)
A Methodist itinerant,
And keep forever moving,
Moving, moving, moving—
Just two years in a place
Stopping here and off again,
With scarce a breathing space.

But when camp meeting came around,
A year ago this summer,
The Sudbury people had a tent,
And I, with Sister Hartley, went,
And first heard Brother Plummer.
A young man looking for a wife,"
Was some one's sly reminder.
"And he may look for all of me,"
I said, "and never find her."

But when I came to hear him preach,
He told the gospel story
So thrillingly, through all the grove
Went up one shout of "Glory!"
Rough men were bowed, hard sinners wept,
I owned his power to hold me—
His glowing fervor, like a spell,
Against my will controlled me.
"For, who is he?" I said, my own
Admiring thoughts reproving:
"A Methodist itinerant,
Who keeps forever moving,
Moving, moving, moving—
Just two years in a place.
"That's too hard a way," thought I,
"To run the Christian race!"

I said the preacher pleased me not—
I did not wish to meet him;
And, when we met, I tried to see
How coldly formal I could be
And courteously treat him;
But when a woman tries to hate
Be sure it's love's beginning;
The more I frowned, the more I fell
That he my heart was winning;
Dath, (may the Lord forgive!) I found
The pass, unless he fled it,
And sweeter seemed the blessed word
Of Scripture, if he read it;
And from the closing hors-feast, when,
As we walked home together,
He led me down a quiet path,
And calmly asked me whether
"My future should be one with his?"—
And I must take or lose him,
I felt my hold on earthly joy
Was dust should I refuse him.
"But if I love, there's but one way,"
I said, "my love of proving:
And I am willing, for your sake,
To keep forever moving,
Moving, moving, moving—
Just two years in a place—
Happy, wheresoe'er I go,
If I but see your face!"

So now my bridal blossoms fall,
These locust-flowers sweet-scented!
My future pathway is the one
I've always thought that I would climb,
Yet I am well contented!
We choose not for ourselves; we go
The way the Conference sends us;
But rough or smooth, we know, through all,
A Father's care attends us,
His perfect strength our weakness shields,
His patient love broods o'er us—
What matters it what changes till
The years that lie before us?
We only pray we may be kept
From faithless servants proving,
And onward, as our footsteps press,
May they be heavenward moving!

Sin No More.

This command was given by the Savior, when on earth, to a woman that had been a sinner, and had been caught in the very act itself. The scribes and Pharisees, the bitter enemies of Christ, brought her to the Savior and said unto him: "Master, this woman was taken in adultery, in the very act. Now Moses in the law commanded us that such should be stoned; but what sayst thou? This they said, tempting him, that they might have to accuse him. But Jesus stooped down, and with his finger wrote on the ground, as though he heard them not. So when they continued asking him, he lifted up himself and said unto them: He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her. And again he stooped down and wrote on the ground; and they which heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last; and Jesus was left alone, and the woman standing in the midst. When Jesus had lifted up himself and saw none but the woman, he said unto her: Woman, where are those, thine accusers? Hath no man condemned thee? She said: No man, Lord. And Jesus said unto her: Neither do I condemn thee. Go, and sin no more."—John viii, 3, 11.

We have also the impotent man that Christ made whole at the pool. After he was made whole Christ found him in the temple, and made himself known unto him and said unto him: "Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee."—John v, 14.

Now we believe that the sins of this man and the sins of this woman were all forgiven them. To the man Christ says: "Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." To the woman Christ sayeth: "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more." Therefore we conclude that they were both pardoned and cleansed from all their sins; and this must be true or it would have been as impossible for them to have obeyed the command of Christ, "Sin no more," as it is for a corrupt tree to bring forth good fruit, or they to pardon their own sins. Hence it is clear that this man and this woman, commanded by Christ to sin no more, were both Christians. And if so, this command of Christ applies with equal force to all Christians in every age of the world. Christ says to all Christians that have been pardoned, and born of God: "Go, and sin no more;" "sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee." But the saints of this world, like the scribes and Pharisees that came to Christ, say that it is impossible for any Christian man on earth to obey this command of Christ, namely: "Go, and sin no more." They say that there is not a man on earth that does not sin every day and hour of his life, and therefore it is impossible for any man to obey this command that Christ has given: "Go, and sin no more." If this be true, it will follow, first, that Christ did wrong to give the command when he knew that neither the man nor woman to whom he gave it could keep it, or that any other man or woman on the face of the earth would ever be able to obey it. Now either Christ was wrong in giving the command, "Sin no more," or your opinion is wrong, that says that no man or woman on earth can live without sinning.

Now the question is, Who is wrong, Christ or you? Christ says: "Go, and sin no more." He believed they could do this, or he never would have commanded it. Your belief is that no man or woman on earth can do this; that it is impossible for any man or woman to live in this world and "sin no more." Now I am inclined to believe that our blessed Savior is better than you, and that he has more sense than you; therefore I believe he is right and that you are wrong. If your opinion be true, it will follow, secondly, that there is not a saint on earth, all men and women are sinners, and they must continue to be sinners as long as they live; and if they continue sinners as long as they live they must die sinners, and if they die sinners, where Christ is they cannot come; and as Christ is in heaven above, on the right hand of God, no man or woman that die in their sins can be saved, because sinners cannot enter heaven, where Christ is. Therefore, according to your opinion, universal damnation is certain. Now there is no chance for you to escape this conclusion, unless you make death the expiation of sin, and if you do this you launch into the opposite extreme, namely, the universal salvation of all men and women; for if death expiates sins, it will certainly expiate the sins of all sinners; that die; and as all must die, in death the sins of all will be expiated, and therefore all we sinners that die in our sins will have a resurrection unto eternal life and not unto "eternal damnation." Now these are two of the legitimate consequences growing out of this Calvinistic opinion that no Christian man or woman liveth and sinneth not, and it does seem to me that the above consequences, growing out of that opinion, are sufficient of themselves to prove to any intelligent mind that such a conclusion is wrong, and cannot be true; but the old adage is, "Convince a man against his will, and he will be of the same opinion still," and hence the advocates of this doctrine, when driven from the field by logical argument, fly for support to the Scriptures, and ask: Does not Solomon say that "no man liveth and sinneth not?" We answer this question by saying: The Bible says again, "He that committeth sin is of the devil," and the Bible does not contradict itself; therefore Solomon did not mean that there was no Christian man that liveth and sinneth not, but that there was no sinner that liveth "and sinneth not." The Bible, all the way through, keeps up a marked distinction between the saint and sinner, and Solomon is not speaking of the saint, but of the sinner. But you ask again: Was not St. Paul a good Christian man, and does he not say, "There are none that doeth good; no, not one?" The apostle is speaking of sinners, not of saints; there is not one sinner "that doeth good; no, not one." But does he not say of himself: "For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil I would not, that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me?" We answer: St. Paul was a good Christian, and he was here speaking of himself, but he was not speaking of himself as St. Paul, the apostle of Jesus Christ, the converted Christian; but as Paul of Tarsus, the persecuting Jew, on his way to Damascus to hunt up and bind in bonds the disciples of Jesus Christ, and take them to Jerusalem to be put to death; and on his way from Jerusalem to Damascus he was arrested by the power of God about noonday, and he fell to the earth and was blind and had to be led to Damascus, and he did not eat or drink for three days; and he is here, in the seventh chapter of Romans, speaking of himself when in that wretched condition, a convicted, penitent sinner; and not as a converted child of God. When a penitent sinner his language is: "O, wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" When a converted Christian his language is: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Now here we have the great contrast between St. Paul's condition when a convicted, guilty, condemned, wretched, penitent sinner, and his condition when he was converted to God. When a penitent sinner he was condemned. When a converted Christian he was pardoned. When a penitent sinner he was wretched. When a converted Christian he was happy. When a penitent sinner he was bound to a body of death. When a converted Christian he was freed from the body of death to which he had been bound. When a sinner he had sin in him, but when a Christian he was freed from all sin, and he thanks God for giving him the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Now the fatal error here, into which thousands have fallen and thousands are in to-day while I am writing this article, is this: they suppose St. Paul to be speaking of himself as a Christian man, in the seventh chapter of Romans, when he is speaking of himself when a condemned, guilty sinner against God, and by confounding these two conditions in the experience of St. Paul together, they make out their case of all Christians being sinners as long as they live, and can but sin every day they live; and hence they do not try to keep from sin because they believe that it is impossible for them to do it, for no man in his senses will ever try to do a thing that he believes is impossible for him to do. This error, we believe, has done more harm and is doing more harm than all the infidel writings now extant. Again, St. John is called in as a witness to prove that the Christian man sins every day and hour of his life. He says: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." St. John says again, in the same epistle, that "whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not; whosoever sinneth, hath not seen Him, neither known him. Little children, let no man deceive you; he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil, for the devil sinneth from the beginning. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin, because he is born of God. In this the children of God are manifest and the children of the devil."

These quotations from St. John, the witness before us, prove that the children of God do not sin, yet you say they commit sin every day. This is your mistake. It is the children of the devil that commit sin every day. You make God's children the devil's children, and God has no children left. You make them all sinners, and therefore they are all the devil's children. Consequently you are wrong and your exposition of St. John viii 10, is also wrong. You make the apostle contradict himself in almost the same breath. The apostle is writing to the whole church, and says if, as a church, we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves; or if we say, as a church, we have not sinned, we make him a liar. This is all true.

Levity in Ministers.

MR. EDITOR: There was an article in your paper, some months ago, which was devoted partly to the above subject. But ministers, as well as others, need to have their pure minds stirred up by way of remembrance, occasionally, in reference to duty and to those things which are liable to injure their usefulness. I have been led to write this article by noticing the conduct of some of our preachers at Conference recently, and on the way to and from Conference. At times my heart was very much pained on account of the levity manifested by some of my brethren. I am not opposed to preachers being cheerful, especially when they meet together at Conference, after the labors and trials of the year through which they have just passed. During the year they are scattered here and there, each cultivating his part of Immanuel's land, for the most part by himself. They have all had their ups and downs, their seasons of trial, and some, perhaps of persecution. If they have done their duty both mind and heart have been intensely engaged. They have been busily employed in their labors, and their hearts have been burdened with the "care of the churches." When, therefore, they meet together at the close of the year's labors and trials, it is perfectly natural that they should feel themselves entitled to a season of rest and recreation. And to some extent they are, and it is right that they should have a time of social enjoyment. They have been separated all the year, they meet but once in the year, and there is nothing wrong in their unbending a little, and becoming like the unstrung bow. But some go too far. They do not stop with being merely cheerful; they run into actual levity. There is too much of that foolish talking and jesting which the apostle forbids. If none but preachers were present, although it would not be right to go so far as some do, yet it would not be so bad—would not do so much harm. But sometimes strangers and persons known to be irreligious are present. When this is the case I am satisfied very great injury is done to the cause of religion. Christ is wounded in the house of his friends. The world rightly expects a Christian minister to be the highest type of a Christian. When, therefore, ungodly men hear ministers of the gospel running on as they sometimes do, the effect must necessarily be exceedingly bad.

The effect upon all irreligious men must be very much to lower their ideas of religion; and upon some, to lead them into downright infidelity. The wicked must have confidence in a minister, to be really benefited by his ministry; but it is impossible for them to have this confidence when the conduct and conversation of the minister do not comport with his high and holy vocation. The minister may be learned and eloquent, he may be able both to instruct and to entertain his hearers, may be able by his eloquence to sway them at will; but as far as those hearers who are wanting in confidence in him are concerned, there is no spiritual profit—his preaching is only "a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

As some one has truthfully and forcibly remarked: "A Christian should never for one moment forget that he is a Christian, and a minister should never forget that he is a Christian minister." He should be sociable, and try, in a proper sense, to "become all things to all men," but he should ever and everywhere have the great end of his mission in view. He should live to do good, to save souls, to glorify God. He should do this in the pulpit, in the social circle, on the cars, at Conference. His words should ever be "seasoned with salt, that they may minister grace to the hearers."

Our Bishop, in opening the recent session of our Conference, among so many good things he said, made the very suggestive remark "that while the pastoral relations of the different ministers of the Conference to their respective charges were, during the sitting of the Conference, suspended, they were concentrated at the seat of the Conference." Suppose we could fully realize this, and feel the same solicitude for the people in the city where the Conference sits, and make the same efforts to save them as we do in reference to the people of our several charges during the year—is it not almost morally certain that we should have a great and glorious revival at every Conference session?

I would kindly but earnestly urge my brethren in the ministry to "think on these things." Do, brethren, I beseech you in the name of our common Master, under whom we labor as yoke-fellows in the gospel, let us have less of this jesting, this lightness, this levity, and more of that gravity which becomes ministers of the gospel.

CHANGE OF SENTIMENT.—The priests in Rome have ascribed the neglect of the theaters in that city to the sadness of the people since the Pope was displaced from power. They, however, seem to be entirely mistaken, for though they were poorly attended while the old-fashioned plays and comedies were presented, since the managers have introduced plays based upon the misdeeds of the Romish Church and priests in the old times of the Inquisition, and on the modern atrocities of the Jesuits, the theaters have been crammed, and the popular detestation has been enthusiastically expressed.

The Articles and Proof-Texts.

MR. EDITOR: You, in common with every sound, thinking Christian, attach great importance to Bible knowledge. And this knowledge, to enable the soul to grow in grace, should be something better than a mere literary acquaintance therewith. This, being taken for granted, requires of the leaders in spiritual matters to not only urge on individuals the earnest study of God's word, but also to so shape and fortify every utterance of essential doctrine, ecclesiastically put forth, with the evidence afforded by revelation. In looking over the articles of faith, put forth by our branch of the great Vine, one beholds the bare technical dogma without one solitary reference to God's word, showing its conformity thereto. This, to one who has pored over concordances, may seem a small thing; but to the general membership it gives no help nor basis for the faith that is in them. When called upon for Scripture for the truth of the doctrine of Christ's humanity and divinity, they halt and fall into perplexity, and the scoffer leers over their discomfiture. The world at present does, as a whole, precious little thinking; and the church, being composed of human beings, partakes, in some measure, of this evil. Events hurry us onward, in quick succession, from point to point, and it requires will-power to overcome this unnatural speed. Here and there looms up a spirit unfretted by this hurly-burly, clothed in its right mind, seeking to enter into the companionship of the grand issues which girdle our lives, and to find a foundation of rock upon which to stand; but the grand caravan moves on regardless of these nobler things. If this approach the state of things, as seen each day, how careful should the church be in all essentials to turn the minds of her members toward the better things—those which minister to eternal life. What better thing can she do than to furnish, with her articles of faith, the evidence of their divine truth, and agreement with the heavenly revelation thereof?

There is not a doubt but that such an adjunct would tend to promote clearer views in the minds of our laity respecting the purely biblical nature of the articles, and shape their thoughts more after the pattern than they are at present. Our young men who are moved to enter the local ranks would thus more surely form correct views, and their minds would be held down to the source of all pure doctrine.

Fill a mind with the blessed truths of God's word, dove-tail them in, show their clear connection, let their spirit be diffused through this mind, and, under the Holy Spirit's aid, it will grow strong in good; but fill it with a mere terminology or antiquated forms of expression, and you turn it adrift, helpless, unfit for life's duties and trials.

We need more cohesive union with plain Bible truths, and less of grand effort after ethereal nothings. Our people need every help for the proper understanding of the doctrines we preach, and where can our help be had unless we draw it from the fountain? Is it improper, therefore, to suggest that it would look better and afford great assistance to our members were proof-texts placed under each of the twenty-five articles? This would prompt investigation, and thus lead to a clear comprehension of the scriptural character of our form of faith. Our present Discipline would not be increased in bulk, nor any addition to its cost involved. The "signs of the times" are speaking, and all should be searching the Scriptures. What with aerial preaching, the weaving of philosophy and scientific baldbie into the simple, grand truths of the gospel, indicates a dangerous course, and if we earnestly desire a covert from the impending storm, let us seek the wisdom from above. If the leaders point the way the army will heed the command.

Praise-Meetings, and How to Have Them.

BY W. S. H. MATHEWS.

The essential element of this kind of religious exercise is praise. Taking the doxology as a text, we merely amplify it for an hour or so. Rev. Thomas K. Beecher is responsible for the statement that in the Straits of Magellan there is a breed of ducks which sailors call "side-wheelers." The reason for the name is found in the fact that by long disuse of wings they gradually lost the faculty of flying, the wings having shrunk far below the usual standard of proportion to the rest of the body. When disturbed by man they skim along on the surface of the water with a queer gyration of legs and the small remaining wings, cutting a figure very similar to a side-wheel steamer.

There's many a congregation of Christian people who have so far lost the God-given faculty of praise as to bear a painful resemblance to these ducks whenever they desire to soar heavenward on pinions of song. I say "God-given faculty of praise" not because all faculties are not God-given, but because man possesses a peculiar pre-eminence in this respect over the other members of the animal kingdom. They praise by "serving uses," as the Swedenborgians say. The tree praises by bearing good fruit. The beast of burden by labor and patience. The domestic animal by love and fidelity to his master. But man not only has the glorious privilege of praising by work and service, but he has the pre-eminent faculty of lifting up his heart unto God. To him is given the many-leaved volume of memory, with its chronicles of past mercies, the ever-present joy of the Holy Spirit in his heart (if indeed he have yet attained), and the joyful looking forward to the things which have not entered into the heart of man to conceive, but which the bountiful Lord hath prepared for them that love him.

I am persuaded that the evangelical churches are suffering a sort of leanness to-day on account of the inordinate emphasis laid on preaching by the Puritans and early reformers. Preaching may lead sinners to turn from the error of their ways, and may edify saints; but it is not the true bread that cometh down from heaven. That is the word of God, whether we take it in the narrow sense of the literal Scriptures merely, or the Incarnate Word who became flesh and dwelt among us.

We are composite creatures, and while we ought to live honestly, soberly and justly in the sight of all men, we must add to this a sense of nearness to God, a joy in the Holy Ghost, that gives us in our hearts a real heaven here below. This latter experience is, in fact, a general opening of our emotional natures to those celestial influences which, like the sun, are ever ready to shine into all dark places, however gloomy and noisome they may be, and however small the opening presented for the admission of the light and comfort.

Now this joy in God comes partly through song. Prayer is quickened by song. The emotions must be lively for real Christian growth. Without the spirit of song in our hearts we are dead trees of the forest, we have no sap, and none of the tender ministrations of shade. We are dry bones, such as Ezekiel saw, which only the breath of God can make to live again. So in a grove of these dead trees (for a non-singing church answers this figure,) a brother wants to know, how shall we infuse again the breath of life? Prayer won't do it alone. The first sign of a coming revival is often seen in a certain warmth of singing. The prayer then begins to manifest more spirit, and presently we have the whole body full of life.

The laity needs to realize more, that as we get nearer to the celestial city we shall know it by the bright light that shines out, and the precious glow of love that fills the whole soul. So if we spend a Sabbath without some increase in this sense of joy and love, however much clearer idea the preacher may have given us of the way, we are like a sailor who has furled sail and spent a day in studying his charts and reckoning. He may know his position better, but he is no whit nearer his destined haven than he was in the morning. Happy indeed for him if the winds and current have not set him back many a mile over which he has already come.

"How have a praise-meeting?" Why, nothing is easier. Let all the people come together to praise. The church will always be full. I never knew it to fail except by some remarkable hinderance of weather. Have a cabinet organ in front of the pulpit, or on the platform itself. Open the meeting with the doxology. Then have prayer, but not too long a one, and let it be a psalm of thanksgiving, and not a metaphysical analysis of the difficulties of believing. Then a good, honest hymn. Take, for instance,

"Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing," to such a tune as "Warwick" or "Dundee" or "Mear." Then let us have a Scripture lesson—a joyful psalm, perhaps. Then another hymn, such as, for instance,

"Sweet is the work, my God, my King," to the tune "Rockingham." If you have some slips printed, it will afford an agreeable variation here to chant together a short psalm, perhaps the twenty-third: "The Lord is my shepherd." There is no trouble in all chanting together; one or two attempts will bring everything into harmony. Then another Scripture lesson, short but suggestive of matter for praise. Then a quieter hymn, such as

"Jesus, lover of my soul."

Then,

"Hark! the voice of love and mercy," to the tune "Zion." Sing in good time, the first two stanzas softly; the last gloriously. Then to the tune "Antioch:"

"Joy to the world, the Lord has come."

There are many new hymns which ought to be in our hymn book. "Nearer, my God, to Thee" is pretty generally known, and "Just as I am, without one plea," and these we can sing. To the tune Hebron,

"Of him who did salvation bring;"
"Blow ye the trumpet, blow,"

tune Lenox;

"There is a land of pure delight,"

to the tune Varina;

"Come, thou Fount of every blessing," to "Nettleton." If generally known, I would sing the favorite Sunday school hymns: "Tell me the old, old story" and "Shall we gather at the river." "Love divine, all love excelling," to the tune "Autumn." And finally,

"All hail the power of Jesus' name," to the tune "Coronation." If the pastor be flexible, and fertile in expedients, short passages of Scripture may be read at intervals; and if a testimony or two (of love-feast brevity) is offered, good. What we want is hearts full of love and praise; and whatever tends toward that end is food for the praise-meeting.

All along in the singing the manner is to be improved as occasion shall serve. Proper expression is not to be overlooked. We are not to shout "Jesus, lover of my soul," as we would "All hail the power of Jesus' name." A good degree of rapidity must be maintained. This will be greatly facilitated if the people are shown how to look out for the accent that marks the division of the music into measures. The observance of the accent, and the consequent lightness of the unaccented syllables, gives elasticity to what is otherwise a painful and heavy exercise.

Then, too, teach them how to sing softly in the tender passages; it saves the voice wonderfully, and gives the soul silence for thought. All these suggestions are practicable with any congregation. The hymns I have selected are favorites, and folks will sing them if they may. And not only will there be an hour of present enjoyment, but the general service of song will show an improvement for weeks after. This is the kind of a meeting we will all have to come to some time, I judge, from what John tells us, and we may as well begin now and get used to it.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Obituaries.

FLORENCE ANNA, wife of Silas Sides, and daughter of the late Rev. John R. Lambuth, died, in Madison county, Mississippi, December 4, 1872, aged twenty years and nearly two months.

She had been piously trained, and when about twelve years of age she gave her heart to God, trusted in the atonement of Christ for salvation, found peace and joy in believing, and consecrated her life to God and his blessed service. In that service she was constant and happy, realizing the divine manifestation to cheer and comfort her. She was a devoted and affectionate sister and wife. Many were her friends. But she has passed away from those on earth to join father and mother and other loved ones in the blessed country where pain, sickness, death and parting are unknown. God's grace was so manifested to her that she had no fears of death, and spoke of her dissolution as if only retiring for a night's rest. How sweet thus to pass from earth to heaven! May the loved ones left behind strive to imitate the lives of those gone before. Then shall they all meet in heaven.

THAT "God is too wise to err and too good to do wrong" reconciles the minds of Christians to thousands of the mysterious dispensations of Providence in life; and upon this principle we humbly bow with resignation to the death of our highly-esteemed brother, RICHARD J. WAGNER, which occurred on the twelfth of October, 1872.

He was a native of Louisiana—born in Washington parish, November 17, 1829. When quite young he professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He was married first, in 1852, to Miss Nancy H. Lovin. He had several children by his first marriage. His second marriage was to Miss Eve Brown, in 1860. Bro. Wagner was a licensed exhorter at the time of his death, and had been for many years. He was a man calculated to be very useful. A large field of usefulness was just opened to him in the new neighborhood in which he had recently settled. But God, in his wisdom, has taken him from the labors and sorrows of earth to his reward in heaven. He leaves a wife and six children to mourn their loss. God bless them and save them!

JOHN A. MILLER.

RURAL RETREAT, CLAIBORNE PAR., Dec. 10.

ELIZA ANN MILLER, daughter of Rev. David L. and Isabell Miller, and consort of Bro. Z. R. Rea, was born in the State of Alabama, August 3, 1837. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South from early childhood. In July, 1865, she was married to Bro. Z. R. Rea, and on the twenty-seventh of November, 1872, she calmly fell asleep in Jesus, leaving many friends to weep over her departure, and to cherish and strive to emulate her many noble Christian virtues.

Sister Rea was a most exemplary Christian. Though having a large family, and living several miles from the church, her seat was seldom vacant on church-days. All who knew her testify that she was not only a loving wife and mother, but a model stepmother. All join the deeply-afflicted husband and children in mourning their loss.

Her death was peaceful and calm—triumphant, as the faithful Christian only dies. Such peace and triumph has never been accounted for in the chilling philosophy of infidelity.

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as down my pillows are."

JOHN A. MILLER.

RURAL RETREAT, CLAIBORNE PAR., Dec. 10.

DIED, at his residence in Enterprise, Mississippi, on the thirtieth of November, 1872, ELIAS BROWN, in his sixty-sixth year.

The subject of this memoir was born in the State of Georgia, March 7, 1807. Many years ago he emigrated to the State of Mississippi, and for several years previous to his death had been a citizen of Enterprise. In 1866 he embraced religion and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, from which time his walk and conversation was that of a Christian in whom there was no guile. Bro. Brown, though a man of a retiring and timid disposition, was at the same time a man of great firmness and unflinching integrity in all things, both great and small; and in nothing did his firmness and integrity stand out in bolder relief than in that of his religion. He was a man of but few words, and those few were always well ordered, and tempered with that charity that "thinketh no evil."

From his retiring and timid disposition, his voice was rarely ever heard in the church or her councils; still his seat was seldom vacant, or his duty as a steward neglected, often contributing more for church and other charitable purposes than his income really justified. He was a man who did not look upon Christianity as consisting in an outward show—in words or in forms; but in deeds—in showing his faith by works. To know the moral worth of this man of God—his Christian integrity and benevolent acts—it was necessary to be intimately acquainted with him; and all who were thus favored admired him as a gentleman, and loved him for his many virtues. But he has left us. His seat is now vacant in the church and at his hospitable fireside; and now, while a widow mourns a husband gone—the church a member taken away—there are many others with whom he held sweet counsel, who are now sad because they can no more walk and talk with him. Of him it may be truly said: "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; even so, saith the Spirit, for they rest from their labors.

THE MASTER'S CALL.

They tell me a solemn story, but it is not sad to me,
For in its sweet unfolding my Savior's love I see;
They say that at any moment the Lord of life may come,
To lift me from this cloud-land into the light of home.

They say I may have no warning—I may not even hear
The rustling of his garments as he softly draweth near;
Suddenly, in a moment, upon my ear may fall
The summons to leave our homestead, to answer the Master's call.

Perhaps he will come in the noontide of some bright and sunny day,
When, with dear ones all around me, my life seems bright and gay!
Pleasant must be the pathway, easy the shining road,
Up from this dimmer sunlight into the light of God.

Perhaps he will come in the stillness of the mild and quiet night,
When the earth is calmly sleeping 'neath the moonbeam's silvery light;
When the stars are softly shining o'er the slumbering land and sea,
Perhaps in the holy stillness the Master will come for me.

I think I would rather hear it; that voice so low and sweet,
Calling me out from the shadows, my blessed Lord to meet,
Up through the glowing splendors of a starry earthly night,
To "see the King in his beauty," in a land of purer light. Parish Visitor.

The Great Curse of China.

BY REV. JOHN LIGGINS, LATE EPISCOPAL MISSIONARY IN CHINA.

Every year adds to the weight of the testimony advanced, respecting the fearful injuries which the opium traffic is inflicting on China, and every year deepens the regret that the English government in India still persists in the manufacture and sale of opium on an immense and ever-widening scale. The Rev. Dr. Williamson, the distinguished English missionary, and the author of "Journeys in North China," says:

"There is hardly a family in China where opium is not a sore, begetting strife and misery to themselves, and hatred to us."

The Rev. Griffith John, of the London Missionary Society, has been fifteen years in China, and he has traveled extensively in the western as well as in the eastern provinces. Writing concerning the people of Szchuen, the province furthest from the seaports, he says:

"Opium is fast eating up the stamina of this sturdy people, and it only requires one or two more decades to convert them into a comparatively imbecile race. Moreover, the opium trade has created a strong prejudice against the missionary and the gospel. The Chinese cannot see how the same people can dispense to them a destructive poison with the one hand, and a saving religion with the other."

The Rev. J. R. Wolfe, a Church of England missionary, of long experience, at Fuchau, writes to the committee of the Church Missionary Society as follows:

"There is not a particle of truth, as far as my experience goes, in the statement that the Chinese people are opposed to the propagation of Christianity, or dislike the missionaries simply because they are such. There is, however, one thing which the Chinese people dislike, and which has tended more than anything else to produce hatred to foreigners, and cause misery and ruin to multitudes of the Chinese people themselves; and that one thing is the act of the British government in compelling the Chinese people, at the point of the bayonet, to buy the opium, when they most virtuously and patriotically protested against it. I have invariably found, in my journeys through the country, that this act of the British government is remembered with deep and lasting hatred by all classes of the people, and is handed down from father to son as one cause why the English should be held in everlasting hatred and contempt."

Equally emphatic is the testimony of another influential missionary of the same church, Rev. Arthur Moule, who has labored long at Ningpo. He says:

"One is ashamed of one's nationality in China. Foreign nations have brought curses and not blessings to the land—curses which the prestige of martial prowess, however thoroughly conceded, cannot obliterate. The Arrow wars, and all the miserable opium history, are known but too well to us all; and there are but few of us who have not tasted, at least, a little of the bitterness with which that history has caused religion preached by the fellow-countrymen of those who brought the plague, to be received. Mission hospitals, opium refuges, here in Ningpo the expulsion of the hated Taepings, as well as many individual cases of integrity and disinterestedness in foreigners, have done something locally to atone for this evil, and raise the foreign name; but in the national, and especially political feeling, I suppose fear and hatred, hatred and fear, rise and fall continually."

In a pamphlet entitled the China Mission, recently issued by the Church Missionary Society, occurs the following:

"The introduction of opium into China has been fraught with most disastrous consequences to its inhabitants; a greater curse to China never could exist; nor can a thoughtful Christian reflect upon the conduct of the English in relation to the opium traffic without shame and remorse."

THE PRESENT CONNECTION OF GOVERNMENT WITH THE TRAFFIC.

It should be distinctly borne in mind that the connection with the traffic of the present English government in India and the home government is as shameful as any former connection, if indeed, it is not more so, on account of the immense amount of testimony concerning the due effects of the traffic which has been laid before them. No one, be it remembered, can grow the poppies, unless employed directly by the government, or licensed so to do; and all must bring the juice obtained therefrom to the government factories at Patna and Benares, to be there manufactured into opium. It is thence sent down to Calcutta, to be sold by auction, and to be shipped to China. An immense tract of country (six hundred miles long by two hundred broad,) containing the best land in India, is devoted to the growth of the popples, and so enormous is the business that the Indian government realizes each year, after all expenses are paid, $36,000,000! In the year 1867-68, the last for which the accounts have been laid before Parliament, the net revenue was £7,049,447, and there is a yearly increase.

The Rev. E. D. G. Prime, D. D., of the New York Observer, was present in December, 1869, at one of the government auction sales in Calcutta, and from his valuable work, entitled "Around the World," I quote what he says on the subject:

"In making mention of some of the productions of the country, the one to be named of first importance as a source of revenue is the great curse of China. Opium had been raised in India long before it came under British rule, but in 1773 the East India Company, becoming aware of its great pecuniary value, assumed the monopoly. It has ever since been raised under the direction and for the benefit of government. The amount exported—nearly all to China—in the financial year of 1869–1870, was in value $58,466,650. The rulers of India and its merchants talk about the opium market and the profits of the sale as they do in London of consols, and as we do of our government securities, just as if it were not an unmitigated curse to the Chinese, who were compelled, at the cannon's mouth, to take it when they steadfastly refused. The government auction sale at Calcutta is a scene of more excitement than I ever witnessed at the Paris Bourse, or among the brokers of New York. I came one day, in the business quarter of the city, upon a crowd of thousands of Mohammedans, Hindoos, Parsees and other natives, not to speak of Europeans, who were wild with excitement. For a moment I imagined that a riot had broken out; but I soon learned that it was the monthly opium sale, in which more persons are interested than in the sale of stocks in our markets."

UNAVAILING APPEALS TO THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT.

After many previous unavailing efforts, the Chinese government, through the Foreign Office, addressed in July, 1869, a dispatch to Sir Rutherford Alcock, the English minister at Peking, earnestly appealing, through him, to the English government and nation, to put an end to a traffic which is fast working the ruin of the Chinese people, and to substitute in India the cultivation of cereals or cotton for the poppy; and the hope is expressed that "England will not still hold to this evil business, earning the hatred of the officials and people of China, and making herself a reproach among the nations."

So writes Prince Kung, the head of the Foreign Office, and the prime minister of heathen China, to the representative of Christian England; and how does that representative act? He surpasses all previous ministers in his efforts to restrict missionary labor and to increase the odious traffic in opium!

At about the same time that this dispatch was received from the Chinese government, Lord Lawrence, then Viceroy of India, appealed to the home government to consent to the Indian government giving up the production of opium, and leave its cultivation, manufacture and sale under proper regulations in the hands of private persons. But even this limited measure of justice and international comity was refused, and the refusal shows how close is the connection of the home government with the traffic, and how directly responsible that government is.

Deputations from the Church Missionary Society first, and then from the London Missionary Society, have waited upon the English Cabinet officers, and presented earnest appeals from these societies that the government traffic in opium should be discontinued; but these appeals have likewise been in vain.—New York Observer.

The Fruit of Gethsemane.

Can you think what it is? As you sit at your well-spread table, and the dish of olives is handed to you, has your mind ever wandered from the green oval drupes to the garden out of Jerusalem, over the little Brook Kedron, at the foot of the Mount of Olives? There, within that sacred inclosure, stand eight ancient trees, preserved and cared for by the monks of the monastery, to which the garden now belongs. Some say these are the very trees that saw the Savior's agony for us. It may be.

The olive lives to a great age—hundreds on hundreds of years. It is ever green, with lance-shaped leaves, silvery white on the under side. It grows very slowly, and seldom attains to more than the height of twenty feet, except in a warm climate.

The little white flowers are in branching racemes—that is, they have separate stalks—and are in long clusters, as currants grow. You know what the fruit is when it is brought to you preserved in salt and water. This is pickled in its unripe state. When matured it is of a dark purple, but is almost too pungent to be eaten without some preparation. The pickled fruit and the oil are in demand the world over.

The oil is pressed from the pulp instead of from the stone or pit. It was used for the most sacred purposes in olden times—for the anointing of God's priests, for the holy lamps and for meat offerings before the Lord. There was a press at the foot of the Mount of Olives, in the garden where our Savior was betrayed. "Oil press" is what Gethsemane means. The trees bear only every alternate year; and then the fruit is picked carefully, reduced to a pulp, put into sacks of coarse linen or feather grass, and pressed. In order to get the oil for our salad.

From the south of France we get the best importation; and we use it in food, in medicine and in manufactures. In Syria, the Holy Land, in Greece and in Africa the olive has its native home; and it has been carried to France and Italy and Spain and to east Florida, in the United States; but it does not flourish well in our country. There is a species of American olive that is found sometimes on the coast of Florida and along the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. It is a large shrub or small tree, and has a globe-like, purple fruit about as big as a gooseberry.

I think you will remember that the olive branch is the emblem of peace, since the dove brought it to Noah in the ark when the waters of the deluge had subsided, and God's righteous anger against the wicked was appeased. The ancients used to crown their victors with olive-wreaths when the battle was over and they had come home triumphant. The athletes, who were to take part in the games, prepared their bodies with olive oil.

Olive wood was used for the doors and posts in Solomon's Temple, and for the two cherubim within the holy of holies; but that was the wild olive, that bore no fruit of itself. It must be grafted into a good tree. See the beautiful significance of bringing it into the temple of God!

Shall we think of the precious olive as the fruit of Gethsemane? And shall we forget him who in the sacred garden was bruised for our transgressions, and in his agony sweat, as it were, great drops of blood beneath the ancient trees?—Christian Banner.

Anecdote of John Wesley's Benevolence.

Caly, the eminent sculptor, one day said to Lord Shelburne: "My Lord, perhaps you have heard of John Wesley, the founder of the Methodists?"

"Oh, yes, that race of fanatics."

"Well, my lord, Mr. Wesley had been urged to have his likeness taken, but always refused. One day he called on me on business, and I began the old subject. 'Well,' said I, 'knowing you value money for the means of doing good, if you will grant my request, I will engage to give you ten guineas for the first ten minutes that you sit, and for every minute that exceeds that time you shall receive a guinea.' 'What!' said Wesley, 'do I understand aright, that you will give me ten guineas for having my likeness taken? Well, I agree to it.' He then stripped off his coat, and laid on the sofa, and in eight minutes I had the most perfect bust I had ever taken. He then washed his face, and I counted to him ten guineas into his hand. 'Well,' said he, turning to his companions, 'I never till now earned money so speedily; but what shall we do with it?' They wished me a good morning, and proceeded over Westminster bridge. They met a poor woman crying bitterly, with three children crying round her. On inquiring the cause of her distress, Wesley learned that the creditors of her husband were dragging him to prison, after having sold their effects, which were inadequate to pay the debts by eighteen shillings. One guinea made her happy. He then went to Giltspur prison. The first ward he entered he was struck with the appearance of a poor wretch, greedily eating potato-skins. He was confined for the debt of half a guinea. Wesley gave him a guinea, and had the pleasure of seeing him liberated, with half a guinea in his pocket. You may imagine, my lord," continued Caly, "that the remaining eight guineas did not go far in aiding such distress as this."

Lord Shelburne was so convinced of the mistaken opinion he had formed, that he immediately ordered some of the busts to embellish the grounds of his beautiful residence.

The Rumseller's Proposal to the Devil.

DEAR SIR:—I have opened apartments, fitted up with all the enticements of luxury, for the sale of rum, gin, wine, beer and all their compounds. Our objects, though different, can be best attained by united action. I, therefore, propose a copartnership. All I want of men is their money. All else shall be yours.

Bring me the industrious, the sober, the respectable, and I will return them to you drunkards, paupers and beggars.

Bring the child, and I will dash to earth the dearest hopes of the father and mother.

Bring me the father and mother, and I will plant discord between them, and make them a curse and a reproach to their children.

Bring me the young man, and I will ruin his character, destroy his health, shorten his life, and blot out the highest and purest hopes of youth.

Bring me the mechanic or the laborer and his own money, the hard-earned fruits of his toil, shall be made to bring poverty, vice and ignorance to his once happy home.

Bring me the warm-hearted sailor, and I will send him on a lee shore, and make shipwreck of all his fond hopes forever.

Bring me the professed follower of Christ, and I will blight and wither every devotional feeling of his heart. I will corrupt the ministers of religion, and defile the purity of the church.

Bring me the patronage of the city and of the courts of justice; let the magistrates of the States of the Union become my patrons; let the lawmakers themselves meet at my table and participate in violations of the law; and the name of law shall become a hissing and a byword in the streets.

Bring me, above all, the moral, respectable man. If possible, bring the moderate temperance man; though he may not drink, yet his presence will countenance the pretext under which our business must be masked. Bring him to our stores, oyster-saloons, eating-houses and hotels, and the more timid of our victims will then enter without alarm.

DULL PREACHERS.—Never complain that a preacher is dull unless you can put your hand on your vest and solemnly declare that you did not overeat at breakfast that morning. The most wide-awake preaching cannot hold its own against Sabbath gluttony.

The Feminine Element of Deity.

The London Quarterly, in discussing the feminine element in our conception of God, says: "To Protestants the worship of the Virgin is a superstition, graceful and beautiful in many of its aspects, no doubt, but, like all other superstitions, liable to run into extravagance, and to ally itself with faucies socially injurious and absurd. We are, therefore, discreet and prudent in not allowing this element to creep into our habits of religious worship. Nevertheless, we have something to learn from it; it indicates a want, an instinct which we have too long disregarded—the want of affectionateness, tenderness and love in our conceptions of the Deity in his relations to us and our relations to him. The reason why our services are so cold, so dry, so formal, so fruitless of any sweet and genial result in actual life, is perhaps owing to our inaptitude or slowness to conceive of the feminine element in the character of our Creator, and to a notion that piety ought always to be manly, as we call it, and never womanly. If, however, any Protestant, believing in the superiority of his faith, contemplates the conversion of the Roman Catholics, he may be sure that he will make little or no progress (especially among women,) until the defect of his cold system is cured and his want supplied; until by him and his church the Supreme comes to be regarded tenderly as well as reverently, with the affections as well as the intellect, familiarly as well as awfully, as a father that pitieth his children, as a shepherd that taketh the lambs in his arms. If from conceptions of dignity and respect of power, awe and majesty associated (and fitly associated) with God, a certain order of minds find it hard to supplement any softer or more commonly human element, they will find whatever the effect may be as regards their personal religion, they will have very small influence indeed over the heart of their fellow-men; they may teach philosophy, but they will not enkindle piety. They will find that what they cannot add, humanity in general will add, because it instinctively must; and that if men are forbidden by philosophy to incorporate pity and soft tenderness into their idea of Supreme Deity, they will fall back upon some other deity associated with the Supreme, less wise and powerful, perhaps, but more gentle and kind. Can we love the same being whom we honor, reverence, worship and obey? We answer, Yes! provided we have presented to us the loving and lovable qualities of his character. Many clever people, however, seem practically to answer No, because from some cause or other they fail to appreciate the sweetness as well as the light of the divine nature. But poor humanity refuses to be balked in its affections, and hence the worship of Notre Dame, instead of Notre Dieu!"

WHY WE REJECT THE APOCRYPHA.—1. Because it was never written in Hebrew.

2. Because it was never quoted by our Lord.

3. Because it was rejected from the canons of the Jews.

4. Because it was rejected from the canon of Scripture by Origin, A. D. 200, St. Epiphanius, A. D. 358, and St. Jerome, A. D. 392.

Besides these reasons for rejecting the Apocrypha in general, we especially reject the books of Maccabees as uncanonical and uninspired:

1. Because Pope Gregory the First, A. D. 590, did so; and, by the late Vatican decree, that must be an infallible judgment.

2. Because the author distinctly disavows inspiration, saying: "If I have done well in writing this history it is what I desired; but if not so perfectly, it must be pardoned me." Second Mac. xv, 39.

A PRIVATE ROOM.—A preacher, says the Holston Methodist, that never wants or needs a private room has no business being a preacher. Private prayer and study are necessary to power in the pulpit. Prayer will produce zeal rather than knowledge; study will produce knowledge rather than zeal. Both together secure power and usefulness. The preacher should not abandon the social circle altogether; but if he never has any time to himself his sermons will be destitute of both unction and ability. In regard to this matter the people are at fault, and they should amend. Give your preacher a private room. Say to him: Your room is ready, and you can go to it when you please. If he never wants a room, ship him at the end of the year, and get one that does.

SOUTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.—The eighty-fifth session of the South Carolina Annual Conference, says the Southern Christian Advocate, convened in the Baptist church at nine o'clock A. M., December 12, 1872. The Bishop not having arrived, Rev. H. A. C. Walker was elected temporary chairman, and Rev. W. C. Power requested to act as secretary.

Religious services were conducted by the chairman. The roll was called, and eighty-three clerical and seventeen lay members answered to their names. The Conference proceeded to the election of officers, which resulted as follows: Rev. A. M. Chreitzberg, president; W. C. Power, secretary, and O. A. Darby, A. J. Stallard, W. D. Kirkland and S. C. Clyde, assistants.

WHAT TO TEACH.—Rev. Charles Brooks, father of the State normal schools in America, was asked by a teacher this question:

"What shall I teach my pupils?"

He answered: "Teach them very thoroughly these five things:

"1. To live religiously.

"2. To think comprehensively.

"3. To reckon mathematically.

"4. To converse fluently; and

"5. To write grammatically.

"If you successfully teach them these five things, you will nobly have done your duty to your pupils, to their parents, to your country and to yourself."

PREACHING is often like a boomerang: it bounds back and hits the preacher.

Religious Intelligence.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, with a population of little more than 100,000 has 95 churches.

THE London Sunday School Union are issuing illuminated reward tickets in French, Italian, German and Dutch.

THE United Brethren recently held a camp meeting in Oregon, which, in its results, is pronounced one of the most glorious ever enjoyed on the Pacific.

DARWIN is engaged in getting up a church in London. It is for Voysey, a preacher whose atheism has justly separated him from the Church of England.

THE new Episcopal cathedral, which it is proposed to build in the city of New York, will cost $2,000,000. Two gentlemen are ready to give $100,000 each.

IT IS SUPPOSED there are about 15,000 children attending Evangelical Sunday schools in Italy. Even this is no slight improvement on the record of five years ago.

THE winter session of the Tabernacle Free College, Brooklyn, for training Christian men and women, has commenced. Five hundred students were lately enrolled.

THE population of Rome is 244,494, of whom 232,675 are Romanists. The remainder are thus distributed—3,798 Protestants; 4,619 Jews, and 3,402 members of other religions.

THE doors of the Wesleyan University having been thrown open to ladies, fourteen passed the examination satisfactorily, and were admitted to the instruction of the school.

A MISSIONARY to China states that if the present ratio of conversions goes on as it has been going for some years back, "by the year 1900 the native Christians in China will number over 2,000,000.

ARCHBISHOP MANNING has prohibited the employment of female vocalists in the Roman Catholic places of worship within his diocese. The prohibition took effect on Sunday, the sixth ultimo.

THE Basle Missionary Society proposes to establish in Persia an institution for receiving and educating orphan children whose parents have died during the late famine. A most timely and commendable enterprise.

MR. BEECHER'S church proposes to raise a fund of $50,000, to be called the "Plymouth Mission Fund" for the endowment of the two missions under the care of the church. This fund will serve as the memorial of the Silver Wedding.

FATHER AGRAS, the zealous converted Mexican priest, died in the city of Mexico, on the eighteenth of October. He was one of the most active and useful coworkers of the American and Foreign Christian Union in that republic.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH, Brooklyn, Mr. Beecher's, contributed last year nearly $500,000 to religious, charitable and educational objects. There were some heavy individual subscriptions to colleges, which swelled the amount to such proportions.

A NEW BISHOP.—Rev. Benjamin J. Haight, D. D., of New York, was chosen Bishop of Massachusetts by the Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church of that diocese, December 4, as successor of the late Right Rev. Manton Eastburn, D. D.

INTELLIGENCE is received from all quarters in Italy of a gradual increase of the membership of the churches of Christ. In some places two or three have joined; in others, ten or fifteen. United gatherings for prayer are held in Rome, from time to time, to the great edification and joy of believers.

DURING the recent Mexican revolution, all the missionaries of the Union, and all the native colporteurs and evangelists, though scattered for a time, were preserved. None of the churches were destroyed; but, on the contrary, a new one of twelve members has been organized in the vicinity of Cadereita.

A NEW SECT is said to be started in Russia, by a monk with the pious name of Seraphim, of which a chief article in the creed is that sinning is essential to give admission to the kingdom of Heaven. Converts to this belief are found already made to hand. The doctrine would, doubtless, take well in our Sunday schools.

THERE has been another enormous "pilgrimage" to Lourdes, a little town on the French side of the Pyrenees, where the Virgin Mary is said to have appeared. On Sunday, October 6, from 30,000 to 40,000 pilgrims were collected at this place. There was a great procession, several great sermons, and three miracles, the dimensions of which are not reported.

THE REV. H. CORBETT, writing to the Congregationalist, from Chefoo, China, gives a very encouraging account of the prospects of the work among heathen women. The way is now opened, not only in China, but throughout India. A speaker, at a recent meeting in London, said that there were twenty millions of women in India, not only accessible, but anxiously imploring instruction from Christian teachers.

THE Rev. John Stock, in a letter to the Christian Era, says that the professors in all the present Baptist Colleges in England, are open communion, and that most of the ministers whom they train follow their lead. This has led the Baptists, in that country, who believe in restricted communion, to found a college in Manchester, where the way of the Lord may be taught more perfectly.

IT IS RELATED of John Wesley that, preaching to an audience of courtiers and noblemen, he used the "generation of vipers" text, and flung denunciation right and left. "That sermon should have been preached at Newgate," said a displeased courtier to Wesley, on passing out. "No," said the fearless apostle, "my text there would have been, 'Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world!'"

ANOTHER "JESUITICAL" SOCIETY. A new society, entitled the "Catholic Union of Ireland," has been formed in that country "to defend the Pontiff and Roman Catholic interests, the liberty of the clergy, and religious orders." Its members are of both sexes, and of every profession and rank. The council is to be formed of thirty elected members, who are "to watch all legislation affecting Catholic interests."

THE Catholics of France contributed last year to the Society for the Propagation of the Faith £140,000, being only £8,000 less than was contributed during the most prosperous period before the war. This liberality on the part of a people suffering the evils which follow a disastrous war might be accepted as a good example by others, who justify their neglect of religious obligation by pleading the misfortunes of the land.

ANOTHER sect has appeared in London, called by the irreverent the "Howling Repentants." They are said to "howl at all convenient periods during the day and at two periods during the night." These Howlers are supposed to base their singular ritual upon certain passages in the Old Testament prophets. "The burden of Tyre" and several of the other burdens make mention of this exercise, and these people have undertaken liberally to fulfill the prophetic injunctions.

GERMAN newspapers express great gratification at the gift of about 15,000 Bibles by the British and Foreign Bible Society to the widows and families of German soldiers and others killed in the war. The Bibles being intended not as alms but as tokens of condolence and solaces in bereavement, the presentation has not been limited to the poor, but families in good circumstances have as thankfully accepted them. The Emperor William himself has been presented with one, and has received it with thanks.

THE Hawaiian Theological Seminary in the Sandwich Islands has been formally opened; nine candidates having been examined and others expected. The following compose the faculty: Rev. J. D. Paris, president and professor of exegesis of Old and New Testaments; Rev. B. W. Parker, professor of theology; Rev. D. Baldwin, M. D., professor of ecclesiastical history; Rev. H. H. Parker, professor of sacred rhetoric and pastoral theology. Rev. H. Bingham has consented to deliver a course of lectures on missions. The Rev. L. Smith was elected to one of the professorships, but declined.

THE IRISH CHURCH.—The disestablished church of Ireland does not get along well. This is especially true in its financial affairs. Some months ago the Archbishop of Canterbury originated a movement for relief to the sister church, under which it was hoped that a large fund might be obtained to aid the Irish clergy. The result is exceedingly unsatisfactory, the collections only aggregating £43,000, equal to about ten shillings a year to each parish clergyman, and only a little more to each Bishop. The Irish clergy are likely to find relief only in real, personal, hard work. This always succeeds.

PRESBYTERIANISM IN CANADA.—In the Canada Presbyterian Church are eighteen presbyteries, all within the bounds of Ontario, except those of Montreal and Manitoba. They return 389 congregations and 308 ministers. The number of members is about 50,000. It is estimated that the whole number of persons under the pastoral superintendence of this church is about 150,000. The number of church sittings is reported at 127,209. The total contributions for congregational and benevolent purposes recorded on the church books were $970,434. The minimum salary of settled pastors allowed by the General Assembly is $600.

REV. H. A. SCHAUFFLER'S report to the American Board of his explorations in various provinces of the Austrian empire gives some very interesting details in regard to the condition of the Bohemian Reformed Church and its present needs.—Though at the close of the seventeenth century Protestantism had no foothold in Bohemia, yet within the past hundred years this church has sprung into life, and now numbers sixty-four parishes, containing more than 100,000 individuals. The special wants of this church, as set forth by its Upper Church councillor, Von Tardy, are the means to carry on its normal school, already established, to begin a theological seminary, to support its tract society, and to send an evangelist into Southern Bohemia. The Protestant pastors with whom Mr. Schauffler conversed report considerable religious interest among the Roman Catholics, and many conversions among them to Protestantism; and there will probably be no lack of pious pastors found to serve as evangelists for the mission station which is to be established by the American Board for Bohemia and Moravia.

THE Protestant Christian faith has advanced in India during the past twenty years surely and with a constantly increasing rapidity. The number of Evangelical Christians during the first ten years of that period, from 1851 to 1861, rose from a little less than 91,000 to more than 138,000, the rate of increase being a little less than forty-eight per cent. From 1861 to 1871 these numbers have risen to more than 211,000, at a rate of increase of more than fifty-four per cent. Of course, this more than doubles the Protestant population of India during the twenty years. In the province of Bengal the gain during the past ten years is very marked, being one hundred and fifty per cent. It was but forty-two per cent. during the previous decade. In Madras (Southern India,) which in 1851 contained more than two-thirds of the Protestant population of India, the advance has not been so rapid as in some of the other provinces, although it has since that date added eighty-nine per cent. to its number of Christian converts. Nearly all the Protestant missions in Northern India have been commenced within fifteen years. The returns from further India and Ceylon, when received, will increase the entire amount to over 300,000. Grundeman's Mission Atlas in 1868 gave the approximate number in India and Ceylon as 168,000.—Independent.

The Lord's Needs.

The warrant of the disciples for loosing the colt and taking him was, "the Lord hath need of him." The owners were silenced, if not satisfied, by this answer, and the animal, if not given, was at least loaned to the Savior. They might have demurred to the request and to the reason of it. If Lord of all, the first-born of every creature and equal with God, what need had Christ of such a gift? He who sat on the circle of the heavens and rode on a cherub, and who had all the chariots of God at his command, could not really be in want of an ass' colt. It was so, nevertheless. It is still true that in his work of redemption the Lord has need of many things which his creatures must supply. Whether the gospel could be spread and the world saved by angelical ministries and by direct divine agencies is not material. These great results are made to depend upon conditions and means of a human and earthly character. The work is not and, so far as we can see, cannot be carried on without men. "How shall they hear without a preacher?" It is from the throne, high and lifted up, with the adoring seraphim above it and with a glorious train filling the temple that the voice of the Lord is heard: "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Of heavenly and glorified beings there were enough to have responded to the call without missing them from the ranks of the skies. God enthroned, all-powerful and ubiquitous, puts himself in this attitude of dependence. It is a messenger of earthly mold, a man "of like passions," with the world to be reached, that is needed. In this and in other capacities of usefulness, all are wanted. Their consecrated strength and influence are required to carry out the plan of mercy which God has devised. The voice of God is prompted by his need of men and women to go for him, and to do the work which angels cannot do. It is not presumption for us to feel that he needs us. It is his own arrangement, and the entire economy of salvation is adjusted to this necessity. The Lord needs you. Your time, talents and efforts are wanted by him.

Passing from persons to things, the Lord's needs are manifold. His work in the world calls for the contribution of the ordinary means of earthly enterprises. The cattle and the gold are his, but he asks them of us. The material resources are lodged in our hands, and he asks us to give because he needs. How the gospel is to be preached and the world to be leavened with the truth without this consecration of property is more than we can see. God does not intend it to be otherwise. He must have the money as well as the steward himself. What he has given in his providence must flow back to him in giving wings to the gospel and in sending out the streams of life. For his poor, and for the salvation of those perishing souls for whom he died, Christ wants the fruits of the field and the income of every form of industry. Until these demands are met the need is a pressing one. It is to him as a personal want, for "he shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." Whatever is required to relieve the destitute, to send the gospel to the heathen and to support the institutions of religion at home is roughly the measure of this demand. This measure has never been met. When is it likely to be? At this hour, the beginning of this year, what are the Lord's needs? In another form: What of personal devotion and property consecration will it take to meet the hunger and death of the world? Destitute churches, empty missionary treasuries, struggling colleges, an unpaid ministry, and pagan nations without the Bible, are all so many appeals to us from the Master himself.

It is his need that seeks relief in the support of all these forms of benevolence and mercy. It is as if he were to come himself to our door and ask us to minister to his own necessities. If we would anoint his feet or pour the costly nard upon his head, or wrap his mangled body in precious spices, we may do it by ministering to a higher necessity than any which belonged to his earthly history. As in loosing the colt, so in all the demands which Christ makes upon us; it is enough that "the Lord hath need of them." It is in the nature of a pre-emption claim upon all that can be spared. Certainty it comes in before the gratification of pride, luxury and pleasure. What we can afford to hoard or spend must depend upon the Lord's needs. It is yours, perhaps, and you have many ways of profit and pleasure in which you would like to invest it. It may be that necessity constrains to appropriate all to your own purposes; but the argument of conscience and of religion should not be silenced. The Lord hath need of it. Here is a personal appeal which the Savior makes to your love and gratitude. It is authoritative, but it is more; it is a request which is higher than a mere command, piercing through the spirit of servitude and rising into the freer and purer atmosphere of our sonship. It is not as a token of devotion, nor as the exhibition of mere obedience that Christ asks, but because he needs. He works through means such as we can supply, and he takes to himself as his own need the cry of anguish and despair, and the wail of hopeless sorrow and misery which come up from those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.

Within the breadth of this comprehensive principle there is ample scope for particular application. Christ's eye is already fixed upon something which you have kept from him. Our warrant is at hand for the delivery: "The Lord hath need of him." It is your service, your treasure, what you can well spare or what may cost some denial to give, that is sent for. There are comparatively idle lives, much unsanctified wealth and the mites of the multitude which should be given to the Redeemer. The wasted and squandered has gone into the fire when it should have gone to help the cause of Jesus. It is your colt that the Lord has needed, but the claim has been rejected, and Christ's draft has been dishonored. God help us, that we may meet the account in the final day! By the urgency of Christ's need, and by the wants and woes which he makes his own, must our guilt be estimated.

The West Texas Conference and Getting Home.

MAGNOLIA HOUSE, INDIANOLA, Christmas Day, 1872.

MR. EDITOR: The West Texas Conference adjourned on the twenty-second, and on the evening of the twenty-third we left Victoria for this place. Here we are, looking out on the sea, in a town that ought to be called "Joppa," consisting of one long street that ought to be called "Straight." Fortunately there are four of us in company, Drs. McFerrin and Mood, Bro. DeVilbiss and myself, all waiting for a steamer.

The West Texas Conference was finely entertained at Victoria. The place proved itself one of the most hospitable towns in the State. It is on the Guadalupe, the soil is very fertile, wood abundant and a most excellent region for raising stock. Corn is worth but fifty cents, beef two cents a pound, turkeys—fine, large ones—fifty cents each. The population consists of twelve hundred Germans, one thousand negroes and fifteen hundred Americans. There are in it two very indifferent church buildings—a Methodist and Presbyterian—a very solid Catholic structure and two respectable Lutheran.

During the session the weather was cold and misty, excepting on Sunday, and this greatly interfered with the interest of the occasion. The missionary meeting yielded some $275, and at a previous meeting some $740 were pledged by the preachers for the liquidating an old Advocate debt. There are thirty-eight preachers connected with the Conference. None were received on trial. Six were continued on trial—William G. Cooke, William L. Ridout, John B. Denton, Mark A. Black, John F. Cook and Alejo Hernandez. Levi W. Arnold was ordained deacon, and also two colored men—Robert Brown and Jordan Carter. Three were ordained elders—Alexander H. Sutherland, Charles R. Shaphard and J. C. C. Black. There are three thousand five hundred and forty-nine members in the bounds of the Conference—a decrease of four for the year. The total missionary contribution for the year was $1,668.45. The next Conference meets at Lockhart, about thirty miles below Austin. There are in this body men of God worthy the heroic days of Methodism. They labor on through evil report and good, and are steadily advancing the lines of the kingdom of Christ.

One of the preachers of this Conference, Bro. Potter, was attacked during the year by four Comanches as he was making a round on his circuit. He had left Cauyon Frio some three miles when he discovered four heads slipping along a ravine. He stopped his horses, fastened them and ran forward to the point where the ravine crossed the road. There he saw the Indians standing, listening for the approach of his buggy, one of them within fifty yards. He immediately drew down on him, but the gun snapped. Instantly the Indian saw him, raised a rifle and—at that moment the preacher's Winchester "went off." The rifle fell from the Indian's hands and the other three picked him up, and, crossing the road, went up on a mountain slope. The preacher, by way of ruse, called back to have his buggy brought up, but ran back and drove up behind some thick brush in the direction of the Indians. There he lighted his pipe, still uncertain what line of attack they might pursue. Directly he saw them, and a shot grazed his arm, when he returned their fire. They then moved further back in the direction of the Canyon Frio, probably thinking to intercept him again, but he whipped forward to Canyon Savinolla, distant fifteen miles. I asked him how he felt when he first saw them. He said that he remembered the language of the painted Caples, of Missouri, that "if he were killed he should go straight to heaven with a shout that would astonish the angels." I appointed him back to the same circuit. A friend, immediately upon hearing it, told him to call at his house on the way back, and there he would find a Winchester of improved pattern, which he presented him. Bro. Potter says it is a pleasure to serve the people of the Uvalde circuit, for out there "they shake hands up to the elbow." Two of the Indians were armed with rifles and two with bows and arrows. To this fact and the superior range of his own rifle he probably owes his life. The policy of supplying the Indians with repeating rifles is driving our people back all along the frontier. It contrasts strangely with the Quaker commission, which has been also adopted by the government. It should abandon one or the other.

The Spanish missionary, Alejo Hernandez, has, during the past year, made further proof of the genuineness of the work so wondrously wrought in him by the Holy Spirit. He went out into Mexico and made his way back, through adverse circumstances, without any money, excepting what he was able to make by teaching. He resisted the pressing methods adopted by the superintendent of the Foreign Christian Union Missions at Monterey for transferring him from our church to the service of that association. He staid long enough in company with the brother to rally an audience for him that had dwindled into a shadow, and taught long enough to get means by which he might come up to the Conference. The testimony of the brethren on the line was highly favorable to the integrity, the ability and the Christianity of Bro. Hernandez. I am well advised in all that I have stated above, and letters to Alejo in Spanish, confirmatory of these facts, were read me.

God mercifully quickens our zeal in the direction of Mexico by sending to us, unsought or in answer to some one's prayer, this stranger, educated, who has groped his way unaided out of the confusing mazes of Romanism into the radiant pathway of a renewed mind. Another Mexican is hopefully expected by Bro. Hernandez. He is already exhorting and teaching Protestant Christianity. Several of the preachers in this Conference speak the Spanish of the Rio Grande regions, and I am in hopes that the young men who are stationed on this frontier will make the study of the Spanish language a specialty. The church at large expects that we will see after the spiritual condition of our neighbors. Soon after the war I was visited by a messenger from those who are now the principal Protestant preachers in the City of Mexico. The work then employed a number of converted Catholics, lawyers, priests and laymen, who were reading the Scriptures and preaching at thirty or forty points every Sabbath day. This messenger went on to New York, and through the Christian Union secured the services of Mr. Riley, and has received substantial aid for its extension. That the Christian Union should now seek to monopolize this vast and open field is possibly very natural, but it is not in accordance with the indications of that spirit which had brought the work nearly up to its present point before the Christian Union had so much as heard of it. For one I believe that Methodism has a mission that cannot be substituted acceptably or be discharged by any other church, and I cannot forget that the messenger was knocking at our door soon after the war and sooner than at any other door, only we were then in too crippled a condition to answer the call. Now, by the blessing of God, we will respond, and I hereforth challenge all the lovers of Jesus among us who desire the extension of his kingdom to do something worthy of his name, and respond to every draft I may draw on them in favor of Mexico.

ON BOARD STEAMER, December 30, 1872.

We are now fairly on board ship, but riding at anchor near Caratlo Pass, in Matagorda bay; and the dread of "a parson" is already half realized by the crew of the Hutchinson. Just in sight is the steamer Harlan lying across the pass, thumping on the bar—possibly without a parson. Unfortunately we carry our luck with us, for we have been in Indianola a full week waiting the arrival of the packet. 'Twas a hard spot to spend our Christmas in—no visitors but the wind and the sleet, and no home-feeling but that which a tavern that had lost much of its youthful freshness could supply. True, we thought of the coal fire, the bright faces and the plum-pudding that constitute the annual merry-time of at least one Southern home. We discussed everything else, but no one ventured upon the inner chamber of our truest meditation—the balance of trade, the latest development of arts, education, the church in Texas, and the cattle; we stirred the fire, cracked pecans, watched the wind, the tide and the telegraph; asked the opinion of every intelligent man, who might be supposed to know anything, when there would be a steamer. Every morning we bade a mental adieu to the Magnolia, and prepared our baggage to leave at a moment's notice; but all in vain. The getting off was still further complicated by a pair of enormous ox-horns, sticking in their sockets, which were brought the secretary just before we took ship. He had been inquiring for horns ever since we left Bryan, and had brought a single horn in his hand down to Galveston; but still felt that it was not all that he wanted. His search was renewed at Victoria, and again at Indianola, and was at last crowned with success. What he intends to do with them he would not exactly say. Possibly carries them, as a single brick, to give Tennessee some idea of Texas, or as a trophy of this trip, or to put up in the office of the board in the new Publishing House, expressive of the genius of enlargement; or as significant of a disposition to keep missionary stock well up in the market. It is very certain that he considers this acquisition no small triumph of some kind, about which he maintains a mysterious, uniform and self-possessed silence.

We have been one week getting out of Texas—that is, if we are out. Dr. McFerrin has just inquired of a fellow-passenger: "When do you think we will get over the bar. I do not ask when you'll get to Virginia, but when will we get over the bar?" Ah, that is the question. We came in quite handily, as one might go into Bro. Cottingham's traps; but then the getting out—how about that! The missionary secretary is trying to laugh over the bar, but I cannot see it. An anchor and capstan, the letting go and the hoisting up, are decidedly sedative. Never was there such a chance to study German (Mr. Wesley would have done it;) or to write sermons, or to read, in some dead language profound, elevated truth; but with a heart set on home, after long absence, I confess myself unequal to the opportunity. On our left is the long, low, sandy beach of Texas, and on our right thunders the surf of the gulf. The anchor holds us equally away from danger and from home.

OVER THE BAR, Two P. M.

The scene changes. The Harlan is inside, safely past her troubles, and we are fairly out, rolling in the trough of a rough sea. Dr. McFerrin has retired to his stateroom. This opens a new chapter and starts a new line of reflection. The cattle which the steamer carries are being pitched sadly about. How these poor creatures survive the privation of food and water and air, which they suffer during a voyage, is of itself a wonder; but when to this is added a preceding drive of two hundred miles over plains without grass, and under a continuous norther, it would seem that if they do not perish on the passage, they must shortly after. The day is fair and the sea a beautiful green; there is nothing the matter but the motion. Several of our passengers have got beyond the place where one studies German. But why trouble the reader further? Suffice it to say that after twenty-four hours of pitching and rolling, such as it would seem no single piece of crockery on board could possibly survive, we arrived at our port of destination—the brave city of Galveston. K.

Wanted at Once.

We want help. During the last two years our Sunday school periodicals have had a large and steadily increasing circulation. This encourages us. We have had the generous co-operation of many friends. We thank them. But some of our schools are but partially supplied with our papers; some have no papers at all; some have the ill-adapted issues of the American Sunday School Union.

If we ought to publish Methodist Sunday school books and papers we ought to place them in every Methodist Sunday school. We greatly desire to see a Methodist Sunday school in every Methodist church, and to supply every Methodist Sunday school with the papers, lessons and books authorized and directed by the General Conference. The Sunday School Magazine, with the Uniform Lessons, the Visitor and Our Little People, ought to be in each one of our Sunday schools. We will do our best to accomplish this. The agent has made these publications cheap; the Sunday school secretary will try to make them worthy.

Friends, take notice! We want names and postoffices. Not of those who take all of our periodicals, but of those who take none, or only a part of them. We wish to send specimens to all our schools that do not take all of our papers. Help us in this matter. Thus, at Sardis church, Hopewell circuit, none (or only a part) of our periodicals are taken. We want the name of the superintendent at Sardis. If there is any church without a school, send us the name and office of the man or woman who ought to start one.

Quite a number of presiding elders have done great good in this work by taking full specimens to each Quarterly Conference, at least for one round, and exhibiting, explaining and commending. We shall be glad to equip any presiding elder who will give us his address.

Men, brethren and sisters, help! Send the names and offices to

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD,

A Noble Generosity.

MR. EDITOR: I take great pleasure in stating that Colonel J. B. Price, of the firm of Price, Hime & Tupper, has furnished transportation, free of charge, over all his stage lines, not only to and from the Annual Conference, but to the preachers during the past year throughout my entire district. B. F. WHITE.

NEW ORLEANS, January 6, 1873.

BISHOP KEENER reached home last week from his official tour in Texas. He has evidently been hard-worked and appears reduced in flesh, but reports himself in good health. We are indebted to the Bishop for several interesting letters, and in this issue for one of his best.

THE Weekly Watchman is the title of a new paper published at Little Rock, Arkansas, by E. B. Hotchkiss, editor and proprietor. It is a religious paper, and published in the interest of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It is a good paper, judging from the number we have seen, and we wish it great success.

REV. MILES H. FORD, of the North Mississippi Conference, died December 28. Rev. P. Tuggle, writing to the Western Methodist, says:

You and many others will be very much surprised to hear that our beloved brother, Miles H. Ford, is no more. He departed this life, at his residence near this place, last night at eleven o'clock, in the midst of his family and friends. Thank God, he died all right. I was with him the day before his death. He talked fully and freely of his prospects. In the religious services I had with him he united cordially, and said he felt like praising the Lord. "I have no fears," said he, "of the future, and my dear wife and children I leave to the Lord; my many friends and the church will help to take care of them." The last words he spoke were: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in his likeness."

TREAT your minister as he deserves; and if you treat him as he deserves he will deserve to be treated as you treat him.

A Bar to Friendly Relations.

The Little Rock Conference, at its late session at Pine Bluff, adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

WHEREAS, It is the duty of all denominations of Christians to cultivate fraternal relations and to exercise Christian courtesy; AND WHEREAS, It is necessary that they should protect each other's rights; AND WHEREAS, It is universally acknowledged to be the custom as well as the law of all well-regulated bodies, assemblies and organizations, whether political or ecclesiastical, when members are found guilty of crimes sufficient to expel them from the bodies to which they belong, to bar such expelled persons from all their rights and privileges; AND WHEREAS, Such expelled persons ought not to be received into other bodies, where they will be forced upon the bodies expelling them; AND WHEREAS, It is the usage of all churches, as well as our own, to deny to expelled persons the right of Christian fellowship and the sacraments of the church; AND WHEREAS, The presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, located in the bounds of our Conference, has received into her communion several expelled ministers and members from our church; therefore,

Resolved, That we, the members of the Little Rock Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Conference assembled, respectfully remonstrate against this action of our Cumberland Presbyterian brethren as unwarrantable and in violation of the law of denominational courtesy.

Resolved, That we further declare our wish to live on the most friendly and Christian terms of fraternal intercourse with all denominations, but our own decent self-respect must be regarded.

Resolved, That we have no wish to interfere with the friendly relations hitherto existing between the Cumberland Presbyterian Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South; but we would, in the name of our church, respectfully ask of their presbytery an explanation.

Resolved, That a copy of the preamble and resolutions be forwarded by our secretary to the next session of their presbytery.

Bishop Pierce at Home.

The Rev. Dr. Rush, of the Missouri Conference, writes to the St. Louis Christian Advocate of his visit to Sunshine. He says:

On Thursday morning Bishop Marvin and your correspondent left the goodly city of Atlanta for Thomasville, the seat of the South Georgia Conference, taking Sparta and Macon in our route. Bishop Pierce had invited us to spend a day at Sunshine, his home, in the neighborhood of Sparta. The invitation had been accepted, and we arrived at Sunshine about four o'clock in the evening. The conductor did us the kindness to stop the train and let us off at the front gate, where we received a hearty welcome from the Bishop and his numerous household. The home of the Bishop is rightly named. The house is not elegant, but it is commodious, and it has about it the air of comfort. It is embosomed in a grove of cedars and other Southern evergreens, all of the Bishop's own planting. The grounds are tastefully laid off, and the walks are bordered with shrubs and flowers. All this is charming, but the sunshine is chiefly within the house. We all know and love and honor Bishop Pierce; but few Missourians have ever seen that excellent Christian woman who has journeyed with him now nearly forty years in the pathway of life, shedding sunlight upon his heart and home. Sister Pierce is a warm-hearted, intelligent Southern lady, carrying in her very face and bearing evidences of the Christian graces. They live in the midst of their children and grandchildren. In their house is a room specially set apart to their venerable and venerated father, Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce.

REV. A. G. STACY, A. M., formerly of South Carolina Conference, and late president of Mecklenburg Female College, of that State, and at present pastor of Palestine station, East Texas Conference, has assumed the presidency of the Female College at Palestine. Bro. Stacy is well known as the author of "Service of Song," a work which has been perhaps more highly commended than any issued by the Southern Methodist press. He brings ample testimonials respecting his experience as an educator, and will, no doubt, render efficient service in this important field.

REV. WILLIAM ALEXANDER.—It is with sincere regret and deep feeling, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, that we record the death of this excellent minister and member of the St. Louis Annual Conference. His death occurred on the twenty first of December. A letter from his colleague on the circuit (Jackson circuit) informs us that he suffered severely, but at last died in peace.

THE REV. R. K. BROWN, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, has entered with spirit upon his work at Tulip street station, to which he was reappointed at the late Conference. He reports an excellent protracted meeting, which has just closed. There were seventeen conversions—twenty-six accessions since Conference. The church seems to be in good working order.

THE ENVELOP PLAN of weekly collections, says the Northwestern Christian Advocate, is growing in favor. Our Depository has printed hundreds of thousands of the envelops. Even ten cents per week amounts to $5.20 per year—and it seems easier to give $50 per year when the purse spares $1 per week.

PEOPLE who are fishing for compliments do not need very long lines. They can get their best bites in shallow water.

DEATH OF MR. EDWARD A. POLLARD.—Mr. Edward A. Pollard, for a long time connected with the press of Virginia, died in Lynchburg, at the residence of his brother, on Monday, December 16.

He was born in Nelson county, Virginia, and educated at the University of that State. In 1851 he went to San Francisco to practice law, but he soon became a contributor to the press and abandoned the law. In 1857 he returned to Virginia and devoted himself to literature. During the war he was an editorial contributor to the Richmond (Virginia) Examiner. Two years ago his health became very feeble, and since he has been a confirmed invalid with Bright's disease of the kidneys. During the early period of his retirement he made a profession of religion, and connected himself with the Methodist Church in Lynchburg. Among Mr. Pollard's early literary works, nearly all of which were of a political cast, were a series of letters entitled "Black Diamonds," and a volume on "Darkey Homes," the latter designed particularly as a defense of the South against the highly-colored pictures of Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. During and since the war he wrote "The Southern History of the War," which was followed by works entitled "The Lost Cause," "The Lost Cause Regained," a "Life of Jefferson Davis," "Lee and his Lieutenants," and a number of minor works. One of his latest books was "A Tourist's Guide for Virginia." Mr. Pollard was in his fortieth year at the time of his death. Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

A TEMPTING OFFER.—Captain J. F. Cross, of the Septoline Oil Company, with quarters at No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, is resolved to meet the popular want by lowering his prices in harmony with the popular impecuniousness. Having completed his graining machines, he is now able to turn out oak, walnut and rosewood sole as cheap as the same can be executed in New York. He is also offering large-sized coal oil lamps, which formerly sold at $1.50, at seventy-five cents, an inducement not often advanced and seldom available.

CANDY.—Mr. M. Imhoff, an enterprising candy manufacturer, better known as the proprietor of the "Headquarters of Home-made Candy," on Camp street, near St. Patrick's church, New Orleans, has recently made a great "hit" in the manufacture of candy fruits, or perfect copies of plums, pears, apples, etc. Families or merchants who wish the finest and best candy can be supplied by Imhoff.

WHOLESALE BOOTS AND SHOES.—From this date Messrs. F. Hathorn and T. J. C. Batchelor will continue the boot and shoe business, as wholesale dealers, at their stand, No. 143 Gravier street, under the name and style of Hathorn & Batchelor.

SEED MERCHANT.—Richard Frotscher, No. 12 Dumaine street, near the French market, has on hand and for sale in large assortment of seeds. Almanacs and catalogues furnished on application.

STERN'S FERTILIZER.—We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement, in another column, of this valuable fertilizer. The office of the company is at No. 16 Chartres street.

WOOD AND COAL MERCHANT.—Mr. J. J. Clarke, corner of Julia and Dryades streets, offers for sale wood and coal in quantities to suit purchasers.

TEXAS LANDS.—Parties interested in Texas lands will find the agency of Mr. Henry V. McCall, No. 3½ Carondelet street, a desirable medium of information.

SILVER-PLATED WARE AND CUTLERY, imported from the best European and American factories, and on hand in very large quantities, at Navrn & Offner's, No. 171 Canal street.

FAMILY GROCERIES.—We direct the attention of our readers to the advertisements, in this issue, of Mr. J. W. Platt, whose popular establishment is situated at 102 Camp street.

THOSE in want of superior boots, shoes, trunks, valises, etc., will do well to call on William Hogan, Nos. 99 and 101 Canal street. Mr. Hogan is agent for the Empire Sewing Machine.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisement of Dr. James Porter, in this issue.

ANY PREACHER within the State of Mississippi can have an agency to sell McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological and Ecclesiastical Literature, and Tyerman's Life of John Wesley, by communicating with Rev. William B. Hines, at Meridian, Mississippi, who is the agent for the State. Good terms. These are the great books of the age in their departments. de26 3t

BUSINESS NOTICES.

STILL MORE REMARKABLE CURES by DR. PORTER, at No. 212 Camp street.

PHILOSOPHY OF THE TREATMENT.—Let us briefly examine this Healing Art. What is it? What does it consist of? Is it a demonstrable fact? Baron Du Potet says it is a series of treatments in accordance with all natural laws, which no one who is acquainted with the physiology of the human system can deny. Out of the coherence of his physiological vigor and power of mental inquisition, Dr. Porter imparts to the diseased system the wanting elements, by which inimical influences are neutralized or destroyed. Precisely how this is done remains for the physiologist to explain. But facts are stern realities. Acute pain is instantly relieved; the paralyzed limb quickened, the deaf restored to hearing, the blind to sight, and all manner of chronic diseases cured in an incredible short space of time. The following are a few of the many who have been thus miraculously restored by him in this city, viz.:

ASTHMA CURED.—Charles Johnson, residence 113 Toledano street, between Magazine and Constance streets; daughter has been suffering from asthma in its worst form; perfectly cured by two treatments. Those similarly afflicted should not fail to call on this lady.

GRANULAR OPTHALMIA.—Mr. Henry Cage, residence corner Lafayette and Ferris streets; almost blind from granular ophthalmia for over two years; could see to read ordinary print after two treatments by Dr. Porter.

NEURALGIA.—Mrs. Laura L. Spooner, residence 238 Gravier street, had been suffering severely from neuralgia for over three months; could obtain no relief until she applied to Dr. Porter, who effected a perfect cure by two magnetic treatments. May be referred to.

EPILEPSY CURED.—Mr. John Griffin, residence No. 31 Roman street, had been suffering from epilepsy or falling fits for over four years, averaging from one to four fits per day; has not had a single attack since he received the first magnetic treatment by Dr. Porter, now eight weeks ago, and a perfect cure is certain. May be referred to.

SPINAL DISEASE AND NERVOUS DEBILITY.—Mr. Cornelius Ryordan, No. 33 Liberty street, had been suffering from an affection of the spine and nervous debility, also palpitation of the heart for many years; had tried many physicians and remedies without benefit, until he was treated by Dr. Porter, who effected a perfect cure by a few magnetic treatments and one prescription.

DEAF AND DUMB MADE TO HEAR AND SPEAK. Mr. Falkner, residence corner First and Chippewa streets; child deaf and dumb; has had but four treatments by Dr. Porter, and is being rapidly restored to hearing, and is learning to speak. May be referred to.

The above are but a few of the many cures of old standing (chronic) diseases, including deafness, blindness, paralysis, neuralgia, heart disease, epilepsy, affections of the liver, kidneys, dyspepsia, etc., which Dr. Porter has cured in this city. Therefore those wishing further reference are invited to call at his parlors, at No. 212 Camp street.

Dr. Porter treats the poor free, at TURNER HALL, every Saturday morning, from nine until eleven o'clock.

All are invited to attend and witness these marvelous cures performed.

Dr. Porter's office hours are from ten A. M. until eight P. M. of each day. Jan9 1t

A WARNING.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a grave-yard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many grave-yards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility or similar functional derangements to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to all the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

DR. TUTT'S PILLS.—It is a purely vegetable concentration for keeping the bowels in natural motion and cleansing the system of all impurities, and a positive cure for Constipation. They restore the diseased liver, stomach and kidneys to a healthful action, while at the same time they brace and invigorate the whole system.

ROME, GA., January 11, 1871.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Dear Sir: Having used your Liver Pills, and finding none that have done my wife or myself as much good, I would like to know if they would do as well North as here. I intend going North in March, and if they will have the same effect as in this climate I want to take them in with me. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain,

Your obedient servant,

Chattahoochee, Florida. Jan9 1t

IN THE active pursuit of pleasure or gain this inestimable blessing of health is too often forgotten, until disease is firmly seated, and the fact only realized by great bodily and mental suffering. The Liver is the vulnerable point in most persons, and the disarrangement of the organ involves almost the whole system; hence the reason why, under Liver disease, there is enumerated such a number of afflictions, and we claim the Simmons Liver Regulator to be a remedy for them all.

USE DR. HENRY'S WORLD'S TONIC AND BLOOD PURIFIER.—It is the great household remedy, pleasant to take, yet potent for the prevention and cure of diseases. It is better than Bitters, Cordials, Buchu or Sarsaparilla. Sold by druggists. jy18 1y

MRS. WHITCOMB'S SIRUP.—The great soothing remedy. Price only 25 cents. Gives rest to the mother and health to the child. Sold by druggists. jy18 1y

THIS UNRIVALED MEDICINE IS warranted not to contain a single particle of MERCURY, or any injurious mineral substance, but is PURELY VEGETABLE.

For Forty Years it has proved its great value in all diseases of the LIVER, BOWELS and KIDNEYS. Thousands of the good and great in all parts of the country vouch for its wonderful and peculiar power in purifying the Blood, stimulating the torpid Liver and Bowels, and imparting new life and vigor to the whole system. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR is acknowledged to have no equal as a

LIVER MEDICINE.

It contains four medical elements never united in the same happy proportion in any other preparation, viz.: a gentle Cathartic, a wonderful Tonic, an unexceptionable Alterative, and a certain Corrective of all impurities of the body. EDUCATE YOUR DAUGHTERS
AT SUMMERFIELD.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,
OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE,
Summerfield, Alabama.

EIGHT MILES FROM SELMA, ALABAMA.

This is one of the oldest Methodist institutions in the South. For over thirty years it has enjoyed an uninterrupted existence, and no institution has done more good or contributed more largely to the advancement of female education. It is now in a flourishing condition, with an increasing patronage and an able Faculty. Five States are represented among the students.

Summerfield is the Healthiest locality in Alabama. The water is pure, the atmosphere invigorating and free from miasma. It is the only climate suited to Southern girls. No place in the whole South is better adapted for the location of a female college, for it is far removed from the excitements of railroad towns, and the fashionable follies of larger places. Students are brought directly under the best and purest religious influences, which cannot fail to promote a sound and permanent religious culture.

It is also the Cheapest Institution in the South. No opportunities are afforded here to spend money foolishly, or to cultivate a taste for extravagance in dress. If you want your daughter correctly and thoroughly taught, properly trained, and her health cared for, place her at Summerfield.

The second half session begins FEBRUARY 7, 1873, when a good opportunity will be given to enter the Classes, and the Departments of Art and Music.

By informing the President at what time pupils will arrive in Selma, hacks will be sent to meet them. The regular daily line leaves Selma at nine A. M. and three P. M. Fare, $1.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.
On the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad.

For beauty of situation, in a fertile valley of Southwestern Virginia, for invigorating climatic influences, general healthfulness, high grade and extent of instruction, excellence of arrangements for comfort, this long-established institution is unsurpassed. It is indorsed and patronized by some of the most eminent men of Virginia and the South.

SPRING TERM WILL BEGIN FEBRUARY 6, 1873.

Charges lower than in any other first-class Female College in Virginia.

SONG FOR THE NEW YEAR.

BY CLIO STANLEY.

Happy New Year, happy New Year!
Lo! 'tis a brave heart singeth;
The color is red in each rounded cheek,
As the gay song merrily ringeth.
Happy New Year!
Happy New Year!
As the gay song merrily ringeth.

Happy New Year, a happy New Year,
For those who are still together!
Whose hearts beat high and whose eyes are bright,
In spite of the frosty weather!
Happy New Year!
Happy New Year!
In the frostiest, windiest weather.

Happy New Year! oh, happy New Year,
When a mother's arms enfold you;
When a sister's kiss is on your lips,
And a father's hands uphold you!
Happy New Year!
Happy New Year!
When a father's dear hands uphold you.

Happy New Year, a happy New Year!
Each moment is winged with blessing,
And over you, warmed and clothed, to-day,
Good angels hover, caressing.
Happy New Year!
Happy New Year!
If winged with this brightest blessing.

Happy New Year! ah, happy New Year,
If, like the sweet flowers folded,
Your days shall blossom in kindly deeds,
In the sun of God's love unfolded!
Happy New Year!
Happy New Year!
In the sun of God's love unfolded!

Children's Hour.

Beautiful Garments.

"Get out of this! Nobody wants you here!"

If it had been a dog that he was speaking to, the voice of Fred Bond could not have shown more authority or contempt.

Three or four children were playing on a grass plot in front of a handsome house, at one of the windows of which sat a lady. She was the mother of Fred Bond. Fred was nicely dressed in a new suit of clothes, and, like a great many older persons, felt himself, because of his fine clothes, to be better than meaner dressed people. He was not an ill-natured boy, and therefore his mother was greatly surprised as well as pained to hear him speak so roughly to a lad in mean attire who had been drawn toward the children, and who stood looking, with a pleased air, at their sports.

Mrs. Bond saw a hurt look come into the lad's face. She saw also, as he fixed his eyes on Fred, a steadiness of gaze that meant resistance and punishment if trespass went too far. Before she had time to speak Fred, seeing that the boy did not stir, cried out again, in a threatening voice:

"Clear out, I say! We don't want ragamuffins here!"

At this the boy's eyes dropped to his own person—to the coarse, worn, soiled jacket and trowsers; and Mrs. Bond noticed that there were scarlet stains on his cheeks. She noticed also that his hands were shutting and opening restlessly, and knew that he was holding back an impulse to strike.

Only for a moment or two after this second mean assault upon him did the boy stay where he was not wanted. As he walked slowly out of the pretty ground into which the happy voices of children had attracted him, Mrs. Bond called to her son. He came to the window where she was sitting.

"Was that kind?" she asked.

"We don't want any of these rough sculls and rowdies about here," answered Fred.

"I think," said Mrs. Bond, "that you called him a ragamuffin."

"So he is," returned Fred.

"His jacket and trowsers are coarser than yours, and very much worn and patched, but I did not see the rags."

"Oh, well, he's what we mean by a ragamuffin—a low, dirty fellow who lives in an alley."

"How came he to be living in an alley?" asked Mrs. Bond.

"I'm sure I don't know," answered the boy.

"How came you to be living in this pleasant home and to be clothed in fine garments? Did you build the house and buy the garments?"

"No, ma'am. Father built the house and you buy my clothes."

"Suppose your father were as poor as that boy's father, or suppose your father were dead, as that boy's may be, and suppose I had to earn by my needle, or by washing and ironing, all that we had to live upon, do you think you would reside in a better place, or have finer clothes than the boy you spoke to so cruelly just now."

Fred was silent. The look of scorn that had disfigured his handsome countenance faded off. A shame-spot burned on his cheek.

"It sometimes happens," said Mrs. Bond, "that the poor wear better clothes than the rich. The soul has its garments as well as the body, and these are fine and beautiful with some and coarse and mean with others. Our condition in life has nothing to do with the quality of these garments. A rich man may, as to his mind or spirit, be worse clad than a beggar, while the poorest and humblest may be attired in robes such as angels wear."

The boy, young as he was, understood his mother.

"I'm sorry," he said; "I didn't think, or I wouldn't have spoken as I did. But, mother, it isn't nice to have dirty, ragged children about. You don't want us to play with them."

"It is one thing to be kind to people and another to associate with them," was answered. "The lad you drove away just now didn't push himself into your company; he only stood looking at you, pleased to see your sport. It may be that he once lived where it was green and pleasant, and had better clothing than he now wears, and that it made him think of old and better times when he saw you at play. Hidden from our outer eyes, and only to be seen as we see goodness in the lives of others, that boy may be wearing a richer and finer dress than yours or mine."

A few days afterward, as Mrs. Bond and Fred were passing a narrow street not far from where they lived, they saw this lad again. He was sitting on the steps of a very poor-looking house, holding a baby in his arms. Mrs. Bond stopped and spoke to him. As he looked up he saw Fred, and, from the change that passed over his face, it was evident that he remembered the rough way in which he had been treated.

"Do you live here?" asked Mrs. Bond.

"Yes, ma'am," he replied, in a voice of peculiar sweetness, and with an ease of manner that did not escape the lady's notice.

"Is that your little sister?"

"It is my little brother."

"And you are the nurse?"

"When mother is at work, or when she is sick."

The boy's mother, hearing some one talking to him, came to the door. She had a thin, almost colorless face; her eyes were large and bright, her features delicate and refined. Mrs. Bond saw at a glance that she had not always been in so poor a condition.

"You have a good nurse for your baby, I see." Mrs. Bond looked at the boy, and smiled on him as she spoke.

"Yes, ma'am; and I don't know what I should do without him," answered the woman, a tender light in her eyes as she turned them on her poorly-dressed son. "Baby loves him almost as well as he does me, he's so patient and gentle with him."

So patient and gentle! Fred felt this praise as a rebuke. The poor, meanly-clad boy whom he had despised and insulted was patient and gentle, while he was often rough and irritable with his brothers and sisters. He was humbled in his presence.

"Do you know where I live?" asked Mrs. Bond, speaking to the boy. The latter, before replying, looked at Fred for a moment, as if to make sure of him:

"Yes, ma'am. In the house with the green grass all around it."

"Will you let him come to see me this afternoon?" asked Mrs. Bond, speaking to the lad's mother.

"Yes, ma'am, if you wish to have him do so."

As Mrs. Bond and her son walked away the former said:

"We must make that boy's outer garments more like those of his spirit." Then she waited to hear what Fred would answer, but he remained silent.

"The garments of patience and gentleness that his spirit wears must be very beautiful. Don't you think so?"

Still the boy made no reply.

"Then will I set my heart to find
Inward adornings for the mind;
Knowledge and virtue, truth and grace,
These are the robes of richest dress."

Mrs. Bond repeated the verse slowly as they walked along, adding:

"These are but parts of the heavenly raiment we may put on if we will."

But Fred's mind was too much oppressed for speech. He understood what his mother meant, and felt how poor and mean his inner garments were in comparison with those of the boy he had looked down upon and despised. At last he said:

"Couldn't he have some of my clothes, mother? I'm willing."

"I'm glad you are, Fred. The willing gift is always the best; for it blesses both the giver and the receiver. If, from true kindness, we put garments on the needy, we at the same time draw robes of heavenly beauty about our spirit."

When Fred saw the poorly-dressed boy again it was with very different eyes from those with which he had regarded him in the morning. He looked deeper than his worn jacket and patched trowsers, and saw the fair and spotless robe that attired his gentle and patient spirit. He felt drawn toward him and not repelled, and spoke to him kindly because he felt kindly.

Fred knew himself better after that. It was his first great lesson in self-knowledge—his first introduction to a world that is hidden to outward sight—the real world in which we dwell as to our feelings and thoughts—the world of true riches and beauty and excellence.—Children's Hour.

A Parable.

It was a summer morn, dawning brightly after a dewy night. The sun rose joyously and shone over the fields. And nestling on a leaf, as yet shadowed from the light, lay a little drop of dew, child of the night. Then spoke the sun, and said: "Open thy heart, thou little dewdrop, and let my beams enter and shine within thy bosom." "And what, O great sun," said the tiny thing, "wilt thou give me, or do for me, if I open my bosom to receive thee?" "I will light thee up," said the sun, "with my rays; thou shalt sparkle like a jewel or a star; and at length I will draw thee safely away up to the heaven I dwell in." So the little dewdrop gave consent, and the sun shone into its bosom; when lo, it became like a gem, and the passers-by wondered to behold its diamond beauty. But as they looked the light waned, the glittering drop lessened, till it disappeared; yet they mourned it not, for they knew that it had gone away up, on unseen wings, into the warm skies. Even so open your hearts, young friends, to Jesus, and he will come into them; and although he finds them very unlike the dewdrop for its purity, he will make them like it, shining in his light; and if by the hand of death he should gently draw you away out of our sight, we will not grieve for you, knowing you have gone away to a brighter world, where he himself is to shine there, "as the stars, for ever and ever."—Children's Church at Home.

HAS not every living creature its rights? I suppose that this proposition may seem somewhat fanciful when applied to animals; but I distinctly hold that every living creature has its rights, and that justice in the highest form may be applied to it. I say that a lame horse has a right to claim that it shall not be worked; and just as I would protect one man from being ill-treated by another, so, to use the principle in its widest form, I would protect any one animal from being ill-treated by any other.—Arthur Helps.

HORACE GREELEY said: "The darkest day in any man's career is that where he fancies there is some easier way of getting a dollar than by squarely earning it."

THE DUTY of the happy is to help the suffering to bear their woe.

The Farm and Garden.

Chickory Culture.

M. B. Granger, of Alvarado, who has for some five years been engaged in raising chickory for the California Chickory Company, has just completed a new drying house, the one formerly used having been destroyed by fire last year. The present crop now ready to gather consists of fifteen acres, and will yield probably ten tons to the acre, which in drying will lose about three-fourths of its weight, and will furnish about thirty-seven tons of marketable product.

Mr. Granger planned for a much larger crop this year, having planted fifty-five acres, but time developed the unfortunate fact that forty acres had been planted with lettuce.

The mistake was not discovered, however, until all the ground had been carefully weeded over twice, and then it was too late in the season to replant. The seed was furnished by the parties whom he contracted to cultivate the chickory, and was procured by them part in New York and part in Europe. I believe it is not known where the mistake was made, the two seeds are identical in appearance.

The appearance of chickory in the field is similar to that of beets, although the leaf is not quite so broad and smooth, the root is white like parsnip, and on being broke or cut gives out a thick milky juice which is bitter to the taste. The plants penetrate to a great depth, many of them being from three to four feet in length.

It is too much labor to dig them out whole, so a plough is used that cuts them at a depth of about ten inches, when the top part is pulled out by hand, cleaned and chopped by machinery, and put into a hopper-shaped bin lined with brick, that will hold from three to four tons at a charge, and exposed to the heat of a furnace underneath till dry, when it is ready for market.

The further roasting which is necessary before grinding, is done in this city, where it is prepared for use. Horses and cattle are more fond of chickory and fatten upon it more rapidly than when fed with either beets or carrots, but the milk of cows fed on it has a bitter taste.—Rural Pacific Press.

The Seedless Orange of Brazil, Again.

In the July number of the Practical Planter, we cited a case occurring on the Casa Blanca plantation, in Jefferson county, Florida, to prove the adaptability of this incomparable fruit to the climate and soil of that favored region. We then attributed the death of that only known specimen to us to a sleet or late cold snap, succeeded by a very warm spell of weather. A friend in that neighborhood, more familiar with the history and final taking off of the tree than we, writes us that the cold snap alluded to "killed only the leaves and young twigs, not the tree. It afterward put forth leaves and promised to flourish as well as ever, but a severe drouth set in, and the proprietress leaving home and the agent neglecting to water the tree, it, in its weakened state, could not bear the drouth—the young leaves withered, and the tree died. But for the drouth and neglect it is thought the tree would have lived and flourished."

This very intelligent explanation makes the adaptability of the Brazil or Navel orange to the climate and soil of Florida a fact beyond question, and we hope to hear soon of the orange growers of Florida sending seedless oranges to Northern markets by the cargo. They are far superior to any variety known in this country.

Sweet Potatoes from the Seed.

The editor of the Bay St. Louis Gazette says he has received from Mr. J. D. Davis, of Bayou Philip, near "the Bay," a sick of very large sweet potatoes, which present some extraordinary features. They were raised by him from the seed, which he gathered from the seed-pods, just below the flowers, after the seed had ripened.

These potatoes seem to have made a "new departure." They are of a peculiar, pleasant flavor, large, and such vigorous growers that they have cracked in all directions, and grow into all kinds of fantastic shapes. It would be an interesting experiment for some of our large potato growers to gather and plant the seed, and see what will come of it. Mr. Davis has certainly succeeded beyond his expectations.—Our Home Journal.

TREE COTTON.—Concerning this plant the Palatka, Florida, Herald, of the fifteenth ultimo, says:

This new tree, of such commercial importance, ought to be extensively introduced in Florida. Mr. Warren has distributed some of the seed to those who are disposed to try it. The pod contains an article like cotton, only more elastic and silky, and well adapted to upholsterers' use. The seed produces an excellent oil for mechanical uses, and the cake is good for stock. It is destined to become a very important article for Florida.

DOG AND SHEEP.—Official reports show in Ohio an annual loss of $1,000,000 in injuries done by dogs—a loss equivalent to six million pounds of wool, or a tax of two per cent. upon the total sum invested in sheep in that State. It is said that in two years, from 1868 to 1870, Illinois sank from the sixth to the ninth rank among the States in the number and value of its sheep, and this great falling off is attributed to a proportionate increase in the number of dogs, and the lack of proper legislation to prevent their ravages among the sheep.

"DOES it matter that you are weak and faint, when underneath are the everlasting arms? Need you fear and doubt when greater is he that is with you than all that is against you?"

Sympathy.

Though the lower animals have feeling, they have no fellow-feeling. Have not I seen the horse enjoy his feed of corn when his yoke-fellow lay dying in the neighboring stall, and never turn an eye of pity on the sufferer? They have strong passions, but no sympathy. It is said that the wounded deer sheds tears; but it belongs to man only to "weep with them that weep," and by sympathy to divide another's sorrows and double another's joys. When thunder, following the dazzling flash, has burst among our hills, when the horn of the Switzer has rung in his glorious valleys, when the boatman has shouted from the bosom of a rock-girt loch, wonderful were the echoes I have heard them make; but there is no echo so fine or wonderful as that which, in the sympathy of human hearts, repeats the cry of another's sorrow, and makes me feel his pain almost as if it were my own. They say that if a piano is struck in a room where another stands unopened and untouched, who lays his ear to that will hear a string within, as if touched by the hand of a shadowy spirit, sound the same note. But more strange how the strings of one heart vibrate to those of another; how woe wakens woe; how young grief infects me with sadness; how the shadow of a passing funeral and nodding hearse casts a cloud on the mirth of a marriage party; how sympathy may be so delicate and acute as to become pain. There is, for example, the well-authenticated case of a lady who could not even hear the description of a severe surgical operation but she felt all the agonies of the patient; grew pale and puler, and shrieked, and fainted away under the horrible imagination. Not fancy; for the dog has that, and, asleep on the warm hearth, he dreams of battles and of hunts; not reason, for there is an intelligence in his honest eye, and a skill in his tasks, that at least apes and imitates the intellect of man—it is not these, but fellow-feeling, which elevates our race above the animal-immortal brute, and brings us near to him whose sympathy is our chief comfort in sorrow, and of whom we are assured—thank God in life's dark hour for the assurance—that "in all his people's affliction he is himself afflicted."—Dr. Guthrie.

Didn't Care to Go.

"Prayer-meeting and lecture as usual, on Wednesday afternoon, in the lecture-room. Dear brethren, I urge you all to attend these meetings. Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together."

Some of the "dear brethren" deported themselves in this way:

Bro. A. thought it looked like rain, and concluded that his family, including himself, of course, had better remain at home. On Thursday evening it was raining very hard, and the same Bro. A. hired a carriage and took his whole family to the Academy of Music to hear M. Agassiz lecture on the "Intelligence of the Lobster."

Bro. B. thought he was too tired to go, so he stayed at home—and worked at the sled he had promised to make for Billy.

Sister C. thought the pavements were too slippery; it would be very dangerous for her to venture out. I saw her next morning going down the street to get her old bonnet "done up." She had an old pair of stockings drawn over her shoes.

Sister D. thought there wouldn't be more than a dozen people at the prayer meeting. She doesn't like those little meetings, so she didn't go. If she had gone there would have been thirteen. I met her the next evening at a social gathering where there were just ten folks. She said she had spent a delightful evening.

Bro. E. thought he might be called upon to lead in prayer or make some remarks. He stayed at home. Next day he went around with a petition praying Congress to repeal the tax on beeswax. His name headed the list of petitioners, and he spoke eloquently, and waxed warm as he urged his reasons in favor of repeal.

Three-fourth's of the members stayed at home. God was at the prayer meeting. The pastor was there. One-fourth of the members were there, and God blessed them. The persons who stayed at home were each represented by a vacant seat. God don't bless empty seats.

The Southern Churchman says: "One great fault of our Sunday school system is the difficulty of getting any but very young persons to be teachers. It is no wonder, therefore, that oftentimes they prove a failure. There should be in every church intelligent Christian men and women who feel honored in being permitted to train the infant mind for Christ and goodness. The Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, the Rt. Hon. Lord Hatherly, was not only attached to Sunday schools and a teacher, but his successor, Lord Selborne, has for many years been engaged in the same work. And in Lord Hatherly's recent address upon Sunday schools, at the Leeds Church Congress, he strongly urged the gentry to bear a considerable portion of the work connected with them. With such examples, it ought not to be an unreasonable hope that the best persons, and the most capable in our parishes, should be connected with Sunday schools. The work has been too much left to the boys and girls of the church, who, having but little learning and less experience, cause what ought to be a mighty instrument for good to be in most cases a lamentable failure."

AN EXCHANGE, speaking of successful journalists, says: Samuel Sinclair, of the New York Tribune, is worth $400,000; Manton Marble, of the New York World, has made $500,000; James and Erastus Brooks, of the New York Express, are each worth $250,000; William Cullen Bryant and his son-in-law Parke Godwin, have each made $400,000 or $500,000 out of the Evening Post.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN.

There are in the State of Texas thousands of acres of land belonging to unknown heirs of parties who went to that State at an early date, bought or located lands, and have since died, owning them. Being in possession of facts in reference to original titles of lands, that have made many wealthy who were unaware they owned a dollar in that State, we invite all parties who had relatives who emigrated there, and have since died, to open a correspondence in reference thereto. We make no charge, unless successful, and, if good titles are found, expect an interest for looking them up and removing clouds from titles, etc. Parties interested will do well to address

PECTORAL BALM,

COUGHS, COLDS,

HOARSENESS,

BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA,

and the various Affections of the Lungs and Throat, and for the relief of Consumptive patients.

The Indian Turnip Pectoral BALM completely cures the most inveterate cases of Bronchitis, Catarrh, Incipient Consumption, Pulmonary Oppression, the Spasmodic Nervous Disorders which attend certain forms of Coughs, Sore Throat, and generally all cases of Inflammation of the Respiratory Organs. It has a soothing action upon the Cough, facilitates expectoration, checks the spitting of blood, and relieves fits of Asthma. In this last disease the Indian Turnip Pectoral Balm has been given with the greatest success. Its use in Whooping Cough remarkably relieves this distressing affection.

DR. HENRY'S

ROOT & PLANT

PILLS.

BY CLEANSING THE BLOOD

—AND—

AROUSING THE LIVER AND SECRETIVE ORGANS TO A HEALTHY ACTION,

DR. HENRY'S ROOT AND PLANT PILLS

Cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Headache, Pain in the Side, Numbness of the Hands and Feet, Dullness, Giddiness, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Loss of Appetite, Bilious Dysentery, Kidney Affections, Constipation, Debility, Fevers of all kinds, Dyspepsia, Jaundice and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Being free from mercury and other poisons, they can be taken at all times and under all circumstances, without regard to diet, business or pleasure.

They stimulate the weakened and distempered parts into healthy action, giving them strength to disburden themselves and throw off the obstructions which are the first cause of disease, without producing either nausea or griping.

All heavy and drowsy sensations, which are the forerunners of direful diseases, such as Apoplexy, Paralytic Strokes, etc., are effectually warded off by a few doses of these searching Pills.

Full directions around each box, in English, German, French and Spanish. Price—Twenty-five Cents a Box.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

We have nothing definite to refer to in the accounts from the country with regard to the cotton crop. We hear of considerable quantities which will no doubt come forward with the reported rise in the tributaries. There seems to be a general disposition to put crop estimates at 3,500,000 bales, but some count on higher figures—up to 3,800,000 and 3,900,000 bales, while short-crop men will not admit over 3,500,000.

The river is 14 feet below high water mark.

On Saturday the market opened with a light supply and moderate demand, under which factors found it difficult to realize Friday's prices, unless for the higher grades, which were scarce and held with continued firmness. In fact, during the morning most of the sales were at a falling off of ⅛c. Later in the day factors met the demand still more freely, in many cases accepting offers ¼c. less than what they had refused in the morning, but these concessions failed to impart any spirit to the movement, which continued inanimate throughout the day. The business summed up 3,800 bales, and at the close good ordinary was quoted at the wide range of 18⅛@18¼c., low middling at 19¼@19½c., and middling at 19⅞@20c. On Monday the sales were confined to 2,450 bales at a partial decline of ⅛c. On Tuesday the market opened with a moderate inquiry, but buyers claimed concessions, predicated on the decline at Liverpool and New York, which factors were unwilling to admit, and the movement during the morning was of limited extent, mostly at easier prices, indicating a decline of ⅛c. Later in the day, however, under the tenor of the news and the prospect of more liberal receipts, factors met the demand more freely, which brought buyers out with greater spirit, and a fair business was done at prices showing a falling off from Monday's reduced figures of ¼c. in low middling, and ⅝@⅞c. in other grades. The sales summed up 5,550 bales.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 504,906 bales, against 471,382 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 265,189 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 20,716 to Great Britain, of 31,851 to France, and of 116,223 to other foreign ports.

A SCENE AT THE VATICAN.

The London Times says that letters from Rome describe a curious scene which occurred at the Vatican on a recent Sunday: "It was deemed desirable by certain zealots who surrounded the Pope to give Cardinal Cullen a high opinion of the attachment of the Roman people to the temporal power. The Society for the Promotion of Catholic Interests took the matter in hand, and got together a vast number of persons belonging to the lower orders. It is said that as many as five thousand were collected, and that a large portion of them were paid for their assistance. The guidance of this motley army was undertaken by Don Pietro Aldobrandini, Prince of Sarsina, who was charged to read to the Pope an address, which an Italian paper says it dares not print, since to do so would be to transgress the laws and incur immediate seizure. The Pope replied by a speech, in which he explained that it is one thing to be now in Rome and another thing to remain there always. To this speech succeeded a tumult, such as the halls of the Vatican can rarely before have witnessed. The building rang with shouts of 'Vivi il Papa Re!' 'Viva il nostro, Sovrano!' and to these succeeded others of 'Death to Victor Emmanuel!' These latter cries, uttered in the presence of Christ's vicegerent upon earth, immensely scandalized the more moderate of the persons present, and the Pope himself seems to have understood that the commonest limits of decorum had been overstepped, and that the dignity of the Tiara was gravely compromised by a scandal he seemed to countenance. The furious cries of 'Death to the King' continuing, he felt that things had been allowed to go too far, and, making a sign to the fanatical assemblage to be silent, he again spoke, and said that their weapons must not be the sword and artillery, but prayer and good examples. The whole demonstration was of a nature to shock rather than to edify the person for whose benefit it is alleged to have been got up, and who is said to have been most unfavorably impressed by the character of the assemblage and the violence of the language used."

JOHN MILTON'S PRAYER.

There is something, says the Christian Intelligencer, almost inspired in John Milton's prayer for the Commonwealth of England, in the days of Cromwell. Christian patriotism could scarcely utter a loftier doxology, or implore greater blessings for a nation's weal:

"O thou, our most certain hope and defense. Now unite us entirely and appropriate us to thyself. Tie us everlastingly in willing homage to the prerogative of thy eternal throne. Let thine enemies all take counsel together and let it come to naught; let them decree, and do thou cancel it; let them gather themselves and be scattered; let them embattle themselves and be broken; let them embattle themselves and be broken, for thou art with us.

"Then, amidst the hymns and hallelujahs of saints, some one may, perhaps, be heard offering at high strains, in new and lofty measures, to sing and celebrate thy divine mercies and marvelous judgments in this land throughout all ages; whereby this great and warlike nation, instructed and inured to the fervent and continual practice of truth and righteousness, and casting far from her the rags of her old vices, may press on hard to that high and happy emulation, to be found the soberest, wisest and most Christian people at that day when thou, the eternal and shortly-expected King, shalt open the clouds, to judge the several kingdoms of the world, and distributing national honors and rewards to religious and just commonwealths, shalt put an end to all earthly tyrannies, proclaiming thy universal and mild monarchy through heaven and earth; where they undoubtedly that, by their labors, counsels and prayers, have been earnest for the common good of religion and their country, shall receive above the inferior orders of the blessed the regal addition of principalities, legions and thrones into their glorious titles, and, in supereminence of beatific vision progressing the dateless and irrevoluble circle of eternity, shall clasp inseparable hands with joy and bliss in overmeasure forever."

M. Remusat, French minister of foreign affairs, in answer to an application from Mayor Alvord, president of the San Francisco Art Association, informs him that plaster casts of the objects of art in the Public Museum of Paris have been ordered for the use of the School of Design to be opened in San Francisco. This valuable gift, it is explained, is in recognition of the liberal contribution of California to the French relief fund.

ADVICE TO A PREACHER.

"When you open your commission," says old John Berridge, "begin with laying open the innumerable corruptions of the hearts of your audience. Moses will lend you a knife which may be often whetted at his grindstone. Lay open the universal sinfulness of men's natures, the darkness of the mind, the frowardness of the will, the fretfulness of the temper, and the earthliness and sensuality of the affections. Speak of the evil of sin in its nature, its rebellion against God as our sovereign, ingratitude to God as our law-giver, and contempt both of his authority and love. Declare the evil of sin in its effects, bringing all our sicknesses, pains and snares—all the evils we feel and all the evils we fear. Lay open the spirituality of the law and its extent, reaching to every thought, word and action, and declaring every transgression, whether by omission or commission, deserving of death. Declare man's utter helplessness to change his nature or make his peace. When your hearers are deeply affected with these things, which is often seen by the hanging down of their heads, then preach Christ. Lay open the Savior's almighty power to soften the hard heart and give it repentance, to bring pardon to the broken heart, a spirit of prayer to the prayerless heart, holiness to the filthy heart, and faith to the unbelieving heart. Let them know that all the treasures of grace are lodged in Jesus Christ for the use of the poor, needy sinners, and that he is full of love as well as power, turns no beggar from his gate, but receives all comers kindly, loves to bless them, and bestows all his blessings free. Here you must wave the gospel flag, and magnify the Savior supremely. Speak it with a full mouth, that his blood can wash away the foulest stains, and his grace subdue the stoutest corruptions. Entreat the people to seek his grace—to seek it directly, to seek it diligently, to seek it constantly; and acquaint them that all who thus seek shall assuredly find the salvation of God."

HAPPY LIKE THE REST.

The doctor's pulpit stories, however, were not all of this gloomy cast. It is as far back as the time when we attended the Sunday school that we heard him tell a story for children to illustrate the humanity of Christ. Two girls one day were playing, and the more timid of the two started the deep question whether play was a quite right thing for Christian children to be engaged in? A certain minister preaching in the kirk she attended had said the previous Sunday that Christ was nowhere described in the Bible as having laughed. "You see, Katie, the minister said he was a man of sorrows." The other girl replied in a most practical fashion by stopping the play at once. "But," she added, "I dinna ken, Maggie, but I think surely that minister was saying more than he had any right to say. We read that Jesus went to a marriage in Cana, of Galilee. The marriage folk would be, like other marriage folk, happy and laughing. Do you think the Lord would sit glooming at them without ever a smile on his face? No, no, Maggie. I would not like to say 'laughing,' but I'm quite sure if he went to a wedding he would be happy like the rest while he was there. I think we might finish our play now."—Dr. Anderson, of Glasgow.

The great floods in China are attributed to the gradual upheaval of the northeast part of the country, which, it is said, has long been suspected, and it is now established to the satisfaction of all the geologists who have visited it. The effect, apparently, has been to cause the Yellow river to change its course, and to deprive the regions through which it passed of the natural means of drainage. As it is the custom in China to hold high officials responsible for whatever calamities occur within their jurisdiction, and as a victim is clearly needed in this case because the disaster has been of frequent occurrence, it seems not unlikely that Linnehang will be temporarily degraded for neglecting or being unable to prevent the overflow of the pent-up waters.

A man may be a heretic in the truth, and if he believes things only because his pastor says so, or the assembly so determines, without knowing other reason, though his belief be true, yet the very truth he holds becomes his heresy.—Milton.

Since the generality of persons act from impulse much more than from principle, men are neither so good nor so bad as we are apt to think them.—Hare.

What an argument in favor of social connections is the observation that, by communicating our grief we have less, and by communicating our pleasures we have more.—Greville.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.
Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.
G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.
T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.
———, Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

|---|---|
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College | $60 00 |
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department | 40 00 |
| Contingent expenses | 5 00 |

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

THE PATENT BRIDGE

after a brief usage. There are many other advantages to which we could call attention, but our space will not admit. Catalogues and Price Lists, containing full particulars of this and other popular games, mailed to any address on application. Thirteen different styles of Croquet, from $4 to $20 a set. Address

THE BLIND MEN AND THE ELEPHANT.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

It was six men of Indostan,
To learning much inclined,
Who went to see the Elephant,
(Though all of them were blind,)
That each by observation
Might satisfy his mind.

The First approached the Elephant,
And, happening to fall
Against his broad and sturdy side,
At once began to bawl:
"God bless me! But the Elephant
Is very like a wall!"

The Second, feeling of the tusk,
Cried: "Ho! What have we here
So very round and smooth and sharp?
To me 'tis mighty clear
This wonder of an Elephant
Is very like a spear!"

The Third approached the animal,
And, happening to take
The squirming trunk within his hands,
Thus boldly up and spake:
"I see," quoth he, "the Elephant
Is very like a snake!"

The Fourth reached out his eager hand,
And felt about the knee;
"What most this wondrous beast is like
Is mighty plain," quoth he,
"'Tis clear enough the Elephant
Is very like a tree!"

The Fifth, who chanced to touch the ear,
Said: "Even the blindest man
Can tell what this resembles most,
Deny the fact who can,
This marvel of an Elephant
Is very like a fan!"

The Sixth no sooner had begun
About the beast to grope,
Than, seizing on the swinging tail
That fell within his scope:
"I see, quoth he, "the Elephant
Is very like a rope!"

And so these men of Indostan
Disputed loud and long,
Each in his own opinion
Exceeding stiff and strong,
Though each was partly in the right,
And all were in the wrong!

New York Ledger.

THE FIRST CABINET.

THE MEN WHO SURROUNDED WASHINGTON.

Mr. Parton, in the January Atlantic, thus describes Washington and his first cabinet:

Age had not quenched the vivacity of either of the four secretaries—Jefferson, forty-seven; Knox, forty; Randolph, thirty-seven; Hamilton, thirty-three. When, in the world's history, was so young a group charged with a task so new, so difficult, so momentous?

Such were the gentlemen who were gathered round the council table at the President's house in New York in 1780; at the head of the table, General Washington, now fifty-eight, his frame as erect as ever, but his face showing the deep traces of the thousand anxious hours he had passed. Not versed in the lore of schools, but gifted with a great sum of intellect, the eternal glory of this man is that he used all the mind he had in patient endeavors to find out the right way; ever on the watch to keep out of his decision everything like bias or prejudice; never deciding till he had exhausted every source of elucidation within his reach. Some question he could not decide with his own mind, and he knew he could not. In such cases he bent all his powers to ascertaining how the subject appeared to minds fitted to grapple with it, and getting them to view it without prejudice.

I am delighted to learn that Mr. Carlyle can seldom hear the name of Washington pronounced without breaking forth with an explosion of contempt, especially, it is said, if there is an American within hearing. Washington is the exact opposite of a fell Carlylean hero. His glory is that he was not richly endowed, not sufficient unto himself, not indifferent to human rights, opinions and prefereuces; but, feeling deeply his need of help, sought it, where alone it was to be found, in minds fitted by nature and training to supply his lack. It is this heartfelt desire to be right which shines so affectingly from the plain words of Washington, and gives him rank so far above the gorgeous bandits whom hero worshipers adore.

On the right of the President, in the place of honor, sat Jefferson, now forty-seven, the senior of all his colleagues; older in public service, too, than any of them; tall, erect, ruddy; noticeably quiet and unobtrusive in his address and demeanor; the least pugnacious of men. Not a fanatic, not an enthusiast; but an old-fashioned Whig, nurtured upon "old Coke," enlightened by twenty-five years' intense discussion—with pen, tongue and sword—of Cokean principles. Fresh from the latest commentary upon Coke—the ruins of the Bastile—and wearing still his red Paris waistcoat and breeches, he was an object of particular interest to all men, and, doubtless, often relieved the severity of business by some thrilling relation out of his late foreign experience.

Opposite him, on the President's left, was the place of Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury, in all the alertness and vigor of thirty-two years. If time had matured his talents, it had not lessened his self-sufficiency; because, as yet, all his short life had been success, and he had associated chiefly with men who possessed nothing either of his fluency or his arithmetic. A positive, vehement little gentleman, with as firm a faith in the apparatus of finance as General Knox had in great guns. He was now in the full tide of activity, lobbying measures through Congress, and organizing the Treasury Department—the most conspicuous man in the administration, except the President. As usual his unseen work was his best. In organizing a system of collecting, keeping and disbursing the revenue, he employed so much tact, forethought and fertility that his successors have each, in turn, admired and retained his most important devices. He arranged the system so that the Secretary of the Treasury at any time or moment could survey the whole working of it, and he held at command all the resources of the United States, subject to lawful use, without being able to divert one dollar to a purpose not specially authorized. He could not draw his own pittance of salary without the signatures of the four chief officers of the department—controller, auditor, treasurer and register.

NO BRAINS.

Judge Ray, the temperance lecturer, in one of his efforts, get off the following hard hit at "moderate drinkers:"

"All those who in youth acquire a habit of drinking whisky, at forty years of age will be total abstainers or drunkards. No person can use whisky for years with moderation. If there is a person in the audience before me whose experience disputes this, let him make it known. I will account for it, or acknowledge that I am mistaken."

A tall, large man arose, and, folding his arms across his breast, said:

"I offer myself as one whose experience contradicts your statements."

"Are you a moderate drinker?"

"I am."

"How long have you drank in moderation?"

"Forty years."

"And never been intoxicated?"

"Never."

"Well," remarked the judge, scanning the subject from head to foot, "yours is a singular case, yet I think it is easily accounted for. I am reminded by it of a little story. A colored man, with a loaf of bread and a bottle of whisky, sat down to dine on the bank of a clear stream. In breaking the bread he dropped some crumbs into the water. These were eagerly seized and eaten by the fish. This circumstance suggested to the darkey the idea of dipping the bread into the whisky and feeding it to them. It worked well. Some of the fish ate it, and became drunk and floated upon the surface. In this way he easily caught a large number. But in the stream was a large fish, very unlike the rest. It partook freely of the bread and whisky with no perceptible effect. It was shy of every effort of the darkey to take it. He resolved to take it at all hazards, that he might learn its name and nature. He procured a net, and, after much effort, caught the fish, carried it to a colored neighbor, and asked his opinion in the matter. The other surveyed the wonder a moment, and then said: 'Samho, I understand dis case; dis fish is a mullet head, it aint got any brains.' In other words," added the judge, "alcohol affects only the brain, and, of course, those having none, may drink without injury." The storm of laughter which followed drove the "moderate drinker" from the house.—Pittsburg Prompter.

WRITERS OF THE BIBLE.—Although good men wrote the Bible, our faith in the Bible does not rest on the goodness of the men who wrote it. The fatal facility with which men glide into the worship of men may suggest another reason why some of the channels chosen for conveying the mind of God were marred by glaring deficiencies. Among many earthen vessels, in various measures purged of their filthiness, may not the Divine Administrator in wisdom select for actual use some of the least pure, in order by that grosser argument to force into grosser minds the conviction that the excellency of the power is all of God? If no stain of sin could be traced on their character, no error noted in their life, it is certain that the Bible would not have served all the purposes which it now serves among men. It would have been God-like, indeed, in matter and in mold; but it would not have reached down to the low estate of man—it would not have penetrated to the sores of a human heart. For engraving the life-lessons of his word our Father uses only diamonds; but in every diamond there is a flaw, in some a greater, and in some a less.—Dr. Arnot.

A MORALIST SAYS: "Profanity never did any man the least good. No man is richer or happier or wiser for it. It commends no one to society; it is disgusting to the refined, and abominable to the good.

THINK upon sin, and repent; think upon God, and return; think upon grace, and hope; think upon glory, and press onward.

GOING TO LIBERIA.

The last expedition of the American Colonization Society embarked from New York on the twenty-first of November with one hundred and fifty freedmen from Georgia. Some sixty of them were professing Christians, and one a minister of the gospel. They were mostly composed of families. On their arrival in this city by the steamer San Salvador from Savannah, they were at once most kindly transferred by a government steamer to the bark Casper, lying off the Battery, in which they were to take passage for Liberia. Messrs. Yates and Porterfield, the owners of the vessel, had built houses on the main deck for them, and made every other necessary provision for their health and comfort on the voyage. They were accompanied by Dr. John L. Lewis, a native Liberian, who, having finished his course of medical studies and received his M. D. from Dartmouth College, returns to Liberia to enter upon the duties of his profession. About one-third of the emigrants are bound for Arthington on the St. Paul's, and will land at Monrovia; the rest of them will go on to Cape Palmas.

In addition to the stores usually shipped by the society for the support and use of emigrants after their arrival, a cane sugar mill was shipped to an enterprising Liberian, by the name of Jefferson Bracewell, and by his order, for which he pays $225, exclusive of insurance and freight.

By the liberality of A. S. Barnes & Co. about $150 worth of school books were also put on board for the use of the society's schools in Liberia.

This company of emigrants, now on their way to that country, are but a fraction of the applicants who desire to go. And why should they not be sent? Every family that goes to that land carries more or less of Christian civilization. They at least carry Christian dress and the English language; and more than a quarter part of all that go are church members, and a goodly number of them licensed ministers of the gospel. Surely such accessions to the Liberia republic must be desirable.—New York Observer.

The Biggest Bsehivs in the World.

The following is from the San Francisco Commercial Herald: "In Los Angeles county, on the eastern slope of the San Fernando range of mountains, and in the immediate vicinity of the Leaming Petroleum Company's oil region, there is the most wonderful collection of wild honey in existence. The hive is located in a rift, which penetrates the rock to the depth of probably one hundred and sixty feet. The orifice is thirty feet long and seventeen feet wide—four passages. This rift was discovered to be the abiding place of a swarm of bees that is represented as coming out in a nearly solid column one foot in diameter. Certain parties have endeavored to descend to the immense store of honey collected by these bees, but were invariably driven back, and one man lost his life in the effort. Others have, at the expense of much labor and money, built a scaffold one hundred and twenty-five feet high, in the hope of reaching a place whence they could run adrift into the rock, and extract its well-hoarded sweets, but finally ceased their work. Within four years the bees have added not less than fifteen feet of depth to their treasure, as ascertained by actual measurement, and it is thought that at the present time there cannot be less than eight or ten tons of honey in the rock. A man named B. Brophy lives in a cabin not far from the spot, and obtained from the melting of the honey by the sun's heat more than enough for his family requirements. All through that region immense stores of wild honey are found in trees, in the rocks, in nearly every place where its industrious manufacturers think—for bees seem to think—that it will be secure. They consume a very small proportion, as the climate enables them to keep up operations nearly every day in the year, and flowers of some sort are always in bloom. It must be a very severe season indeed when the little fellows are not seen abroad in vast numbers, busily engaged in their mellifluous work."

REMEMBERING HIS FELLOW-WORKMAN.—Mr. Josiah Mason, of Birmingham, England, a benevolent Wesleyan, who has made a large fortune in the manufacture of steel pens, has given $500,000 to found a college for the thorough, systematic, scientific instruction of the workmen in that vicinity. A few years since he built and endowed the Erdington Orphanage, at a cost of $1,425,000, where there are now accommodations for five hundred inmates. He has now received the honor of knighthood from the Queen.

MANY a Christian forgets his prayers every day who has never forgotten his breakfast so much as once during his whole lifetime.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY lost heavily by the Boston fire. It held property in the burnt district to the amount of $562,000, value of land included, and it will cost $300,000 to rebuild. It has good insurance for $100,000, and its real loss will, therefore, be about $200,000. "This," says President Elliott, "we must beg." By these losses the University is cut off from about $40,000 of rent until it can rebuild. From this income several of the professors' salaries were paid, a portion was used for the repair of college buildings, and the remainder for every-day needs. This $40,000 and $10,000 more are needed to meet insurance assessments, and reinsurance of collections and libraries, in order that the work may go on at Cambridge. The loss falls about equally on the different departments.

MANNERS are but the happy ways of doing things.

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

DOMESTIC.

—LOUISVILLE, Jan. 8.—An accident occurred last night at Belmont station, on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, caused by a broken rail. Three cars were thrown from the track, and ran some distance on the ties, and one turned over; one caught fire, but was speedily extinguished.

About sixty passengers were on the train, and some twenty were injured, most of them slightly. Only five or six were much hurt. Miss Mary Crawley received a frightful gash over the left eye, and will probably lose the eye. Hon. Henry D. McHenry, member of Congress from Hartford, Kentucky, en route to Washington, shoulder dislocated and body bruised; Mrs. Houston, of Tuscumbia, Alabama, collar bone broken and severe internal injuries; R. J. Daniel, of Louisville, cut on the left arm, severing artery; Thomas Stevens, of Beaver Dam, Kentucky, right hand badly cut, shoulders much bruised; H. B. and Miss Taylor, of Chicago, several bruises. Others received bruises and scratches, but none of a severe nature.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—The compositors of the Tribune at a chapel meeting to-day approved of the proposition that printing offices in the United States give one or more pounds of old type each for the purpose of making a statue of Horace Greeley, to be erected over his grave in Greenwood, and ask compositors of the country to give the proceeds of one thousand ems each, set up on February 3 next, the sixty-second anniversary of the birth of Greeley, the money to be forwarded to the president of New York Typographical Union No. 6, at No. 2 Frame street, of this city, of which Union Mr. Greeley was the first president.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10. The friends of the cotton tax refunding scheme are making a powerful, and what they think will prove a successful movement. In furtherance of their scheme circular accompanied by arguments from Judge B. R. Curtis, Messrs. Hughes and Starkey and Reverdy V. Johnson, as well as memorials and resolutions of nearly all the Southern States, signed by all the members from the cotton States present.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10. A preliminary survey of the Texas Pacific railroad is completed from San Diego to Fort Yuma. The surveying party are now going east to join Colonel Scott's surveying expedition from Texas. The practicability of the route from San Diego to Fort Yuma is demonstrated.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11. It is understood that the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections have decided, in the Louisiana case, not to send any commissioners to New Orleans to take testimony at present, but that they have to-day subpœnaed both of the returning boards, known as the Wharton Board and the Bovee Board, to appear before them in Washington. An effort will be made by the committee to have presented for their investigation all the returns of the local vote from the various parishes in Louisiana.

EUFAULA, ALA., Jan. 11. One of the flues of the left-hand boiler of the upward-bound steamer Julia Saint Clair exploded near here at half-past eleven last night, scalding thirteen, mostly colored deck hands and firemen. One died immediately, one drowned, two mortally injured, one unaccounted for. Among the scalded is Engineer Berry, also injured in the face.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 13. The President sent to the House of Representatives to-day, in answer to the resolution of that body of the sixteenth of December last, a mass of papers upon the subject of Louisiana political affairs, furnished by Attorney General Williams. The papers embrace copies of the report of judicial proceedings, correspondence by mail and telegraph, memorials and other matter, nearly all of which have heretofore been before the public.

The House adopted a resolution for an inquiry into the conduct of Judge Durell, of Louisiana, with a view to his impeachment. An animated discussion occurred in the House on a resolution offered by Mr. Sheldon, of Louisiana, for the appointment of a joint select committee on the Louisiana troubles. It was opposed by many of the leading members on both sides of the House, and advocated by others. Finally a resolution, offered by Mr. Garfield, of Ohio, was adopted in its stead, referring the whole matter, with a message from the President thereon, to the Judiciary Committee.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14. The Judiciary Committee of the House did nothing this morning regarding Louisiana complications. They will wait till the papers submitted to them are printed.

A London letter says that the retirement of Bismarck is really due to differences between him and the Emperor William on the church question. The Kaiser becomes alarmed at Bismarck's course toward the Catholics, and declined further to follow the Prince in his policy.

FOREIGN.

BERNE, Jan. 8.—The Swiss Federal Council has threatened to use vigorous measures against the Canton of Vilais, because Jesuit masters have been tolerated in the schools.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—Napoleon slept soundly last night, better than the preceding night. This morning his physicians had a consultation, and decided to perform another operation at noon to-day.

At the time of the consultation his pulse was strong and regular—eighty-four to the minute. At twenty-five minutes past ten signs of sinking appeared, the action of the heart suddenly failed, and he died forty-five minutes past ten o'clock.

The sudden death of the ex-Emperor Napoleon took everybody at Chiselhurst, as well as in London, by surprise. The relatives, attendants and household, even the physicians, were unprepared for it. The Emperor had passed a comparatively comfortable night. His strength seemed undiminished, and at a consultation early in the morning it was thought he could bear a third operation, which was fully determined upon.

So great was the confidence felt in the patient's condition that the prince imperial was permitted to return to Woolwich to resume his studies. Dr. Guel went to London yesterday, and many of the Emperor's personal friends, who hastened to Chiselhurst at the first alarm, returned to their homes.

There was no reason whatever to apprehend a fatal result in the case up to nine A. M., when new and dangerous symptoms set in. The Emperor's vital forces seemed to leave him all at once, and he commenced to sink with alarming rapidity.

The Emperor's private chaplain was informed of the danger, and started for Chiselhurst. All arrived too late; the prince was not to see his father again alive. Dr. Guel and the clergymen just reached the park gates as the Emperor expired.

Since the Emperor's death the residence at Chiselhurst has been strictly closed to all but the nearest friends and relatives. The physicians state that death resulted from causes independent of the surgical operations to which the patient was subjected.

The event produces a deep impression in London, where the Emperor was always personally very popular with the masses. The evening journals publish long obituaries and expressions of mourning.

The Empress Eugenie sweeps continually and refuses consolation. Louis, the prince imperial, who arrived after his father died, is prostrated with grief. The Emperor's death was caused by embolism. It was so sudden that the last sacrament was not administered, the priest arriving after all was over. The body will be interred at Chiselhurst until it can be moved to France. Universal sorrow prevails in London.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Empress Eugenie and all the household of Chiselhurst were present at the bedside of Napoleon when he died.

The Emperor showed slight signs of consciousness toward his last moments, and spoke to the Empress in a very feeble tone of voice.

The last indication of life was a smile, when the Empress knelt and kissed her dying husband. She was completely overcome by her emotions, and fainted at his bedside.

The prince imperial, who had been summoned by telegraph from Woolwich, arrived at Chiselhurst fifteen minutes after the death of the Emperor. He was greatly affected, and kissed the face of his dead father several times. The Emperor died peacefully; he passed away without the slightest sign of pain.

His death is attributed to syncope from embolism. A post-mortem examination remains to be made to-day. The body will lie in state several days.

Previous to the funeral Eugenie knelt at the bedside, and for several hours after the death of the Emperor she was engaged in prayer.

Her majesty Queen Victoria has sent a message of condolence to the Empress in her sad bereavement.

PARIS, Jan. 13. It is said the French government will permit the final interment of Napoleon's remains in France, if the funeral is made strictly private, and deceased is buried as ex-Emperor, and not as Emperor. The ceremonies must be simply of a religious character.

JAPANESE PROGRESS.—Not content with the introduction of steamships, electric telegraphs, sewing machines, railroads, national schools and a great university, with commercial treaties and religious toleration, the new government of the young Mikado has taken a still greater stride. The Japan Gazette announces that it is determined to establish, next month, an elective parliament of six hundred members, with two houses. Thus quickly does popular representative government take the place of the old hereditary feudalism of that remarkable empire. This revolution is one of the most wonderful in history. The Mikado bids fair to be the Washington of Japan.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE new President of Mexico, Lerdo de Tejada, is a comparatively young man, being but forty-five years of age. He possesses energy, courage, eloquence, and is withal a man of considerable educational acquirements. He was born in Jalapa, in the State of Vera Cruz, in 1825, and in that town he began his studies. He studied jurisprudence in the City of Mexico, in the College of Ydlefonso, where he received his title of advocate in 1851. Lerdo was foreign minister when the unsuccessful effort was made by the United States to save the life of Maximilian.

Father Burke.

This famous Dominican priest, and Ireland's defender, so called, is in New Orleans. There was a large turn-out of Irish Catholics to welcome him on Sunday, the fifth instant, a long procession with music and banners, and imposing services at St. Patrick's church. We quote as follows from the Picayune:

OPENING OF THE MISSION.

At an early hour yesterday morning Father Burke and suite, consisting of Fathers Rooney, Lilly, Turner and Dunahirt, the latter from Lapland, Norway, arrived in the city. At half-past nine A. M. yesterday, thus attended, and accompanied also by a large body of the priesthood, he joined the procession from the pastoral residence to the church of St. Patrick, which was headed by the cross, with two acolytes, followed by a number of choir boys. After these came the priests, and then followed the Archbishop and suite between the Deacons of Honor, and preceded by his assistant priests.

The procession was received at the door of the church by the reverend pastor, Father Allen, and thence advanced immediately to the sanctuary.

THE MASS.

After a short delay in the sanctuary, the Archbishop proceeded to his throne, attended by his usual ministers, and was there invested with his episcopal robes. Thus prepared and leaving his throne, he approached the altar and began the celebration of mass. A select choir, with Mme. Zeiss-Dennis as soprano and principal leader, rendered "mass" which was Weber's, in C, with great effect.

THE BLESSING.

While the choir sang the "Veni Creator," Father Burke presented himself before the Archbishop and invoked his blessing. That being given, the Archbishop then blessed the distinguished priest and Irish patriot to the vast throng that filled the capacious church, using terms of high but just praise.

THE PRESENTATION AND SERMON.

The presentation of Father Burke produced a profound sensation throughout the vast assemblage, and all eyes were turned to behold Ireland's heroic defender. His plain and unostentatious dress and his humble bearing impressed all hearts as he proceeded to the pulpit. Throughout his discourse the people listened with profound attention. His pathos moved their hearts, and his burning eloquence, which sometimes broke out in dazzling splendor, entranced every hearer. His text was: "What doth it profit to man to gain the whole world if he loses his own soul."

At the conclusion of the sermon the mass was continued, and, being finally ended, the procession, in the order of its coming, returned to the pastoral residence.

United States Census of 1870 for Louisiana.

OFFICIAL FIGURES OF POPULATION AND VOTERS.

The Picayune says: Along with the official returns of the election of November 4, in this State, we publish, for the information of our readers and for comparison, the United States census made of the population of Louisiana in 1870. These statements are taken directly from the official papers with no little labor, and have never before appeared in print.

JUST as we are about to send our last forms to press, says the Western Methodist of December 14, we receive intelligence of the death of the Rev. G. W. D. Harris, D. D., and of the extreme illness of his wife—the partner of his joys and sorrows through a long course of years. The Rev. H. B. Avery, Byersburg, Tennessee, December 9, writes: "Our venerable father in Israel, the Rev. G. W. D. Harris, died in great peace this morning at half-past three o'clock. He was taken ill the day after he reached home from Conference at Somerville. His disease was pneumonia, and, though his sufferings were great, he endured them with great patience—a murmur did not escape his lips. He said that it was all right, and that the religion he had so long recommended to others sustained him in his last afflictions. Sister Harris is also at the point of death—it is not thought that she will survive through this day. Suitable memoirs will be prepared in due time."

WHEN a man owns himself to have been in error, it is but telling you in other words that he is wiser than he was before.

From the Work.

WINNSBORO CIRCUIT.—Mr. Editor: We have just closed our fourth and last Quarterly Conference, for this circuit, for the year. The weather being very inclement, our congregations were small; but we trust that there were good seeds sown, which may be developed in the conversion of some poor wanderer.

I wish to make a brief statement of the work for the year. There have been about one hundred and fifty or sixty conversions, and three hundred and twenty accessions to the church, and a deep religious feeling seems to pervade the entire circuit. Persons who, at the beginning of the year, were not members of the church, now present their morning and evening sacrifices on their family altars to God; and some who were then merely nominal members are now polished stones in the temple of our God.

In proof of the above statement, when I entered on the work there were no church edifices in which to worship God, which we could call our own. But now we have two, worth about $5,000 when completed, which will be ready for the next preacher, and arrangements made for two others; we also have procured a lot of ground for a parsonage in the town of Winnsboro, so that the next preacher will not, as I have done, live from place to place.

And now in a few days I will start to the Annual Conference, and, for aught I know, by the providence of Heaven may be sent to other and distant fields of labor, and may not again be blessed with the privilege of meeting this people in time. But let the wheel of fortune roll me wheresoever it may, it will ever be a soul and mental feast to call to mind some of the happy moments spent on Winnsboro circuit. It is not in the generosity of the human heart to sever the cords of Christian love and friendship from this people; for in them I have found fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters and friends, the thought of whom will be fresh in my memory as long as life shall last. Indeed, this year will ever be a bright oasis in the desert of life. May God's blessings attend them through life's stormy career, comfort them in death, and grant us a happy meeting in the unsullied climes of bliss.

Praise Children.

There is an old superstition that praise is too good a thing to be given to the children; that it is too rich for their mental and moral digestion. Some parents are so afraid that a child will grow proud that they never praise him, and this course is often disastrous. It is apt to produce either too much self-assertion or self-assertion is the legitimate outgrowth of the withholding of commendation to which one is entitled, or to engender a self-distrust, or melancholy hopelessness of disposition.

Praise is sunshine to a child, and there is no child that does not need it. It is the high reward of one's struggle to do right. Thomas Hughes says that you can never get a man's best out of him without praise. Many a sensible child, we believe, dies of hunger for kind commendation. Many a child, starving for the praise that a parent should give, runs off eagerly after the designing flatteries of others.

To withhold praise where it is due is dishonest, and in the case of such a course often leads a stinging sense of injustice. Motives of common justice, as well as regard for the future of the child, should influence the parent to give generous praise for all that deserves it. Of course there is a difference in the constitution of children. Some cannot bear so much praise as others, and some need a great deal.

It should never be indiscriminate. We remember a wonderful woman who taught school in one village until she educated a part of three generations. She was one of the most successful teachers. But her success lay in her gift of praising with discrimination. A lad boy who was a good scholar got praises for his brilliancy, sandwiched between her admonitions for his bad behavior, and so was won to a better life; and we recall a good girl who had no gift of learning rapidly, but who was saved from utter despair by the praise she got for her untiring industry. Into the discouraged hearts of the children the praise of the teacher came like sunlight. And the virtues, like other fruits, can only ripen in the sunshine. Edward Eggleston.

MESSRS. BRYANT AND GODWIN, of the Evening Post, and the Brooks brothers, of the Express, are the oldest editors remaining on the New York city press. Mr. Bryant is older than either Bennett or Greeley, and is the possessor of vigorous health and unabated intellectual energy. The Brooks brothers have managed the Express for thirty years. Mr. Raymond, at his death, left a son, who soon afterward sold out his stock in the Times, leaving the family at present no interest in the paper. Mr. Bennett left his paper to his only son, who is possessed of the most profitable of all American journals, the revenue being, it is estimated, from $500,000 to $700,000 per annum.

RESIGNATION OF TREASURER. Rev. Thomas Carlton, D. D., having resigned his office, the board elected Rev. Reuben Nelson, D. D., the senior book agent, treasurer of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, his term of service commencing at once.

A STRONG ARGUMENT against Mr. Darwin's theory of deriving all forms of life from a few and possibly from a single organism in the remote past is brought forward by Dr. Bastian, in his lately-published "Beginnings of Life." He says that it is almost inconceivable that molds, moneres, Bacteria, Amœbæ, and a thousand other minute and simple organisms should exist so universally over the earth and under such an infinite variety of forms, if all were descended from ancestors which could hardly have been more simple in the past, however remote, and which then, as well as meantime, have been subject to those causes of change which exist still, and have produced the varied forms of higher plants and animals. Were the laws and conditions which led to the rise of the earliest organisms of so exceptional a nature as never to have occurred since? Is it probable that the very existence of life on the earth depended on so rare a set of conditions that, having once occurred, it should never occur again in the whole interval between the Laurentian period and the present day? Every a priori consideration would be in favor of continued de novo productions of the lower forms of life, and of the direct transformations of these into various higher and complex organisms.

In this light we obtain an entirely new conception of the genealogical history of the various existing forms. We have no longer only one "tree of life," but a vast number of them, all having their roots in a similar substratum of the lowest organic forms, evolved at various points in the earth's history, but differing greatly in their subsequent development. Many of them have become extinct, and of existing living things belong to portions of only a few of them, some of which may be comparatively recent, while others may have their roots far back in the past, anterior to the earliest epochs of which geology affords us a record. Yet, notwithstanding this diversity and separateness of origin, progress in organization seems to have advanced. Similar types of form may, therefore, again and again have arisen. The highest or vertebrate grade of organization may have been attained by ultimate branches of many different "trees of life."

It is altogether possible that this conception will throw much light on obscure and difficult questions of biological classification, and on geological facts impossible to be reconciled with Mr. Darwin's hypothesis that all organic forms have descended from a single remote source.

Reasons for Taking and Circulating.

The Evangelical Messenger, one of the best religious papers in the country, says:

1. A good religious paper makes Christians more intelligent.
2. It makes them more useful.
3. It secures better pay for the pastor.
4. It secures better teachers for the Sunday school.
5. It secures better attendance at the prayer meeting.
6. It leads to a better understanding of the Scriptures.
7. It increases interest in the spread of the gospel.
8. It helps to settle many difficulties.
9. It gives unity of faith and practice in the denomination.
10. It exposes error.
11. It places weapons in the hands of all to defend the truth.
12. It affords a channel of communication between brethren.
13. It gives the news from the churches.
14. It brings out the talent of the denomination and makes it useful on a wider scale.
15. It throws light upon obscure questions of practical interest.
16. It gives light on obscure passages of the Bible.
17. It cultivates a taste for reading.
18. It makes the children more intelligent.
19. It makes better parents.
20. It makes better children.
21. It awakens interest for the salvation of souls.
22. It gives general religious news.
23. It gives the more important current news of general interest.

"AH! SIR, THAT WORD BELIEVE." "I am no scholar," said an old man to me in a Hapshire workhouse; "I have taught myself the last fifteen years, and now I can read a good bit of the Bible; but I can't make out all the big words, you know, sir. Ah! sir, that word 'believe!' that is a great word with me: it is everything to me, and, as far as I can make out, there is no other way of getting to Jesus. He says, 'Come unto Me,' and I thank God I am very happy in coming to him by believing that he died for me, and that 'he washed all my sins away.'" And truly, as the old man thus spoke, his venerable face brightened up with joy and peace in believing. Have you, dear reader, joy and peace in believing? Are your sins washed away by the blood of Jesus? There is, indeed, salvation in no other; for there is "none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Acts iv, 12. Therefore look to Jesus, dear reader, and be reconciled to God now; for "he has made him Christ to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." Believe it!

NO AMUSEMENT is innocent which takes the soul away from Jesus, or does what it can to take it away.—Hewitson.

Brooklyn Tabernacle Burned.

As the members of the Tabernacle congregation in Brooklyn were preparing to assemble for worship, last Sunday morning, they were startled and saddened at finding their house enveloped in flames. At half-past ten, the time of commencing service, the building was falling in ruins before their eyes. The fire broke out less than an hour before, but so rapid was its progress that in thirty minutes the entire edifice was involved and doomed to destruction, despite the efforts of the firemen. The intelligence of the disaster spread rapidly over the city, and immediately expressions of sympathy flowed in from other churches to the homeless congregation. Ten of them offered their own edifices to the Tabernacle people for services in the afternoon and evening, including Plymouth church, the Classon, Clinton and Lafayette avenue churches, the John Plane Congregational, the First and Second Presbyterian, two Baptist and one Methodist church. The invitation of Mr. Beecher's church was accepted, and the congregation attended services there in the evening, the occasion drawing a crowded audience. The pastor, Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage, preached the sermon he had intended for the morning, alluding first, as follows, to the event of the day:

"In the village where I once lived on a cold night, there was a cry of fire. House after house was consumed. But there was in the village a large, hospitable dwelling, and as soon as the people were burned out they came into this common center. The good man at the house stood at the door and said, 'Come in,' and the little children, as they were brought to the door, some of them wrapped in blankets and shawls, were taken in, and the old people that came in from their consumed dwellings were seated around the fire. And the good man of the house told them that all would be well. This is a very cold day to be burned out. But we come into this hospitable house to-night, and gather around this great, warm fire of Christian kindness and love; and it is good to be here. The Lord built the Tabernacle and the Lord let it burn down. Blessed be the name of the Lord! We don't feel like sitting down in discouragement, although the place was very dear. Our hearts there were filled with comfort, and to us, many a time, old Jesus appear, his face radiant as the sun. To-day, when the Christian sympathy came in from Plymouth church and from ten other churches of the city, all offering us their houses of worship to us, I must say I was deeply moved. Tell me for that there is no kindness between churches, or that there is no such thing as Christian brotherhood? Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love!"

The Brooklyn Tabernacle was probably the largest church in the country, as it was capable of seating twelve thousand five hundred people. It was built on the model of an ample theater and had no galleries. Although called fire-proof, it was in reality a wooden structure, as to the interior as any other frame edifice. Its walls were encased in layers of thin, corrugated iron, which offered no resistance to the flames from the floor and pews, and large quantity of timber in the aisles, vestibule and tower. The cost of the building was about $75,000, without the organ, which was the superb instrument built for and used at the first Boston jubilee. The Tabernacle was built by the present congregation for Dr. Talmage, in 1870, and dedicated the same year. It was enlarged and rededicated in 1871.

The cause of the fire appears to have been a defect in the heater. The sexton and his assistant had been attending to the furnaces, and in a short time after, while arranging the pulpit, organ, etc., for service, were surprised to see flames burst out from the floor in one corner. They were unable to subdue them with pails of water, and when the fire engines arrived the fire was beyond control.

The trustees of the church propose to erect another edifice at once; and for the present the congregation will worship, morning and evening, at the Academy of Music. New York Observer.

M. GANNEAN, whose name is so well known in connection with the Moabite stone, and responsible for its destruction, has published in the Revue Archéologique, a list of Hebrew, Greek and Latin inscriptions discovered by himself in Palestine. Twelve of these are described as Hebrew inscriptions, including No. 1 the Moabite stone; Nos. 2 and 3 inscriptions in Phœnician characters found at Silwan, and presented to the British Museum; Nos. 4 and 5 Greek inscriptions, with a single word in Archaic Hebrew. There were also one in each of the following characters: hieroglyphic, found at Gaza; cuneiform, found at Es Salahieh; ancient Aramaic, Phœnician, Nabathean, Estrangelo, Pehlevi and seventeen Latin and fifty-six Greek inscriptions. A large number of engraved stones, graffiti, texts of the Crusades, coins and other inscriptions, not all from Palestine, are included in the catalogue.

WE ARE GLAD TO LEARN that the Memphis Conference Female Institute, Jackson, Tennessee, is greatly prospering under the presidency of Rev. A. W. Jones, D. D. Dr. Jones is assisted by a full and competent faculty.

SEND ME.

BY REV. DANIEL MARCH, D. D.

Hark, the voice of Jesus crying:
Who will go and work to-day?
Fields are white and harvests waiting;
Who will bear the sheaves away?
Loud and long the Master calleth,
Rich reward he offers free;
Who will answer, gladly saying:
"Here am I; send me, send me?"

If you cannot cross the ocean
And the heathen lands explore,
You can find the heathen nearer,
You can help them at your door.
If you cannot give your thousands,
You can give the widow's mite,
And the least you give for Jesus
Will be precious in his sight.

If you cannot speak like angels,
If you cannot preach like Paul,
You can tell the love of Jesus—
You can say he died for all.
If you cannot rouse the wicked
With the judgment's dread alarms,
You can lead the little children
To the Savior's waiting arms.

Let none hear you idly saying,
"There is nothing I can do,"
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task he gives you gladly,
Let his work your pleasure be;
Answer quickly when he calleth;
"Here am I; send me, send me."

The Northern General Conference ON INTOXICATING LIQUORS, GAMES OF CHANCE AND WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

MR. EDITOR: Several weeks since I addressed to you two articles on the subject named above, which you were pleased to publish, and in closing the latter of the two I expressed my purpose to continue the discussion. This the requirements of a laborious profession have prevented my doing to this date; and, though neither you nor your readers may have observed my omission, I now propose to make a further demand upon your patience.

In considering the rule of Discipline relating to "Imprudences and improprieties," as amended by the late General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, I have already remarked upon the specific prohibition of "the buying or selling or using intoxicating liquors as a beverage." I next call attention to the prohibition of "dancing," "attending dancing parties," and "patronizing dancing schools." Dancing is, I believe, adjudged by the pious and enlightened of the Christian world to be frivolous and essentially worldly, hurtful to body and to mind, inimical to true social life and rational enjoyment, and in no respect promotive either of good morals or genuine piety. Perhaps the evils of dancing have never been presented with greater clearness and power than by the late Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, at the time of his death senior Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and a man of superior ability and character. His words are as follows: "In the period of youthful education I have shown that dancing is chargeable with waste of time, the interruption to useful study, the indulgence of personal vanity and display, and the premature excitement of the passions. At the age of maturity it adds to these no small danger to health, by late hours, flimsy dresses, heated rooms and exposed persons; while its incongruity with Christian sobriety and principle, and its tendency to the love of dissipation, are so manifest that no ingenuity can make it consistent with the covenant of baptism." Certainly, so far as Methodists are concerned, no discussion in respect to dancing should be needed. The condemnation has been repeated, emphatic and unanimous, so far at least as relates to those who have authority to speak and whose voice should be heeded. The standard writings of Methodism and her acknowledged exponents have never spoken with hesitation or uncertainty on the subject; their testimony has been clear and unmistakable against dancing. Nevertheless, in private circles I have not unfrequently met with Methodists who have contended that there was no harm in dancing, and with some who have shown their faith by their works. It is true that those advocates are to be found, for the most part, among young persons who have fashionable associates and who prefer the frivolities of fashionable society to the conversation of the pious or the services of the sanctuary, or among vain mothers who think their pretty daughters will have a larger opportunity to show off at assemblages in which dancing is practiced; nevertheless, these persons have their social influence, and their opinions are matters of deep regret, and every effort should be made to place them right in theory and in action.

If dancing is wrong, it surely must be wrong for members of the church to attend parties of which dancing constitutes the chief interest and attraction, and which are gotten up mainly for the accommodation of those who partake of that amusement. Such attendance will naturally be construed into an approval of or an indifference to an indulgence which the voice of the great majority of Christendom pronounces to be unbecoming and harmful, and to which true Christian character forbids us to give countenance either by word or deed. Moreover, I confess that I do not well see what pleasure persons who do not dance, either from conscientious scruples or from other considerations, can derive from such entertainments. The dance absorbs all the room and all the attention, and expels all not engaged to the "hall or entry," or makes them "shrink into corners" or "desperately cling to the walls," while all opportunity for conversation, intellectual and improving, is destroyed. Dancing parties, then, should not only not be attended by all professing Christians, but should, in fact, be eschewed by all who admire the "feast of reason and the flow of soul," and who think that conversation, bright, free and sparkling, should constitute the main employment and entertainment at all social gatherings.

Again, if dancing is wrong, it must be wrong for members of the church to patronize schools in which the art is specially taught, in which the passion for it is cultivated, in which precious time is wasted and a worldly spirit is engendered and encouraged. Parents must be held responsible for the proper instruction of their children, and the church cannot allow its members so far to forget their duty and their position as to have their children taught that which the best men in every age have repudiated. I am happy to know that the authorities of our branch of the church have taken the true position in this matter. From the "Manual of the Discipline" we learn that the College of Bishops in 1858 unanimously decided "that it is contrary to the spirit of the Discipline and of the New Testament to teach the art and science of modern dancing anywhere, or to practice promiscuous dancing anywhere." It may be asked why, with such an expression of opinion, I yet would approve further legislation on the subject. I answer that the evil is confessedly a grave and growing one, that in many communities it is undermining the piety and religious integrity of the youthful membership and infusing a spirit of worldliness into the church, and that I would not leave its prohibition to mere inference or even to a decision of the College of Bishops. I would have it distinctly and specifically named and forbidden in the statute law of the church, and make it contrary not only to the spirit but to the letter of the Discipline; and thus I would relieve the church from all possible connivance with it, and the members from all possible excuse for committing it.

"Playing at games of chance" is also specifically forbidden by the amended rule, and, I think, with entire propriety. These games are prominent among the artful and insidious snares which the world throws out to entangle and entrap the unwary. They are all essentially worldly, unimproving in any true sense of the term, unnecessary to rational enjoyment, inducing a neglect of the grave duties of life, and too often making confirmed gamblers of their votaries. Men always commence with playing for amusement and in simple games; then they yield to the suggestion to risk something to increase the interest of the sport; next they are initiated into all the mysteries of the gaming table, and ere long too many are recognized as regular gamblers. I recently read in one of our papers of a wealthy merchant in a Northern city who, with his wife, was accustomed to spend his winter evenings in his own parlor in playing cards with his children, thinking that he would thus best shield them from future temptation. A friend warned him against his course, and assured him that there was a much greater probability that he would cherish a fondness for gaming, which would prove a snare and entice his sons to places of wicked resort. A few years later the merchant, in great agitation and distress, said to the same friend that one of his sons, who was barely twenty-one years of age, had a perfect passion for gambling, and even then was utterly ruined, and confessed that his mode of training was altogether wrong. There are certain things which, if innocent when abstractly considered, are inherently liable to excess and abuse, and with respect to which entire self-denial is the only safe and reasonable plan. "Playing at games of chance" is of this character.

It always pains me to see a pack of cards or other implements of gaming in the house of a Christian family, and especially to learn that youthful Christians are identifying themselves with their ungodly cotemporaries in such modes of amusement. I confess I was rather amazed some months since, while traveling in another State, to hear my young Methodist acquaintances tell of the games of euchre and of whist they had played in the homes of Christian men of character and position. This talk smacked too much of the world, too little of that seriousness and propriety which should ever characterize the children of God, and was calculated to do discredit and damage to Christianity; and, I fear, it indicated too that our church in that section had lowered its tone or relaxed its discipline, and in this regard at least is not superior to other denominations. I venture to say that there are very few professing Christians, whatever may be their intelligence and social position, who can allow themselves to take part in "playing at games of chance" without feeling their love for God and their interest in his cause gradually diminishing, and without finding their influence and usefulness as the followers of Christ being gradually undermined. Yes, "playing at games of chance" is a vice and a folly, fashionable and fascinating it may be, yet none the less hostile to the spirit and genius of Christianity, and none the less worthy of active efforts for its suppression; and I believe that our Northern brethren were right to bring the full weight of discipline to bear against it in the shape of a specific mention and prohibition.

I conclude this part of the discussion, as also this communication, by introducing as pertinent and weighty testimony a resolution of the Young Men's Christian Association, at a general convention held in Albany, in 1866, and composed of delegates from all parts of the United States and the British provinces. Their deliverance is as follows: "That we bear our energetic testimony against dancing, card and billiard-playing, as so distinctively worldly in their associations, and unspiritual in their influences, as to be utterly inconsistent with our profession as the disciples of Christ." ## Christ's Sonship.

"The Father sitting on his throne,
The glorious co-eternal Son."—Hymn 661.

MR. EDITOR: A few Sabbaths ago I heard our pastor read from our hymn book the above-quoted incomprehensible lines; and though our pastor can preach us but few in this or any other Conference can preach, in spite of his masterly arguments and fervid eloquence my mind intuitively resolved itself into a logical and theological laboratory, and set to work to analyze, if possible, the philosophy of the idea involved in the quotation; but after rousing all my tires and trying my crucibles and retorts to their utmost capacity, I found myself unable to eliminate a single atom of common sense, or semblance of reason, from the language of the text, and could not help thinking how many earnest inquirers for truth, if reduced to the alternative of believing a dogma so utterly contradictory of reason and experience, or of abandoning the inquiry forever, would choose the latter. I am perfectly satisfied that there are minds which neither the tortures of the Inquisition nor the fires of Geneva could convince that God ever intended to submit our faith to such an ordeal.

That there are mysteries in divine revelation I accept as a requisite of true faith; but because a mountain, whose base is clearly revealed, hides its head in the clouds, I am not thereby justified in believing that it has no head. There are many portions of divine truth which can, nay must, be believed, though incomprehensible. The attributes of God, though written in sunbeams in heaven above and the earth beneath, are as incomprehensible as eternity and space; yet they are self-evident and command our belief; but a proposition which contradicts both our reason and experience makes a demand on our credulity altogether beyond our resources. That there is a mystery involved in the union of the Godhead with the man Jesus, even Paul, in the full plenitude of divine inspiration, acknowledged but could not solve. There was no difficulty in the mind of the apostle in reference to the conception of the Son of man, for he knew the law of nature was but the will of God; but the manifestation of God in the flesh was beyond the reach of his loftiest conception; and yet so much of the God was revealed in his wisdom and works as to establish his claim to divinity beyond the possibility of doubt. But to believe that the eternal Logos was his own Son, or the Son of a co-eternal father, would be a stain on our faith and reason which neither the most remote etymology or the most latitudinous construction of the word son would be admissible.

The word son in our language, everywhere and in all cases, has a circumscribed, definite and specific meaning, and necessarily presupposes an antecedent progenitor, and is expressive of the offspring of preceding parents.

It is true that the Evangelist John tells us that in the beginning was the word, and that "the word was made flesh," and that "the word was God." But no one will be stupid enough to believe that the eternal word was transmuted into flesh and blood, but that the eternal word, mysteriously united with the man Jesus, thus became Immanuel: Christ—God manifest in the flesh.

That Jesus was as verily and truly the Son of God as he was the son of Mary cannot be doubted while we believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures. That the natural germ of the human nature of Jesus was vitalized by divine energy is revealed in the salutation of the angel to the virgin mother in the most explicit and significant language: "The holy thing which thou shalt conceive shall be called the Son of God." The difficulty suggested by Mary, in reply to the announcement of the heavenly messenger, is of itself sufficient to establish the divine paternity of the Babe of Bethlehem, and entitle him to be called the Son of God. Then first originated that wonderful and endearing relationship between Deity and dust, which constituted the Christ and qualified the Redeemer.

The mysterious connection between God and man must be understood as a union, and not a blending of the divine and human nature, that it took place at a definite period of time, and during lives of the evangelists by whom the fact is recorded, in fulfillment of predictions uttered by inspired prophets long anterior to the event, and by them vaguely expressed as "the fullness of time;" that it was consummated for a specific purpose, to accomplish a work to be measured by time, and possibly to be dissolved when the work is done. I know full well that such a thought will be startling to minds still wearing the livery and fettered by the chains of fossil theology; but two passages of Scripture point most significantly to such a result. The first I shall refer to is the record of the tragedy of Golgotha, when the majesty of God's love was vindicated and its requirements satisfied by the vicarious sufferings of the blessed Redeemer. In that dreadful hour, when all nature was shrouded in preternatural night, the terrors of which awed to silence the clamorous multitude that surged around the cross, the voice of the dying Jesus was heard exclaiming, in accents of anguish and despair: "My God! my God! why hast thou forsaken me?" In that moment of infinite agony and vicarious condemnation the mysterious bond was severed, and the Son of God died alone. I said despair, for I have no doubt that in that moment he felt all the anguish and despair of a sinner dying in his sins, for "he bore our sins in his own body on the tree."

If, then, the bond of incarnation was dissolved, even for a moment, in vindication of divine justice, may we not look forward to a period in the roll of ages when the work of redemption shall have been accomplished, when Christ shall have put down all rule and all authority, and planted his foot on the neck of his last enemy, that the eternal word shall vacate the mediatorial throne, and Jesus, the first-born among many brethren as Captain General of the redeemed host, shall lead them forth in the march of eternal progress, when the Son himself shall be "subject unto the Father, and God shall be all in all?" SERVETUS.

A WORTHY QUAKER thus wrote: "I expect to pass through this world but once. If, therefore, there can be any kindness I can do to any fellow-being, let me do it now. Let me not defer nor neglect it, for I will not pass this way again."

The New Year.

"While with ceaseless course the sun
Hastened through the former year,
Many souls their race have run,
Never more to meet us here;
Fixed in an eternal state,
They have done with all below;
We a little longer wait,
But how little none can tell."

The opening of a new year is an event which leads even the most thoughtless to some degree of reflection. There is something solemn in the thought that a year has passed away and is numbered with the things that were. These memorials of time, as one follows another, call upon us to review our conduct in the years that are past, and to estimate our spiritual gain or loss in our intercourse with the world. They remind us of the unceasing progress of time, and our approximation to a boundless eternity of happiness or woe. They remind us of our entire dependence upon him who is the "Ancient of Days"—who, while we change, is still the same, and whose years shall never fail. Life, then, while it is passing from us, moment after moment and year after year, should lead us to seriously meditate on its importance. It was given us for the most exalted purpose. It was given us by him who alone is good, that we might advance in knowledge, in virtue, in happiness, and aspire to moral and intellectual perfection; so that when our days and years shall be numbered, and our mortal career ended, we may join "that innumerable multitude of all nations and kindred and tongues, who stand before the throne and the Lamb forever."

On the return of these memorials of time, by which we measure our days, it is wise in us to call to mind how our years have hitherto been employed—what it is that we have been doing in the time we have been favored, and whether we have indeed been fulfilling the great ends for which we were created. Meditations of this kind become us all; and while they remind us of the important purposes of life, they fit us to enter upon a new year with renewed resolutions to "run the race set before us." May the Giver of every good and perfect gift grant that it may be with these solemn but elevating sentiments, that all may enter upon the year eighteen hundred and seventy-three, which is given us by him that liveth forever. With such meditations and resolves the past and the future may seem more distinctly to lie before us, and by which we can more truly estimate what life has brought, and what it is to bring. How well suited, then, for each and every one, on entering upon a new year, to offer, with Dr. Watts, the petition:

"Waken, O God, my careless heart,
To work for endless life;
Awake my thoughts and cheer my eyes
To watch the coming strife.
Awake my vigorous powers to love
My best and kindest friend;
Awake my tongue to speak his praise
And all my days attend.
Awake my hands to do his will
With all my mighty force;
Awake my feet to run the road
Marked out by his decrees.
Awake my heart to hope and fear,
Awake my conscience too;
Awake my passions all to shun
What I abhor in you.
Awake my soul to watch and pray
And strive with all my might;
Awake my lamp that burns by day
And trim the golden light.
Awake my zeal to fight and win
And lift my shield and sword
To conquer every host of sin
And every snare of hell.
Awake my faith to lay hold on
The blessings of the skies;
Awake my joy to meet the crown
Prepared for victories.
Awake my hope to climb the hill
And view the promised land;
Awake my love to long to dwell
With Christ at his right hand.
Awake my soul to sing his grace
Through all the tuneful powers;
Awake my heart to learn the songs
Of Moses and the lambs.
Awake my voice to cry abroad
The honors of my King;
Awake my all to work or pray
To praise him or to sing."

The same Ear that listened to this prayer, when first offered by Dr. Watts, is now open to our prayers. Similar petitions, doubtless, have been offered by many of the faithful, who have gone before us in every age of time; but the same Spirit that was in the midst of them and the infant assemblies of the church, is in these transition moments in the midst of us; and the same Arm that in every difficulty and danger protected them, and led them by "still waters" and "green pastures" year after year, until their days were all numbered, is still uplifted to shield and protect us.

Standing, then, as we do to-day, upon the towering pinnacle of ages, we can look back, amid the ruin of time, and see generations of men rising and falling before us; and this sight, if viewed alone, might fill us with sadness, seeing that our bodies, too, would soon return to the dust; but with the light of revelation and the telescope of faith we can look up from that same observatory, and learn the great truth that if we properly improve the time that God may give to us, that though our bodies may sleep for a time in the graves, they shall be raised to glory and honor, and a life that shall not be measured by days and years.

May God grant that we may so improve our time that when that never-ending New Year shall roll round, it may be a happy and glorious New Year to us. May we not, then, amid the rapid flight of time, with Charles Wesley sing?

"Away with our sorrow and fear!
We soon shall recover our home;
The city of saints shall appear,
The day of eternity come,
From earth we shall quickly remove,
And mount to our native abode—
The house of our Father above,
The palace of angels and God."

A Correction.

MR. EDITOR: An error occurred in the publication of my letter to Rev. H. H. Montgomery, published in your issue of the fifth instant. What I intended to say was, I was with Bro. Montgomery and heard the conversations which induced him to write his letter on "Denominational Schools." These statements were made by parties of high character, and well known to me. "I believe them to be true." Rev. W. Hillman, president of the Mississippi College and Central Female Institute, both located at Clinton, Mississippi, and under the patronage of the Baptist Church, denied the truth of these statements in a letter also published by you.

Elder Hillman is a Baptist minister in good standing and great acceptability to his people. It is no part of my business, nor was it my intention, to attempt to settle questions of veracity between Elder Hillman and other parties. I never thought Bro. Montgomery intended a personal attack on Elder Hillman in his "note of warning to the Methodists of Mississippi and Louisiana," advising them to not send their children to Elder Hillman's college and institute, unless they wanted them to join the Baptist Church. I think that every denominational school should be what it purports to be, and "if the school eliminates the denomination the denomination should eliminate the school." Bro. Montgomery evidently intended to impress on the minds of pedobaptists that if they placed their children under the influence of Baptist teachers they would exercise an influence over them in favor of the Baptist Church. Every teacher knows that this will be done, and every parent should know that it is impossible not to do it. If I send my daughter to a Catholic convent I know full well that the influences surrounding her will be Catholic, and the appliances of the Catholic Church will be brought to bear to induce her to join that church; and if Elder Hillman's college and female institute do not reflect the sentiments, doctrines and teachings of the Baptist Church, they should. Methodist as I am, if a parent who had taught his children heresy, neglecting to teach them the great essential requirement of the Christian religion, the cardinal doctrine of the gospel, my duty to them, to myself as an educator, and to God as a minister, would compel me to look after their moral and religious culture. I can, then, find no fault with Elder Hillman for doing what, if I held his views, I would do myself. The question with me is, Do I wish my children educated to believe the doctrines of the Bible as I understand them? If so, I will send them to Methodist schools, that they may be trained up for the church of my choice.

New Year.

MANY happy New Years to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE! We are becoming friends now, and I hope that many New Years will find me using my humble pen in your service.

Our New Year dawned bright and fair, ushering in tremulously-treasured hopes of a happy future. With the hopes are blended any resolves for a better, nobler year—a fuller consecration of ourselves to our Father? Let us hope so. Let us hope that earnest prayers for aid to exert all our powers toward a higher development arose from many a hearthstone.

At the commencement of our new field of labor, before entering upon the work before us, let us pause and review the past year. Ah, how sad the retrospect! Do we remember how many resolves were made, how many bright anticipations, how many "air-castles" threw a bright halo around the future? Yes, those things are seldom forgotten; but as we come slowly down through the vista of months we see the happy hopes fall away one by one; we see others arise, conjured by the magic wand of hope; we see the shafts of pain, lying on each side of our pathway, rent asunder by the loving hands of Jesus; and, woeful recompense for his loving kindness and tender mercies, we see the resolves weakly broken, the golden opportunities neglected, until we stand to-day a monument of mercy, a tottering reed upheld by the omnipotent arm of Jehovah! O year! irredeemably past, could we retrace our steps, how we would strive to subdue the unkind word or action be forgotten, the past redeemed. Are there any suffering from an unjust misconstruction of the best, the purest feelings of the heart? Let us forgive, as we wish to be forgiven. Cheerfully enduring all things for the cause of right; let us strive so to live that, were this the last New Year this side of the happy land, some may arise and call us blessed. And when the dark shadows come, when we cannot comprehend the wherefore of many trials bowing our heads to the dust, let us remember how often in the past "we kissed the trouble in the evening that we met complainingly in the morning," trusting all to the Arm that guides the universe.

"So live, that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan, which moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon; but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave,
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

FARMERS are not always as well satisfied with the weather as was the shepherd of Salisbury Plain. "Nice weather for corn!" said a minister up the valley to one of his parishioners, the other day. "Yes," said the old farmer, "but bad for grain and grass." A few days later they met again. "A fine rain we had yesterday," said the minister; "good for grass and grain." "Yes," was the reply, "but awful bad for corn!"

WHEN first putting a new whetstone into use, try water upon it, and if this keeps the surface from being glazed or burnished, oil will not be needed. Some stones work better with water than oil. A dry stone is very apt to give a wire edge. It has been said that a little carbolic acid added to water will increase the friction on either a whetstone or a grindstone.

Obituaries.

MRS. FANNIE C., wife of Milledge Ficklin, died, of typhoid fever, on the twenty-sixth of November, 1872, at her home near Morton, Scott county, Mississippi.

Sister Ficklin professed religion and joined the Methodist Protestant Church about five years ago. From that time to the close of her life she lived consistently, ever manifesting a deep interest in the cause of Christ, and left full assurance, in her last illness, that her soul has gone to rest in the home of the faithful. She was kind and gentle to all, and was a favorite in her neighborhood.

To the sorrow-stricken husband, daughter, son, mother, brothers and sisters we say: "Weep not as those who have no hope, but strive to meet your departed loved one in the kind of eternal bliss."

C. MCDANALD.

DIED, near Fayette, Mississippi, December 10, 1872, Mrs. CATHERINE TERRY, in the forty-fifth year of her age.

She was formerly Miss Catherine Scriber, daughter of Mr. J. and Mrs. E. Scriber. Her sufferings were of a short duration, the disease being pneumonia. She was conscious in her last moments, and expressed a wish to see all her relations and friends. Although she was not a member of the church, she tried to live a true and pious life. I knew her from my childhood, and I never saw or knew a more perfect example of patience and forbearance. She was a true and faithful friend, always ready to assist in time of trouble. She leaves four children and many friends to mourn her loss.

Dear children, I sympathize with you in your deep affliction. That your Heavenly Father may watch over and bless you, and that you all may meet her in heaven, where parting is no more, is the prayer of your friend, M. W.

JOHN TINSLEY, SR., was born in Jefferson county, Georgia, April 3, 1797; from thence removed to Jones county, Georgia, where he was married to Martha Bonner, September 9, 1817; from thence he moved to Butler county, Alabama, in 1818, where he lived until 1836; then moved to Kemper county, Mississippi, and settled on the place that he occupied at the time of his death, October 27, 1872. He embraced religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South under the ministry of the Rev. William J. Powers.

He lived mostly a frontier life, without early training, and never enjoyed any of the advantages of an education. Being thus brought in contact with the world, dependent on his own exertions at such an early age and under such circumstances, he acquired habits of industry and self-reliance. He greatly loved his church, its usages and doctrines, believing it to be the best ever organized. Though a man of few words, he was noted for his decision of character, was an independent and clear thinker, a deep, cool calculator, and a safe adviser in his sphere. He was a man of inflexible will, perseverance and industry. His economy and promptness in business procured for him enough and to spare of this world's goods. But, sharing the fate of many others, the late war swept away nearly all of his hard earnings; yet he halted not to pine over misfortunes—uttered not a murmur. Though oppressed with the weight of years, decrepit from being thrown from a buggy many years ago, yet by the industry of himself and his aged companion he had plenty at his death. He was liberal and prompt in the support of his church. Although seemingly stern, he was a man of great sympathy, easily moved by the infirmities or sufferings of others, never failing to minister to the objects of charity when opportunity offered and ability allowed. He was strict in his dealings with his fellow-men—always acted on the principle: "Owe no man."

He seemed to have a presentiment of his death. The last time I visited him, after speaking freely upon the subject of religion and the prospect of getting to heaven, he showed me a fine hat that he had used but little, and said: "I do not know what to do with it. I shall not need it long." He attended four camp meetings in September and October, previous to his death; had a tent at one (Linwood.) All his children living were present. He enjoyed these meetings very much.

Whatever may have been his real or seeming defects, amidst human frailties he continued to give evidence of true piety. His illness was short but severe. His class-leader asked him, the day before he died, if he was prepared. He answered: "Yes; I rely upon the Savior."

He was characterized by great force of thought and system. He therefore performed a great deal without seeming effort, and seldom had any loose ends to gather up. This, at the close of life, applied to spiritual as well as to temporal things. Hence even death did not take him by surprise. He had attended to that, and when death came he could say: "I have trusted too long to doubt him now."

Thus one by one the fathers are passing away. "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them." An aged companion, to whose faithful prayers and holy living the conversion of husband and children is attributable, sat near the coffin while the funeral sermon was preached at his own house. All the children living, and nearly all the grandchildren were present. The parting was painful, yet they "sorrow not as others which have no hope." JAMES M. GANN.

THOMAS CARLYLE has just finished his seventy-seventh year. He has resided in the same house at Chelsea, England, for nearly forty years. It is an old-fashioned red brick house, built in the reign of Queen Anne. His nearest friend now is Mr. Froude, who, when in London, walks over almost daily to the modest old house in Cheyne Row.

LICENSE LAWS.

The following lines were written by that brave old reformer and New England poet, Rev. John Pierpont. Though they have been published before, they are well worth printing again.

"For so much gold we license thee"—
So say our laws—"a draft to sell
That lows the strong, enslaves the free,
And opens wide the gates of hell;
For 'public good' requires that some
Should live, since many die, by rum."

Ye civic fathers! while the foes
Of this destroyer seize their swords,
And Heaven's own hail is in the blows
They're dealing, will ye cut the cords
That round the falling fiend they draw
And o'er him hold your shield of law?

And will ye give to man a bill
Divorcing him from Heaven's high sway;
And while God says, "Thou shalt not kill,"
Say ye, for gold, "Ye may—ye may?"
Compare the body with the soul!
Compare the bullet with the bowl!

In which is felt the fiercer blast
Of the destroying angel's breath?
Which blinds its victim the more fast?
Which kills him with the deadlier death?
Will ye the felon fox restrain,
And yet take off the tiger's chain?

The living to the rotting dead
The God-contemning Tocsan tied,
Till by the way, or on his bed,
The poor corpse-carrier dropped and died,
Lashed hand to hand, and face to face,
In fatal and in loathed embrace.

Less cutting, think ye, is the thong
That to a breathing corpse, for life,
Lashes, in torture loathed and long,
The drunkard's child, the drunkard's wife?
To clasp that cold, to breathe that breath,
And no escape—oh! that is death.

Are ye not fathers? When your sons
Look to you for their daily bread,
Dare ye, in mockery, load with stones
The table that for them ye spread?
How can ye hope your sons will live,
If ye for fish a serpent give?

O holy God! let light divine
Break forth more broadly from above,
Till we conform our laws to Thine—
The perfect law of truth and love;
For truth and love alone can save
Thy children from a hopeless grave.

The Last Prayer in the Bible.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

The word of God begins with a story, and ends with a prayer. It begins with the sublime story of the creation's six days' work, and concludes with an invitation to the Lord Jesus to come and possess the world which he had redeemed by his blood. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

This is the shortest, and yet it is the sweetest and most comprehensive request that devout hearts are taught to utter. It would seem as if the beloved John, when he came to the close of the inspired book, might have cast about him to find the words which would express the most of love to his dear Master and to his fellow-men. So he utters three words of prayer. And in these three words he epitomizes all the richest blessings which could come into his soul, and into the souls of all who should ever utter it.

We have a great deal of repetitions and rambling verbiage in our average social prayer meetings. Everything is mentioned, and often very little is really sought. But suppose it were allowed to us to agree upon one short request which our Father should promise to grant to us. What would it be? One might urge the case of a sick child; another the case of an unconverted husband; another's heart is yearning for the Sabbath school, and still another for the coming of a revival; a prayer for backsliders might be urged as most needed, and the pastor might claim that the blessing of God upon the preached word was the crying want. Suddenly some one leaps up, and says: "Let us pray for Jesus!" And we all agree that this prayer covers the whole ground, and meets every case. For if we get Christ we shall get everything. Health, light, strength, pardon for the guilty, comfort for aching hearts, converting power, sanctifying power, all these, and more will come if Jesus only comes himself. Suppose that any one of our church prayer circles should actually agree to merge their whole united desires into this single one: "Come, Lord Jesus!" Here would be a "prayer-gauge" different from any that Prof. Tyndall has ever suggested. It would be the simple adoption of a Bible petition, and in accordance with the spirit of that promise: "If two of you shall agree on earth, as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." Would such a united petition, if rightly offered, be answered?

I sincerely believe it would. Such a request would be in the direct line of the divine promises. It would be as nearly sifted of all selfish and sinful desires as it is possible for anything human to be. It would require no interference with physical laws. It would involve no miracle, and would include no impossibility.

For Jesus has distinctly promised his presence to his people. When his bodily form floated up from the side of Olivet he did not bid farewell to earth. "A cloud received him out of their sight." But the promise remained: "Lo! I am with you!" Not somebody else, but "I," your Lord and Master. Jesus Christ was as truly in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost as he was on the day of his trial or his crucifixion. He was present when the fiery baptism descended. He spake through Peter's lips when he preached that wonderful discourse, and he wrought through Peter's hands when the cripple was healed at the temple gate. He was at the entrance to Damascus when Saul of Tarsus cried out from the ground: "Who art thou, Lord?" and the reply was: "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." We love to think of Jesus as hovering around the blazing stakes at which his martyr-servants were dying in his name. I love to think of him as actually with his imprisoned ones in their dungeons, or on their missions of gospel love to the perishing. I believe that Jesus was as really with Luther in his convent, and with Bunyan in his cell, and with Brainard in his forest solitudes, as he was with Peter and John by the strand of Galilee. He still does his mighty works through his living representatives. He still says: "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." He still casts out evil spirits. He still comes in among the companies of his disciples. When our faithful Lord said, "I am with you always," he means always to the end of time.

There is a strange mist of unbelief that seems to hang over good people's minds when they are urged to realize and actualize their Savior as a living person. Because their eyes do not behold a living body, they regard him in a shadowy, vague way, as if he were very far off on a "throne" of unapproachable glory. That he should really come into their souls as truly as he came into the house of Jairus, seems to them almost a shocking irreverence to speak of. But why limit the omnipresence and the omnipotence of their Savior and their elder brother? Ah! brethren, let us cure this unbelief—by the best test in the world—by actually inviting our Master to come with his supernatural presence and power into our souls. The prayer of prayers is: "Come, Lord Jesus!" This is the prayer for the overthrow of that adversary who torments us—for the relief of our burdens and fears, for the quickening of our faith, for the daily victory over sin, for the sweetening of our tempers, for the success of our spiritual toils, for the conversion of those we love. To be blind to the coming and the actual presence of Jesus is to have the eye of our faith put out! If prayer means anything more than a devout dream, it means a veritable petitioning for a veritable Christ to enter into our souls and to guide and rule our lives. Let us believe this; let us practice upon this; or else let us stop praying.

The want of this dying world today is, Christ, Christ! The one blessing that wraps in and contains all blessings for us is Jesus! The personal Jesus, person to person, the divine Jesus to the human soul—this alone is salvation. And the personal Jesus in our souls is sanctification and full redemption. Here is the crying want of all our churches. We want more of Jesus. All our preaching is but empty clamor, and all our religious machineries but idle clatter without the presence of Jesus, the power from on high. O that we might unite in breathing this one grandest, deepest, widest, richest prayer—inclusive of all prayers—this valedictory prayer of holy writ: "Come, Lord Jesus!"—Evangelist.

False Delicacy Between Mothers and Daughters.

As young girls near the boundary line where childhood and woman meet, there comes a natural, wondering interest as to the different relationships they see around them. This curiosity, being the voice of nature, imperatively claims satisfaction, and if the mother does not give it legitimately the child will be only too likely to gain it from sources of whose very existence she is ignorant, simply because to her they are superfluous.

There are thousands of mothers who will talk with the kindest unreserve to those not bound to them by any tie but that of friendship, who yet feel the most false and foolish delicacy with their own daughters. I know this to be the case. A great many young girls have come to me for information and advice on personal subjects, whom an unnatural reserve kept from applying to their own mothers. I know it again by experience. I found it much harder to do my duty in this respect to my own daughters than to the daughters of others. And yet the duty is an imperative one, which requires to be attended to both much earlier and more positively than was necessary in your own case. For, assure yourself of one thing, that the knowledge which came to women half a century ago, as the result of experience, is ready now at every street corner and in every kitchen for your little girl, as answer to her first, wondering intuition.

Nay, while she still nurses her doll and wears her childhood's aprons, all the mysteries of human nature are questioning her innocent heart. Who is to answer her? Will you leave her to soil her white soul with the filthy fancies of dime novels, or still worse books? Is some servant-girl, lewd and ignorant, to usurp her mother's holy office, and defile the sacred sanctuary of your home? Or will you, with calm and reverent wisdom, lead her into the "house of life," and show her how "fearfully and wonderfully we are made?"

Will you not then explain to her that this human "body" is the temple of the Holy Ghost bought with a price," and that it cannot be defiled, even by an impure thought, without sinning against him who cleansed it with his own precious blood, making our bodies members of his own. Such teaching is necessary to keep her morally healthy, and if you can succeed in inspiring her with a profound reverence for purity of soul, you have done very much to secure her health, her intellect, and that joyous, cheerful abandon which, though the glorious privilege of natural girlhood, is, alas! every year becoming more rare.

But this first primary instruction neglected, what follows? Physical abuse and degradation—a sin against nature which gradually makes your child (born a little lower than the angels) below the beasts of the field.

I am quite aware that this is a very delicate subject, as well as one of the saddest of social problems. But ignoring an evil does not annihilate it. And the anger of those whose false refinement forbids them to speak things it does not forbid them to do, or the scoffing of the vulgar and light-minded, will not deter the serious and benevolent from its consideration.

Physicians see the mighty evil filling our lunatic asylums, robbing marriage and paternity of all its divinity, digging myriads of tiny graves for infants born of parents too enfeebled to give them enduring life, and most of them with a groan of pity "pass by on the other side."

There is no doubt, however, that the great majority of young people, now slaves of the most repulsive habits, might have been saved had their parents early explained to them the eternal laws of nature, and their intimate connection with "whatsoever is lovely and of good report." And further, it is also the duty of parents, having instructed, to watch until virtue has acquired the strength of habit—of habit whose foundations are laid in piety and knowledge.

Slow, insidious, unsuspected, suicide is becoming a household crime. Children make their own coffins day by day, and parents are either ignorant or indifferent to the fact. Against this sin physicians must become active missionaries, for their words, weighted with knowledge, will have an irresistible influence.

But prevention is always better than cure. And, therefore, mothers and daughters should have but one heart, and fathers and sons walk together as friends.—Mrs. A. E. Barr, in Science of Health.

A Blurred Mirror.

The Christian Mirror mentions "a leading journal of the country" which has pronounced "the idea that God was not under obligation to provide a Savior for men 'a horrible doctrine.'" We suppose that the Independent is referred to, though the garbled form in which our words are quoted utterly perverts their meaning. The doctrine which we pronounced horrible was that God might justly send to eternal torment every infant who died; that such an exercise of his sovereignty would not impugn his "righteousness;" that every child is born under a curse, and must suffer the curse forever, unless God interpose; and that the being who gave the child his life, and put it on the track that leads inevitably to perdition, is under no obligation whatever to save it from the fate thus impending. This may be to the Mirror a very sweet and precious doctrine, a very affecting representation of the divine character; but we are in no wise disposed to retract our characterization of it as horrible.

The Mirror makes a nice distinction between the obligations which God is supposed to owe to himself and those which he owes to men. He may be under obligation to himself to provide salvation; but he cannot be under any obligation whatever to "fallen, rebellious creatures." The obligations of God to creatures who are in actual rebellion are not here the subject of discussion and were not in the article quoted, as the Mirror very well knew. But suppose that no salvation had been provided, might not a person who died in infancy and was sent to hell fairly charge God with injustice in consigning him to eternal woe? Might he not look up from his place of suffering and say: "I never knew my Maker. I never sinned against him in thought or word or deed. I am not to blame for possessing the depraved nature which I inherited. I am not to blame for anything that my father did before I was born, or that any of my ancestors did, Adam included. I am suffering here unjustly. God ought never to have suffered me to come into existence under this curse—or, if he did, he was bound to provide some way of escape from it; bound not merely to himself, but to me. He has wronged me, and I impeach his government as unrighteous and unholy." To such a complaint as that what answer could be made?

If God is a moral being, he is under moral obligation; in other words, he has no right to do wrong simply because he is supreme. If he has put himself into moral relations with his creatures, if he has established a moral government over them, then he is under obligation to them to make this government a moral government, and not an immoral one. And the government would be immoral which should consign to eternal woe a being who has never committed an actual transgression.

Of course the Mirror does not believe that God ever does this. It only seems to think that he has a perfect right to do it; that it is "free grace," and not righteousness that keeps him from doing it. The only question is about the character of God and the principles on which he conducts his moral government. This is a question of vast importance. What a man thinks about God determines his theology and his morality. And it is certainly unfortunate, to say the least, that a man should believe in a God who has a right to do wrong, even though he may believe with all his heart that his God never has done and never will do wrong.

The Mirror speaks of our utterance as "loosening the corner-stone." Any theology which has for its corner-stone the doctrine that God might justly consign to eternal doom an irresponsible infant—that his failure to do so is the result not of his righteousness, but of his favor—is a false theology, and cannot come down too soon. A being who is at liberty to do any such injustice, who is under no obligation to his creatures to refrain from such injustice, is a being whom we cannot love and will not worship. And as for the theology which requires of men any such impossible allegiance, it were better for that if a millstone were hanged about its neck and it were drowned in the depths of the sea.—Independent.

BALD-HEADED PEOPLE.—Frederick Kemp writes from the silver mines of Montana, giving the following hint in reference to cure for baldheadedness: "A friend of mine who had the misfortune to be bald-headed, knowing that there is a wonderful invigorating power in the sun's rays, last spring threw away his hat and worked in the gulch all spring, summer and fall bare-headed. For a few days the rays of the sun on his head were almost unbearable; after that time he experienced no uneasiness whatever. The result was that in the fall he had a good head of hair. And in this experiment he was not alone, several of his acquaintances who were bald-headed having followed the same plan. They were all fortunate enough to experience the same result."

IN SCIENCE, read, by preference, the newest books; in literature, the oldest. The classic literature is always modern. New books revive and decorate old ideas; old books suggest and invigorate new ideas.—Bulwer.

Day by Day.

We were much impressed in lately hearing this frank confession from the lips of one who, after some years of successful studying against a certain temptation, had again suddenly fallen temporarily under its power: "So long as I lived day by day I was safe; but when I got to living a week at a time I failed." We comprehended his meaning. And we remembered how our Lord commanded us to live from hand to mouth and to pray, each day, "give us this day bread sufficient and suitable for the day" (for this we conceive to be the meaning of the Greek adjective Epiousion.)

Such is the safe theory of life. The child that can go alone, may stay. The child that is obliged to keep hold of its father's hand in order to walk is not in danger of wandering. To live day by day upon God is to keep close to him; is to live in constant thought of him, and of our need of him, and of his grace; is to put ourselves in the best possible position, and the likelihood of the best possible mood, to receive his blessing, and secure the benign guardianship of his love.

As the rule, when we are in our best condition spiritually—most contrite, humble, earnest to do good, anxious to grow in grace, and to glorify God—we are living day by day upon him; feeling every morning that his joy must be our strength this day; feeling every night that it has been in him that we have lived and moved and had our being since the dawn; and so abiding in him with a constant and habitual reference to him as the God in whose hand our breath is, and whose are all our ways.

Especially is this day-by-day life in God dear to us in periods of marked temptation or peculiar trial. As in the dense darkness, where we are not familiar with our road, we do not walk boldly and rapidly on, guided by some landmark far-seen in the distance, but rather grope slowly and cautiously step by step, sure that if each foothall be right the end will be secure; so when it is very tempestuous round about us, and in the gloom we can feel no certainty what will be duty to-morrow, it is very sweet to leave all to God, and cling to him and blindly follow his lead little by little, knowing that if each unit be right, their grand total cannot be wrong.

Conscience always has its best hold upon specific things, and is weak in generals. It may be quite impossible for us to settle the grand principle whether it is always and necessarily sinful for one to drink anything which, taken to excess, can intoxicate; while at the same time it may be very easy for us to see that it would be wrong for us, here anyhow, to drink from that cup which the tempter offers to our lips. Taking every little practical question straight to God, we can always get ready and trustworthy answers, and feel sure what his will is concerning it. While, if we drift off into theories of conduct, and philosophies of life, and generalities of behavior, before we know it may run our ship upon some fatal rock.

In general, it is clear that the neighborhood of God is good for man. The nearer he can get to him, and the closer he can keep to him, the safer and the happier he will be.

So there is soundest philosophy, as well as tender feeling, in our song:

Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee;
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me,
Still all my song shall be:
Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee!

PROF. AGASSIZ, though a warm admirer of Mr. Darwin personally, reports that he found nothing in his recent observations in connection with the Hassler expedition to convince him of the truth of Mr. Darwin's favorite theory; on the contrary, much evidence against it. Speaking of his visit to the Galapagos, which was full of geological and zoological interest, he says it was very impressive to see an extensive archipelago, of most recent origin, inhabited by creatures so different from any known in other parts of the world. Here was a positive limit to the length of time that may be granted for the transformation of these animals, if they are in any way derived from others dwelling in different parts of the world. The Galapagos are so recent that some of these islands are barely covered with the most scanty vegetation—itself peculiar to these islands. Some parts of their surface are entirely bare, and a great many of the crater and lava streams are so fresh that the atmospheric agents have not yet made an impression upon them. Their age does not, therefore, go back to earlier geological periods; they belong to our time, geologically speaking. Whence, then, do their inhabitants come from, animals as well as plants? If descended from some other type belonging to some neighboring land, then it does not require such unspeakably long periods for the transformation of species as the modern advocates of transmutation claim, and the mystery of change, with such marked and characteristic differences between existing species, is only increased and brought to a level with that of creation. If they are not autochthones, from what germs did they start into existence? The professor says he thinks that careful observers, in view of such facts, will have to acknowledge that our science is not yet ripe for a fair discussion of the origin of organized beings.

A FRENCH PAPER says: A remarkable occurrence took place during the severe frosts of the month of September last. A large cedar of Lebanon, of more than two yards in circumference, on the property of M. Doisan, at Villopinte, Canton de Gonesse, in the department of the Seine et Oise, was completely killed by frost. At how many degrees below zero the thermometer stood to produce such an effect has not been stated. That which is certainly past all doubt is that the cold must have been excessive—greater, perhaps, than in the different places where so many thousand evergreens have been destroyed about Paris.

Religious Intelligence.

BOMBAY.—An editor of a Bombay paper says he has recently attended a meeting of more than two hundred Christian converts, more than sixty of whom in a short time made such a confession of Christ as warranted the expectation of a very great religious movement.

THE following notice was recently posted upon the door of a Wesleyan Methodist church in Yorkshire, England: "All persons who believe that they have totally fallen into the hands of the Devil—that is, all drunkards, liars, swearers, Sabbath-breakers, dog-fighters, vagabonds, lazy fellows, rascals, ragamuffins, villains, or any others possessed of the Devil—are hereby called upon to appear on the fifteenth of September, at six o'clock in the afternoon, to hear Rev. J. M. Text: 'Jesus Christ cast out devils.'"

THE Jesuits are as unpopular in Central America, Catholic though it be, as in Protestant Germany. The prelate of San Salvador (by papal designation the Bishop of Arshoe) has issued an edict forbidding the faithful to read a certain work against the Jesuits, written by a Dr. Montufar. In spite of the prelate of San Salvador, the book has been republished in that good Catholic State by order of the government there, and also in Guatemala, Nicaragua and Honduras, so that all Central America knows its contents.

A JEW, recently deceased in Baltimore, left by his will $300 to the Jewish congregation Pedekin and Amarkelint "of the Holy Land, located at Amsterdam, in the Netherlands, in trust and confidence that the congregation shall send the said $300 in currency to Palestine, for the purpose that the whole of it shall be paid to ten Jewish ministers residing in Palestine, whose duty it shall be to offer daily prayers for the repose of mine and my first wife's souls, for the space of one year after said ministers shall have received due notice of my death."

THE trustees of Drew Theological Seminary, at their last meeting, accepted the resignation of Bishop Foster as president of the institution, and also as professor of sacred theology. The two offices, however, are not to be vacated until the close of the current academic year in June. Rev. John Miley, D. D., an honored member of the New York Conference, a brother-in-law of Bishop Foster, was elected on the first ballot to the vacant professorship. The chair of the president was not filled, the election for this office being postponed at the request of Mr. Drew.—Zion's Herald.

THE receipts of the American Board, Congregational, during the past three months have been but $55,362—scarcely one-half of the average expenditures—$12,289 below the receipts of the same period last year, and $27,127 below those of the same period the year before. On the other hand, the appropriations for 1873 are $30,000 above those of 1872, the enlargement having been required by the soundest missionary policy. The home secretary appeals to pastors and churches to make up the deficit. In consequence of Boston's calamity, more aid must be sought outside of the city than in previous years.

JAPAN.—The latest news from this country is full of interest. Telegraphic communication had been completed between Yokohama and Nagasaki. A submarine cable was to have been laid last month from the latter port, under the Straits of Simonosaki, connecting with the Asiatic lines on through Europe, and by the Atlantic cable to the United States, ending its circuit at San Francisco. A railroad had been completed between Yokohama and Yeddo, the capital, which was to have been opened on the eleventh of last month with imposing ceremonies, in the presence of the Mikado. The connection of these great movements in that country with Christian missions there will be seen at once.

THE Lucknow Witness brings refreshing news from India. It says sixteen years have passed since the commencement of the Methodist mission in Oude and Rohilkund; and though the work has met with fair success, we to-day announce the dedication of the first church building of any pretensions erected by this mission. It is "sixty by thirty-four feet inside, Norman style, with truncated minarets on the corners, and a triple-storied tower in front, and cost a little over sixteen thousand rupees. There is quite a large native Christian community at Bareilly; and, in addition to these, nearly two hundred persons connected with the orphanage, so that a large place of worship was absolutely necessary. There is also a respectable English congregation for whom the building was needed." A large part of the expense of the building was met by local contributions.

A METHODIST MISSION IN JAPAN. Elsewhere we speak of the provision made by the General Mission Committee for the opening of a Methodist Episcopal mission in Japan. The field is full of promise; all the arrangements with reference to it mean immediate, energetic and wisely-directed work. Bishop Peck, who has supervision of that department of our foreign mission movement, acting in accordance with the unanimous approval of his colleagues and of the Mission Committee, has appointed Rev. Dr. R. S. Maclay in charge of the mission, and purposes to send out with him, at as early a date as possible, three other ministers, who will be associated in mission labor. Dr. Maclay has spent many years in the mission work in China, and for several years past has had charge of our mission in Foochow. He is able, energetic, prudent and successful, and by his thorough experience and observation in China is specially qualified for his new charge. His appointment is in all respects eminently fitting, and full of promise as to results. The whole church will hear the announcement with gratification and hope. It is understood that Rev. S. L. Baldwin will take pastoral charge in China in place of Dr. Maclay.—New York Christian Advocate.

THE ill-advised prosecution at Bordeaux of the French Protestant pastor Steeg for writing controversial articles in the Progres des Communes, against the Roman Catholic religion, has had the effect of stimulating a not inconsiderable religious movement in the department of the Marne. A letter to the pastor from the inhabitants of the village of Troissy, published in the Progres des Communes, states that twenty-five families in that place have ceased to attend the parish church, and have sought the ministrations of Protestant pastors. They also express unusually advanced views on the subject of female education. "We have understood," say these new Protestants, "that the important matter is to begin at the beginning, in childhood, and particularly by the education so generally neglected of girls. It is because women have not been educated, or because they have been left to grow confirmed in error, that priests have still so much strength. We have, therefore, got a school mistress, and our school will open on the fourth of next month. The little fire kindled here will communicate itself to the neighborhood. The Communes of Nesle-le-Repons and Combliz have already asked for visits from the pastors, and have received them well."

THERE is a common impression that the so-called Ritualistic party is largely in the ascendant among the New York Episcopalians, and that it has monopolized the largest and wealthiest of the up-town churches. The fact is, however, that of all the Episcopal churches above Fourteenth street the only ones which have large congregations, or are in any wise well filled, are Christ church, St. George's, St. Thomas', the Church of the Incarnation, and the Church of the Holy Trinity, all of which belong to the anti-Ritualistic party. The Ritualistic churches are St. Alban's, St. Ignatius', and the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, under the respective rectorships of Rev. C. W. Morrill, Dr. F. C. Ewer and Rev. T. M. Brown. All of these churches are small, and a congregation of two hundred persons is a great rarity in either of them; while it may be said with accuracy that the congregation at St. George's church, Dr. Tyng's, is each Sunday more than twice as large as the combined audiences of all the Ritualistic churches in New York. In Boston, furthermore, the "Anglo-Catholics" control but one small church, which is also the case in Philadelphia.—Independent.

THERE is a gratifying revival of deep religious feeling, says Zion's Herald, among the foreign Jews, which is showing itself in various ways. Not long since we noticed the issue of a religious Jewish romance in Hebrew—the last language in the world that one would consider attractive to popular readers, and yet it is said to be gaining quite a circulation among the Jews. We now see announced a work under the title of "Jewish Family Papers," which boldly enters the field of strife between spirit and matter, and combats vigorously the modern tendency to find the real in the ideal. It is the story of a young Israelite, who, for a time, is inclined to depart from the deep religious convictions of childhood, and the training of a pious uncle, but who by marriage is brought back from his erring ways, and led to think more seriously of religious things. The criticisms of the work are fragrant with praise which seems almost oriental. It is termed a glowing rose of oriental wisdom, that gives forth sweet savor as its petals are unfolded. It is said to contain the same spirit that composed the Psalms, and prophesied in Isaiah—a messenger from times past, when the enthusiasm for God animated men with the fire of the Spirit, and the voice of thunder. It is a spiritual spring in which the soul-sick may bathe and be healed. This enthusiastic glow tells us of more warmth in the Jewish heart than we often see, and indicates that it also is in sympathy with modern movements.

RUSSIA AND THE JESUITS.—It has been currently reported that Russia intends to join Germany and Austria in their crusade against the Jesuits, and the story is creating animated discussion in Europe. The expulsion of the Jesuits from Germany and Austria involves the need of their taking refuge somewhere, and, were they to choose Russia as an asylum, and be tolerated there, the policy of Prince Bismarck would be likely to be injuriously affected. It is easy to see that Germany must desire the co-operation of Russia, and for Germany, in her present strong position, to desire a thing, is a long step toward its consummation. The Vienna Press declares that there is no doubt whatever on the subject, and that the government of the Czar will shortly put forth a rescript banishing all Jesuits from the Russian empire. That the ministers of the three Emperors have met at Berlin and debated the subject is generally asserted by continental journals. That any formal action will be taken by Russia is still doubtful, however, partly because of reasons purely technical, and partly, we may surmise, on the score of national policy.

One important fact seems to have been overlooked, hitherto, in the discussion by the European press, which is that, strictly speaking, the Jesuits have no existence in Russia at all. The Emperor Alexander the First, by a ukase, dated December, 1816, suppressed the order in St. Petersburg and at Moscow; and by a second ukase, May 13, 1820, the same monarch abolished the Jesuits in the whole Russian empire. In these documents it sets forth that the imperial action was taken on the ground that the order had been guilty of making proselytes, of greed, of disobedience to the laws, and of violations of hospitality. These ukases have never been rescinded, and consequently the Jesuits have no legal status in Russia, however their presence, under various pleas or names, may have been permitted or ignored. It follows that the mere enforcement of the ukases of Alexander the First would suffice to complete the adhesion of Russia to the policy of Bismarck, and that no fresh action on the part of that country would be necessary.—Times.

The Main Thing.

In whatever direction we turn there are evils to be remedied. The political dangers to which States and nations are exposed, the social demoralization and the vices which destroy the individual character and life, can only be arrested by the gospel. Statesmanship, political management and schemes of moral reform can effect comparatively little by themselves. This is also true of education. The necessity of the world is the religion of Jesus Christ, and all history demonstrates the impossibility of getting along happily without it. Art, philosophy and letters, as exhibited in the palmy days of Greece and Rome, were cotemporary with the most hideous and wide-prevailing vices: The corrupt human heart is the source of the misery and trouble which afflict humanity. In nations, communities and families it is this and nothing more. It is a clean heart that is wanted everywhere to purify all the streams of human life and enterprise, and to regenerate the country. What holds the world back from utter ruin, and keeps society from going to pieces, is the salt of religion that is in them. The active and progressive march of science, art and learning in these days, without Christianity, would afford no obstruction to the tide of corruption. The material prosperity and the peace of society are never secure upon other than religious foundations. A false religion is often worse than none, and a perverted conscience is more to be dreaded than one that is dead. Hence the blighting influence of Romanism, and the semi-barbarism which generally marks her domination.

The hope, the sole hope of the world to-day lies in the spread of pure and undefiled religion. This carries with it all the elements of reformation, and the cure for the disorders which threaten the very existence of liberty and happiness. If the world is to be saved from rottenness, and from the riot and anarchy of vice, it must be through the gospel of the Son of God. This lies underneath all plans, policies, organizations and systems in the moral and social theories and activities of society. A spiritual religion pressed home to the hearts and consciences of the people, all the people, is the remedy which touches every disease with healing power. One individual converted to God takes that much from the mass of crime and wickedness, and adds in proportion to the aggregate of goodness and virtue. The condition of society and of the country ordinarily depends upon the amount of piety that is in them. The vices attendant on civilization without godliness are more destructive than any other. Sin becomes more diabolical, more truly satanic, when united with intelligence and culture. Knowledge and education, divorced from the gospel, will never stem the flood of human selfishness and brutality. The highest of all created intelligences, the most liberally-endowed and educated of them all, is probably the devil himself. Besides mere light, there must be the warmth and vitalizing power of spiritual influences. Whether sin be in high places or low places, among the leaders of the times, or down in the ranks of ignorance and poverty, it is the source of all the sufferings and wrongs which oppress mankind. This plague spot is a fretting leprosy in the individual soul, and its virulent contamination spreads over and pollutes the face of the earth.

To strike directly at the root of all mischief and of all vice is what the gospel does. Christ was the wisest of economists and the greatest of all reformers, because he traced the abuses and corruptions of the world to their origin in the depraved heart, and prescribed the new birth as the only remedy. The world was indescribably bad in Paul's day—more hopelessly given up to lust, rapacity and disorder than now. The political atmosphere was full of electricity, the rumbling voices of subterranean fires were full of the premonitions of national convulsions. But he simply preaches the gospel, determined to know nothing "but Christ and him crucified." His work was against sin as it dwelt first of all in the heart, and as it flashed out in the many-headed monsters of bigotry, idolatry and hatred to God. Get the conscience awakened, change the heart, and everything else comes as a matter of course. The world's regeneration in every sense—political, economical, social and domestic—was to be wrought out from this center of all the forces for good or evil, and to become a moral specialist or a political innovator would have been a weakness and a failure. Those who give themselves to the work of saving souls are at the bottom of the social problem and the political. They are the real salt of the earth and the light of the world.

The conversions which the church counts up in its annual records is the most significant fact in a people's history. It is so much life and love given, and so much venality and selfishness taken away. The number held under pious discipline and instruction is the most substantial datum upon which to base our hopes of the country or of the world. Any country will rejoice and blossom as the rose if the people are converted. Let heartfelt piety, the religion of love and of faith prevail, and all things vitally affecting their welfare will be easily secured. The truest philanthropist and the most practical patriot is he who labors to save sinners, and who gives to the utmost of his ability to spread scriptural holiness. The poverty, political disorders and prevailing vices are all amenable to this divine remedy and to no other. We are to preach religion, live it, and extend it with this conviction, that it is the main thing; the sovereign balm for all the wounds of humanity. We are to go straight forward, and work right on amidst the excitements and turmoils of society, and through its thickest night of gloom and passion and doubt, persuaded that we have in the gospel the only relief; and that this is the best and most direct way of meeting the urgent and critical perils of the times. There is a balm in Gilead, and a physician there.

The Paper and its Friends.

Neither publisher nor editor need be backward in asking the friends of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to renewed efforts to increase its circulation. Their connection with its publication seems to have been in the order of Providence, and their services have been hitherto for the most part a gratuity—a free gift to the cause. What is asked of the friends of the paper is no more than we have rendered ourselves. The paper is in no sense an individual institution, but is the property of the patronizing Conferences, who, through the committees whose names appear at the head of our columns, employ a publisher and elect the editor. The property and control are without reservation in the hands of committees elected to represent the Conferences. Those who work for the ADVOCATE are not laboring to advance any private interest, but rather to build up and improve a property and good will strictly connectional, and belonging throughout to no individual, but to the church. The building in which the paper is published was purchased and is held by trustees in part for the use of the ADVOCATE; and the press, engine, types, forms and office furniture, everything, from the composing sticks of the printers to the desk and pen and scissors of the editor, are the property of the Conferences, and at the disposal of their representatives.

In appealing to our friends, and the preachers especially, to help, it is that they may help themselves, and contribute to the success and prosperity of their own affairs. In canvassing for subscribers time is required, some tact also, and some interest in the paper. But with ordinary thoughtfulness and diligence nearly every pastor can send some new subscribers, and look after the renewal of old ones, without interfering with his other duties. We believe, however, that the preacher will be well repaid by devoting time and labor. Some of our subscribers are doing a good work in getting subscribers; ladies, in some instances; have interested themselves to purpose in the work, and we doubt not that many of our brethren and sisters could do a great deal for us if they would once set about it. Our religious papers are the eyes of the church, and the ears too. They are calculated to keep up a living interest in the enterprises and institutions of religion. They help the preacher in his pulpit work by giving him an improved congregation, and in his material welfare by supplying information on financial subjects, and by awakening the people to their duty and responsibility. Our schools and colleges are in a considerable measure dependent upon the church papers as channels of communication, and as the medium through which to advocate their claims. This is true of our missionary interests, and of our connectional literature. More directly, and beyond these considerations, are the general intelligence and the spiritual improvement of the people. The ADVOCATE is cheaper than any tract, rather less than four cents a copy, and for $2 the subscriber gets choice reading matter which, in book form, would cost ten times this amount. The religious newspaper is nearly the only one that is altogether safe and wholesome for our youth and for the family circle. Good for what it is, it is also good for what it excludes. It is healthy and nourishing food, and also an antidote to the manifold poisons which, more or less, taint the secular press.

We have not reached in the ADVOCATE as yet our ideal of what a religious journal ought to be. Give the publisher the means—that is, the paying subscribers—and we will answer for him that he will devise liberal things. Such as the paper is, it has made no debts, and received no donations or benefactions, except indirectly in the way of services rendered. Such journals as the Independent, Methodist, Interior and Advance sunk their tens and tens of thousands before they reached the point of self-support. The publisher of the ADVOCATE and those who preceded him have done well. The subscription list is increasing hopefully. We have words of encouragement from many quarters, but we want our friends to work now as never before. If he is a benefactor who makes two blades of grass grow where only one grew before, what is he who plants a religious paper in the family where its visits were hitherto unknown? It is as the helper of the pastor, the friend of the family, and the ally of the church in all of her interests that the ADVOCATE claims the vigorous efforts of its friends to introduce it to new readers, and to widen its mission of usefulness. Whether the publisher gives premiums to agents or not, the paper is worth far more than it costs to the subscriber, and those who help to increase its circulation will reap a hundred-fold in many ways. Begin early with the new year, present the subject to the congregation, carry the paper into out-of-the-way societies and communities, and thrust it into your neighbors' houses. Order specimen copies, and have them ready at every turn to exhibit, and to solicit subscriptions.

The Louisiana Conference.

This body met at the Carondelet Street church, New Orleans, on Wednesday, the eighth, at nine o'clock A. M., Bishop George F. Pierce presiding, and Rev. C. F. Evans, secretary. The attendance of clerical members was larger than for many years, nearly all being present before the close of the session. There was also present a considerable number of prominent laymen, who rendered efficient service in the committee work and deliberations of the Conference. We were gratified to hear such men as Prof. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, J. Harvey Brigham, of Morehouse, Wells, of Madison, Moreland, of Claiborne, Booth and Foster, of New Orleans, and others, in the discussion of some of the most important questions and measures of the church.

The report of the Committee on Education, prepared by Rev. James E. Cobb, was able and discriminative, and elicited excellent speeches from the author of the report, from President Andrews, of Centenary College, Prof. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, Bishop Keener and others. Homer College reports an endowment already reached of over $30,000 in interest-bearing notes, besides a large amount of valuable land. The institution has a good faculty, Rev. J. Lane Borden, president, and is entering upon a promising career. Centenary wants $11,000 to complete repairs, has raised about $5,000 during the year, and has one hundred and twenty students in attendance. Mansfield Female College was represented as in a healthy condition, the valuable buildings insured and in good repair, and a good corps of teachers. President Johnson, of Whitworth, put in a few words for that excellent and popular female college, which, though not in our bounds, receives considerable patronage from the southern part of the Conference.

The report on Sunday schools, by Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, was a carefully-prepared paper, and brought out some of the best speeches of the session, by Bishop Keener, Edward Booth, Prof. Magruder, B. F. Alexander and others. Bro. Pipes did not forget to report on temperance, and the brethren voted all that this ardent temperance advocate proposed. On books and periodicals there was a good report by John Wilkinson, chairman. These interests were well represented by R. J. Harp, assistant book agent, and the Conference resolved to do greater things than ever in sustaining and circulating the literature of the church. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE was well spoken of, and the resolve was made to work harder than ever to increase its circulation in Louisiana. So mote it be. May there be power both to will and to do. The effective preachers have been paid but moderately, but all have got through the year somehow. None have died, none have starved, and an increase of over twelve hundred is reported in the membership. God's blessing has rested upon their labors, and, though poor themselves they have made many rich. God bless them! They are the salt of the earth and the nobility of the land.

The missionary anniversary on Saturday night was an occasion to be remembered. Speeches by Bishops Pierce and Keener, and Dr. J. B. Walker, princes anywhere, but nowhere more eminent than on the missionary platform. We have never heard so much good talking in the same length of time, and to purpose. Over $400 was raised for general missionary objects, and $1,200 was given and pledged in gold for a mission in Mexico. Bishop Keener struck the right key in his appeal for Mexico, and there was a prompt and gratifying response. The Bishop stood there ready to go himself, and go he will early in the spring to establish a mission in the City of Mexico. The whole church can but back him, and will honor his drafts to meet the outlay, and the more cheerfully as he leads the way in person. The Conference Sunday was a great day in our Israel. The pulpits of the most of our sister Protestant churches were filled by members of the Conference and visiting brethren. Bishop Pierce, to a full house, preached to the preachers at the Carondelet Street church, at eleven A. M., and ordained the deacons, to wit: Christian Keener, Phillip Allen, George W. Reeves and Jacob D. Harper. The Bishop preached again at the Felicity Street church at night to an overflowing house. At the Felicity Street church Dr. John Poisal, of Baltimore, preached at eleven A. M., after which Bishop Keener ordained the following elders: John A. G. Rabe, J. Gorton Miller, Richard H. Adair, James M. McKee, Joseph W. Medlock and Robert Randle.

The Conference love-feast, held in the afternoon, was conducted by the venerable and yet vigorous N. A. Cravens, who is the very embodiment of unction and power. It was a glorious and melting time—the day of Pentecost come again.

The session was signally blessed with the presence of Bishop Keener, nowhere fresher and nowhere so warmly welcome as at home in his old Conference, and among the people he served so long and so faithfully. Dr. Poisal, of Baltimore, agent of the Mount Vernon Place church, Washington city, was among us, ruddy of countenance, stout in person, dewy and sparkling, and warm in heart as a summer morning. Time has touched him lightly and gently during the years since we met him here at the General Conference of 1866. The brethren in the Conference-room on Monday gave him for the church which he represents $300, as a small token of their interest in his cause, and their appreciation of his visit to Louisiana. Then Dr. J. B. Walker, the eloquent and the beloved, came from Galveston to grace the occasion, and to refresh us with his presence and preaching. His sermon on Sunday night was the gospel set to music, characterized by his wonted brilliancy and pathos. The church was filled to its utmost capacity to hear one whom this people will never cease to love and revere. There were also a number of visiting brethren from Mississippi and Alabama, whom all were glad to see and to honor. On Monday, just before adjournment, the family of one of our deceased preachers was relieved by a collection in the Conference-room of over $400. Those present felt that it was a privilege to make the widow's heart sing for joy, and to pour this sort of balm into a stricken and anxious home. The total collection for missions during the year exceeds $4,000; the Bishop's claim was fully met, and some money over, and the claim of the widows, orphans and superannuates was met, amounting to about $2,900.

The Conference has been greatly strengthened this year by accessions to its itinerant ranks. Received by transfer: Benjamin J. Baldwin and Robert W. Flournoy, from South Georgia Conference; J. G. Worley, North Georgia; J. Marshall Brown, Alabama; George Jackson, R. S. Trippett and George M. Liverman, Mississippi; William V. Taylor and Enos B. Foust, North Mississippi. Admitted on trial: William Hart, Albert M. Wailes, John G. Krauter, James Shelton White, Robert S. Isbell, Thomas F. Webb, James D. Harper, Thomas S. Randle, James J. Billingsley. Readmitted: C. R. Godfrey. The work has not been so well supplied for many years, and there is promise of a bright and prosperous future. Bishop Pierce has more than ever endeared himself to the Conference and to the people of New Orleans, and his visits will always be heartily welcomed. On Monday afternoon at four o'clock, January 13, the appointments were announced, and thus closed one of the most agreeable and harmonious sessions of the Louisiana Conference.

Books and Periodicals.

MODERN LEADERS, published by Sheldon & Co., New York, is a series of biographical sketches by Justin McCarthy. There are twenty-four sketches in the volume, embracing some of the most celebrated men and women of the day. Queen Victoria heads the list, and then comes an array of the most prominent royal personages, statesmen, politicians, philosophers, authors and divines. A readable book, and containing a good deal of information, curious and instructive, concerning the most eminent and influential characters of the times. A handsomely bound octavo of 243 pages. We are indebted to Ellis & Bro., Camp street, New Orleans, for a copy.

THE ALDINE for January is a superior number of this splendidly illustrated publication. The engravings of this single number are worth the subscription price of the volume. We are indebted to the publisher for copies of those handsome chromos, "The Village Belle" and "Crossing the Moor," which are given as premiums to every subscriber to the Aldine for 1873. The price of the Aldine is $5 per year. Chromos free. James Sutton & Co., publishers, New York.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE of December 28 has a fine table of contents. This is a most valuable publication, and is made up of selections from the leading magazines and reviews of Great Britain. Published weekly by Littell & Gay, Boston, at $8 per annum.

THE UNIVERSITY MONTHLY for December is full of choice articles, mostly on educational and scientific subjects. This is a publication of great merit and should have a wide circulation. Published in New York, at $1 per annum.

ARTHUR'S ILLUSTRATED HOME MAGAZINE for January comes out enlarged and improved. There are no fashion plates, but the other illustrations and increased amount of reading matter more than make up.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR, published at Athens, Georgia, is one of the oldest and best of our agricultural periodicals. W. L. Jones, editor and proprietor. We have received the January number.

LE BON TON for January, 1873, begins its twenty-second volume, and contains more than the usual amount of fashion plates and patterns. Published by S. T. Taylor, New York.

OLD AND NEW for January has: They Saw a Great Light; Utilitarianism; Pythonia; Ups and Downs; William Blake, Painter, and other articles.

PHILLIPS' SOUTHERN FARMER for January has been received. An excellent journal, published monthly at Memphis, Tennessee.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR for January is a beautiful number, and handsomely illustrated, as usual.

WE ARE REMINDED by Rev. A. J. McVoy, president of Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Alabama, that his name was omitted from the appointments of the Selma district, and that no allusion is made in the published proceedings to the report of the institution over which he presides. Our report of proceedings and appointments were taken from the Eufaula Daily Times, but as we condensed in some instances the error may have been our own, though we think that we followed the copy on the points mentioned. We gladly make such corrections and amends as are possible.

BY A CARD which appears in the ADVOCATE this week it will be seen that the old and reliable firm of Payne, Dameron & Co. has changed its style to J. F. & H. M. Payne & Co. We are gratified to see that our esteemed friend and brother, J. G. Parham, has become a partner in the house. He is a most worthy successor to W. H. Dameron, whose death has been so widely and deeply lamented.

THE INAUGURATION of John McEnery, as Governor of Louisiana, took place in this city on Monday, the thirteenth instant. The ceremonies were conducted in the open air, on Lafayette square, and an immense concourse of people was present. Everything passed off peaceably, and the occasion was one of the most imposing popular demonstrations which we have ever witnessed.

BISHOP PIERCE left for his home in Georgia on Monday evening, immediately after the adjournment of Conference. We should have been glad to have detained him a good while longer, but he was constrained by family affliction to hurry his departure. We hope he may find it possible to spend some time in Louisiana during the year.

A MAN who is not ashamed of himself need not be ashamed of his condition in life.

Spiritualism.—Its Fruit.

The following correspondence has been handed to us for publication. The letters are not dated—the first was written December 27 and the second December 28.

Rev. A. H. Thomas, Presiding Elder of the Memphis District, Memphis Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South:

Dear Brother: After a free and full conversation with you and Bro. Johnson, I find that I have misunderstood the engagements which I made at the recent session of the Memphis Annual Conference in matters connected with spiritualism. In view of this misunderstanding, together with the fact that I do not wish the church to be in the slightest degree responsible for my course in regard to spiritualism, which it cannot and will not sanction, I do hereby, with the kindest feelings for you and for all my brethren, ask to withdraw myself as a member and minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and upon your compliance with this application I will convey my parchment credentials to you.

SAMUEL WATSON.

Rev. Samuel Watson:

Dear Brother: Your letter, containing an application for permission to withdraw yourself as a minister and member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, is before me. Your request originates in the truthful conviction that "the church cannot and will not sanction spiritualism," as believed and taught by yourself; together with the discovery of a misunderstanding on your part of "the engagement made at the recent session of the Memphis Annual Conference."

In view of the facts, as stated by yourself, I could not consistently, with my ideas of duty, refuse your application. Your clerical credentials will be accepted and given their legitimate course.

A. H. THOMAS, P. E.

We make no comment, except by reprinting a brief paragraph from our editorial, November 30, in reference to the action taken by the Memphis Conference in the case of Samuel Watson—action which we then thought had resulted in a settlement of that case. We quote, and would emphasize our words:

"Spiritism, in whatever form, is utterly condemned as a heresy, which no minister can continue to teach and remain within the Methodist Episcopal Church South—which no member can continue to teach, without liability to the solemn and extreme discipline of the church."—Western Methodist.

MR. EDITOR: I see that the first Quarterly Conference for the Livingston mission will be held on the fifteenth and sixteenth of March, but the place for holding it is not announced. Please say that it will be held at Palmetto. I take this liberty because our presiding elder is not acquainted with the work, and therefore knew not where to place the appointment, and also to let the officials know where to meet. Palmetto is seventeen miles east of Baton Rouge, on the Benton's Ferry road. Our presiding elder, Rev. A. B. Nicholson, will please inform us, through the ADVOCATE, where his postoffice is. Yours in Christ,

T. B. WALDEN.

SPRINGFIELD, La., Jan. 9, 1873.

NOWHERE is well-bred courtesy, or the lack of it, more observable than in traveling. On the steamboat and in the cars the quiet observer easily detects those who have been educated under refined influences, or those who, without special cultivation, are possessed of native politeness. It is not education alone, nor wealth, nor high social position, nor costly trappings, that makes one a pleasant traveling companion. There must exist a kindness of feeling toward strangers, a general recognition of equal rights in the comfort and conveniences provided for the public, and a quickened discernment for the needs of others. Summer journeying in crowded boats and cars is a test of both patience and politeness. Thrice happy they who pass nobly through it, for their own sake, for the comfort of companions, and for the reputation of poor human nature in general.

THE FOLLOWING, from a Detroit paper, is given as the way some stories originate: An item is going the rounds stating that a Detroit sailor refused to ship on board a vessel after seeing a rat swim ashore from her, and that the vessel went down the very next trip. The real facts of the case are that the sailor saw a hundred rats, as well as a pile of snakes, and was taken to the hospital to recover. The vessel went down—down to Toledo—making one of the quickest trips on record.

THE Rev. Dr. Rosser, of the Virginia Conference, has been for some weeks conducting a series of meetings in Staunton, Virginia, and his labors have been crowned with the happiest results. There had been, at last accounts, two hundred and one conversions, and over one hundred persons had joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. A large number of converts, it is said, will go to other churches.

THE Universalist parish at West Scituate, Massachusetts, has come into possession of a house and lot by the death of a cat. Miss Sarah C. Lewis, of Braintree, some years since bequeathed the income of her house and furniture and an allowance of $2 a week for the care of a favorite cat named "Otta," the property to revert to the parish upon the death of the cat, which has just occurred.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A WARNING.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a grave-yard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many grave-yards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility or similar functional derangements to swallow the wretched admixtures that gint the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to all the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

DR. TUTT'S PILLS.—It is a purely vegetable concentration for keeping the bowels in natural motion and cleansing the system of all impurities, and a positive cure for Constipation. They restore the diseased liver, stomach and kidneys to a healthful action, while at the same time they brace and invigorate the whole system.

ROME, GA., January 11, 1871.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Dear Sir: Having used your Liver Pills, and finding none that have done my wife or myself as much good, I would like to know if they would do as well North as here. I intend going North in March, and if they will have the same effect as in this climate I want to take them on with me. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain,

REVERSE YOUR PLAN!

Leave off purgative and violent medicines that prostrate the vital powers, and for a BLOOD PURIFIER try

HAMILTON'S

BUCHU AND DANDELION,

which acts on the KIDNEYS, LIVER and BOWELS, and removes impurities of the system by opening its outlets.

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Kress Fever Tonic.

Ask your druggist for this Remedy. A box of Pills with each bottle, and is sold: NO CURE NO PAY. ☞ Take no other Ague Cure. Ask for KRESS FEVER TONIC. It is the safest. Don't forget the Warrant. If it fails to cure you, get your money back.

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

PILES CURED.

HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION promotes digestion of the food by its influence on the stomach. It promotes the healthy action of the Kidneys. It secures activity of the Liver and regularity of the Bowels, and Prevents Constipation, which causes Piles. Try it.

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

NINETY-NINE PER CENT.

L. W. Faulkner, of Champaign, Illinois, says: "I have been selling KRESS FEVER TONIC two years under a warrant, and have had but one bottle returned as failing to cure. From what I see of its action I believe that it will cure Ninety-nine cases of Ague in every One Hundred."

W. C. Hamilton & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, warrant this remedy to cure Ague in all its forms. A box of Pills FREE with each bottle.

Rational Treatment of all Kidney, Urinary and Liver Diseases

IS EFFECTED BY

HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION.

It acts directly on these organs, enabling them to remove those wastes in the blood which cause Gravel, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Scrofula, etc.

The Child's Corner.

PRAYER.

Little children, when the evening
Falleth with its quiet shade
Over tree-top, sky and steeple—
Ere your little heads are laid
On your pillows for repose—
'Neath the Father's mighty care,
Bow the head and bend the knee
Low to Him in fervent prayer.

Little children, when the morning
Poureth o'er the eastern hills
Its bright flood of blessed sunshine,
Making glad the fields and rills—
Ere you leave your quiet chambers,
Pause and kneel, and humbly pray
To the God who has preserved you
To behold another day.

Little children, when temptation
Cometh with its giant power,
Pray to God, dear little children,
In that dark and bitter hour;
He will then disarm the Tempter,
Turn from you his poisoned dart,
And with grace and strength triumphant
Make his throne within your heart.

Little children, when stern Sorrow
Lays on you its heavy hand,
Wailing all the world in darkness—
Wailing, too, the better land—
Go to Jesus, little children;
He will soothe and he will bless,
Will revive your drooping spirits,
Whisper peace and happiness.

Little children, when his summons
Calls you from these scenes away,
Ask him to receive your spirits;
Pray, dear little children, pray—
Pray that through the great Redeemer
You may rise to life and light,
And, glad hallelujahs singing,
Dwell forever in his sight.

Little Bertie.

BY AUNT MAY.

"Ma, see my marbles! This morning I did not have any, and now I have got ten! Ain't that doing pretty well?"

"I don't know, my son; how did you get them?"

"Oh, I got them at school," he replied, as though it was there the scholars all went to get marbles as well as lessons.

"But how, Bertie? Did you buy them?"

"Buy them! Of course not; I played for keeps."

"And what is that?"

"Why, you know, ma, they all put down some marbles, and then the boys play, and then the one who bents gets all the marbles."

"But you did not have any to begin with."

"No, mamma, but Ben Thompson lent me two, which I was to pay back, if I got any, and if I didn't get any I was going to let him keep my lead pencil."

"Did you pay his back?" asked his mother.

"Yes, and now I have got ten left! Ain't that a beauty!" he cried, picking out a striped glass one, and holding it up before his admiring gaze.

"Yes, it is very. Does Ben Thompson play for keeps?" asked his mother.

"Yes, mamma," replied Bertie.

"And who else?"

"Oh, Bennie Rogers, Freddie Joyfull, Willie Larkin—and—all the boys."

"Bertie, go and wash the dust from your face, and then come and get the little stool and sit here if you wish me to tell you a story."

"A story, mamma. Oh, I am so glad, thank you ever so much." Bertie left the room with a very thankful look; he soon returned, and seated himself by his mother's side, and, looking up into her face with a pleased expression, said: "Is it to be a Bible story, mamma?"

"Not this time, my son; I will tell you one by and by, for I know you love Bible stories, but just now I want to tell you something else."

"Is it to be a true story?" asked Bertie.

"Yes. Can you tell me, my dear boy, how you went down stairs just now?"

"Why, ma, I went down one step at a time, just the way any one would, didn't I?"

"Yes, I suppose so. Did you ever think that it is the same way with any one who does wrong, one step at a time?

"I don't think I ever thought of that before."

"It is, my son. Great wickedness is seldom attained by a single step. Do you remember William Holland?"

"The man who was sent to State prison a number of years ago?"

"Yes, my son, the same."

"I have seen him a number of times, but I do not remember much about him, only that he had to go to prison. Do you know where he is now?"

"I suppose he is there still; he was sentenced to prison for life. Do you know what his sin was?"

"I don't. I remember I asked you at the time, and you said you would tell me some time; will you tell me now, mamma?"

"Yes, I remember I did not want to shock your young ears by the tale of his crimes; it was murder."

"Oh, mamma; how dreadful," cried Bertie.

"It certainly was; he had been gambling and he was angry, and in the heat of passion he knocked his companion down, who falling on a sharp stone, it caused his death. Do you know how he first learned to gamble, my son?"

"No, mamma."

"It was in playing for keeps!"

"Oh, mamma, playing for keeps is not gambling, is it?" asked Bertie quickly.

"Yes, my dear boy, it is. As a boy is a miniature man, so is playing for keeps with marbles a miniature of playing for keeps for money."

"I never knew that before; then I have gambled! Oh, mamma, what shall I do?" cried Bertie, bursting into tears and wringing his hands.

"My dear little Bertie," said his mother soothingly, "yours is the sin of ignorance, and not of willful disobedience. In the first place, you must ask God to forgive you, and what else do you wish to do?"

"I will throw away every one of these marbles. I never want to see them again."

"No, dear, I would not. Are they not still of value, and would it not be better to return them to the boys you got them from, and then tell them plainly why you do not wish to keep them?"

"Yes, mamma, I will carry them back, and I never, never, NEVER will play for keeps again."

We hope little Bertie always kept this good resolution. Do you not think it was a good resolution? How many little boys who read this little story will form this same resolution for themselves. Perhaps at some future day I will tell you how Bertie carried the marbles back.—Sunday School Gem.

Planting Ourselves.

"Auntie Ett, s'pose if I was planted, would I come up a sunflower?"

"I shouldn't wonder, Tot," I answered carelessly; "you look as much like a sunflower as anything." And I smiled as I looked down on the eager face, framed in its yellow curls, and crowned by the rough-and-ready hat, both matching the buff-linen dress.

Without more ado my little nephew captured my coal shovel, and sallied forth into the back yard; and I, thinking no more of the matter than to smile, and wonder "what under the sun made children ask such queer questions," went about my morning duties.

About an hour afterward, as I was passing through the children's room, which overlooks the yard, I heard a little voice calling out:

"Auntie Ett, do I look sunflowery? I've growed here a good while."

And, sure enough, ankle-deep in the sand stood the little one, holding fast with all the strength of his dimpled hands to the stalk of a large sunflower; strong in faith of coming up soon.

My first impulse was to laugh; but the perfectly earnest little face below, looking so trustingly up into mine, checked my mirth; and, calling out that I would come and see how he looked, I went out into the yard.

Fearful of hurting the little fellow's feelings, I gently told him that I couldn't see that he looked much different; and, brushing the sand from the little feet, I took him in my lap, and told him how much better off he was to be a happy little boy, with a nice papa and mamma and baby-brother, and a dear auntie, and be able to run around and play, than to be a sunflower, and obliged to just stand still in the yard all the time. He seemed satisfied, and, in fact, was quite resigned to being a little boy; when I wound up my argument by offering him a very attractive-looking cooky.

As I sat watching him I couldn't help thinking. Not so far out of the way, little one; for we all plant ourselves, whether we mean to or not. Boys, girls, what do you expect to come up? Let me tell you this: If you plant yourselves in disobedience and untruthfulness, and hold on to bad words and cross looks, you will surely come up to be ill weeds, a disgrace to society, a disappointment to your friends, and finally a burden to yourselves; but if you are planted in gentleness and goodness, and hold fast to loving words and kind deeds, then, through grace, may you come up to bear good fruit, and in the last great "harvest-home" be gathered with the ripe sheaves into the storehouse of our Father.—Young Pilgrim.

Mr. Jones and His Cow.

One rainy evening Mr. Jones, as usual, went out with pail and stool to milk the cows. The animals were not in the cleanest condition, and when the wet and muddy tail of one was provokingly lashed across his face once or twice, Mr. Jones got vexed and vowed he would fix that cow so that she wouldn't bother him any more that night. So he carefully tied her tail to his boot strap.

Everything went on smoothly for a time, and Mr. Jones congratulated himself on the experiment. He was feeling pretty well, and perhaps would have sung a hymn if he had known one, when the cow took a notion to lash a fly that was biting her. Mr. Jones chuckled some when he felt the pull at his boot strap, but his chuckling was soon cut short, for "bossie," finding she could not touch her tormenter, suddenly started, and, as Mr. Jones was not prepared for such a demonstration, he was upset, with the contents of the pail distributed over his person.

The cow stopped for a moment, but in that time our hero had gained his feet; a moment after he was seen, with his hand on the hip of the cow, making the tour of the farm yard with prodigious hops upon one foot, the other being suspended by the boot strap, which was still attached to the cow's tail. At every hop he would ejaculate, "So boss, so boss," but "boss" didn't "so" worth a cent, until, almost used up, the boot attachment suddenly broke, and Mr. Jones was free. He returned to the house a wiser if not a sadder man, and, so far as we know, has never repeated his novel experiment.

CONSCIENCE.—I remember reading, when a very little boy, about a child who was in the habit of going to an upper room or loft where there was a store of apples. She went from time to time to steal the fruit, but she met with something that greatly troubled her. There happened to have been placed in that store-room an old oil-painting. It was a large face, the eyes of which, go to what part of the room the little girl might, seemed to follow her; and they appeared to be saying to her, as she stooped down to take up the apples: "Ah! I see you. It is very naughty. You are sure to be found out." This so annoyed the little culprit, from time to time, that she was determined to put a stop to the threatening of these two staring eyes; so she procured a small knife, or a pair of scissors, and struck them out. Ah, but there were still the two large holes in place of them, and she never could look at them without thinking of the eyes, and what they used to say to her. She had put out the eyes, but she had not, nor could she, get rid of her conscience. Moreover, the very means she had used for shining without rebuke only served to discover her guilt, for, when what had befallen the painting came to be found out, it led to such inquiries as at last to reveal the whole truth.

THE ancients pictured Time coming to us as the head of a fawning dog; Time present as the head of a strong lion; Time past as the head of a biting wolf. To be flattered at the outset is to be bitten in the end.—Rev. Dr. Budington.

The Farm and Garden.

Thoughts for the Month.

LABOR.

First and foremost, in arranging for a good crop, comes up the labor question. On this point we have but one piece of advice we feel perfectly safe in offering—that is, arrange to use as little labor as possible. By good mules (and in plenty of them), by good implements of every kind that can be used to advantage, by good manures (an abundance of them), by good seed, and by good management, supplement the labor and make it go just as far as possible. We are very much inclined to believe it good policy to have a mule to every hand employed. The point to be aimed at is, by plowing over the crops very rapidly, with appropriate implements, to reduce the hoe-work to a minimum.

PITCHING THE CROP—COTTON.

The next point claiming attention is the "pitching of the crop," determining the quantity of land and selecting the fields appropriate to each. As a matter of course, when cotton brings sixteen to eighteen cents, it will have the lion's share. We don't propose to run a tilt against a windmill by opposing that; but we will venture to suggest that land abounding in vegetable matter should be selected for cotton, so as to diminish the danger of rust, and that none which will not naturally or cannot be made with a reasonable expenditure to produce a half bale to the acre be planted in that crop. Under the first clause, stubble and rested land would be included; under the second, a goodly part of most farms would be excluded.

CORN.

For corn we bespeak at least the low grounds, if any exist on the farm, or uplands susceptible of irrigation, and urge that these be pushed to their utmost capacity by heavy manuring. If there are no bottom lands, then select some good uplands and plow and subsoil it well, and, when the proper time arrives manure it just as heavily as you think it will bear without danger of being destroyed by drought. Land making less than twenty bushels to the acre will hardly "pay out." Stubble land, sowed in peas after harvest, and the vines turned under in autumn, is to be preferred for corn.

OATS.

We trust our readers sowed largely of oats in the early autumn; if any have not, a portion of land should by all means be apportioned to that crop. We have made excellent crops with the brown rust-proof variety, sown in February. In the warmer portions of the Gulf States, say below thirty-second degree latitude, it is said that the early part of January is the best time to sow late oats. In this region—latitude thirty-third degree, elevation above the sea between eight hundred and nine hundred feet—from the middle of February to the first of March is regarded as the best for the spring sowings. It is greatly to be hoped that the practice of former years, to wit, selecting for the oat crop land too poor to make anything else, will be entirely abandoned. The oat crop should be the leading grain crop of the South, and the best of lands devoted to it. Should the crop fail, there is an opportunity to make up for the loss by cultivating peas on the same land after harvest.

POTATOES, MILLET, ETC.

While arranging for these main crops, there are others which should not be overlooked in the apportionment of land. A good big patch should be set apart for sweet potatoes. Rather light land, which has been thoroughly enriched (cowpenned, for instance,) and then cropped for one year, is best adapted to potatoes. They will not produce on poor land, and on over-rich soils are apt either to "run to vines" or produce tubers of poor quality, covered with veins and watery, instead of being sweet and farinaceous. Another big and very rich patch should be fixed upon for millet, drilled corn and other plants for soiling stock during the summer. Remember how often the cotton planter is "pushed" for long forage during spring and summer. Failure with soiling crops generally arises from not having the land rich enough. It ought to be as rich as the best city market gardeners have their gardens.—Southern Cultivator.

MANURE FROM INDIAN CORN.—It is said that a new manure is prepared in France from Indian corn, a substance now largely used in French distilleries. The grain, previously coarsely broken, is first subject to the action of dilute sulphuric acid, to convert its starch into sugar. After fermentation the refuse is placed in large tanks, and when all the solid matters have subsided the clear liquid is drawn off, and the residue yields an excellent manure, containing about nine per cent. of water, sixty-eight per cent. of organic matters, including nearly five per cent. of nitrogen and about nineteen per cent. of mineral matter.

CORN.—Nothing is more important in raising corn than to secure a "good start." It is half the race. A fine, mellow soil is of the first importance. The best way to secure this depends on circumstances. Every farmer must determine this matter for himself. As a rule, we seldom harrow the land sufficiently. Corn cannot thrive among clods. Our own practice, when planted in hills, is to soak the corn from twelve to twenty-four hours in warm soft water, and dry it with plaster. By exercising due precautions, the same thing may be done when sowing with a drill.

FIRE-PROOF FENCE.—Make a wash of one part fine sand and one part wood ashes, well sifted, and three parts lime ground up with oil, and mix together. Apply this to the fence with a brush—the first coat thin, the second thick. This adheres to the boards or planks so strongly as to resist an iron tool or fire, and is, besides, impenetrable by water.

SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

EDUCATE YOUR DAUGHTERS

AT SUMMERFIELD.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE,

OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE,

Summerfield, Alabama.

EIGHT MILES FROM SELMA, ALABAMA

This is one of the oldest Methodist institutions in the South. For over thirty years it has enjoyed an uninterrupted existence, and no institution has done more good or contributed more largely to the advancement of female education. It is now in a flourishing condition, with an increasing patronage and an able Faculty. Five States are represented among the students.

Summerfield is the Healthiest locality in Alabama. The water is pure, the atmosphere invigorating and free from miasma. It is the only climate suited to Southern girls. No place in the whole South is better adapted for the location of a female college, for it is far removed from the excitements of railroad towns, and the fashionable follies of larger places. Students are brought directly under the best and purest religious influences, which cannot fail to promote a sound and permanent religious culture.

It is also the Cheapest institution in the South. No opportunities are afforded here to spend money foolishly, or to cultivate a taste for extravagance in dress. If you want your daughter correctly and thoroughly taught, properly trained, and her health cared for, place her at Summerfield.

The second half session begins FEBRUARY 7, 1873, when a good opportunity will be given to enter the Classes, and the Departments of Art and Music.

By informing the President at what time pupils will arrive in Selma, hacks will be sent to meet them. The regular daily line leaves Selma at nine A. M. and three P. M. Fare, $1.

For further information send for Catalogues and address A. D. McVOY, President. Jan 2t

Special attention paid to Mathematics, the Languages, Natural Sciences, and to preparing for professional life those who expect to engage in Teaching, Civil Engineering, Book-keeping, etc.

Location high and healthy. Board and tuition at reasonable rates.

Spring Term begins FIRST THURSDAY in February; ends THIRD WEDNESDAY in July.

Fall Term begins FIRST THURSDAY in August; ends THIRD WEDNESDAY in November.

For circulars or any other information, address the President, or S. J. BROWN, A. B., de19 2m Secretary.

MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,

ABINGDON, VIRGINIA.

On the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad.

For beauty of situation, in a fertile valley of Southwestern Virginia, for invigorating climatic influences, general healthfulness, high grade and extent of instruction, excellence of arrangements for comfort, this long-established Institution is unsurpassed. It is indorsed and patronized by some of the most eminent men of Virginia and the South.

SPRING TERM WILL BEGIN FEBRUARY 6, 1873. Charges lower than in any other first-class Female College in Virginia.

For catalogues apply to R. W. JONES, M. A., President, or REV. W. H. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D.D.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR

AND BLOOD RENOVATOR

Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use.

It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and curing Dyspeptic and Consumptive symptoms, Fever and Ague, Bilious diseases, Fevers of all kinds, Nervous Debility, Affections of the stomach and Bowels, etc. As a mild and delightful Invigorant for delicate females it has no superior.

By its use new life and vigor is given to both body and mind, sending a glow of vitality through every part, which is PERMANENT AND LASTING.

It is the most effectual remedy for the relief of human suffering ever discovered, and is pleasant to the taste.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops. We still receive reports of considerable quantities in the country, which are expected to come forward with the reported rise in the tributaries. There seems to be a general disposition to put crop estimates at over 3,500,000 bales. Some count on higher figures, up to 3,750,000 bales.

The river is 13 feet 8 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the tenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales... | 16,569 |
| Lake | | 54 |
| Tennessee | | 1,448 |
| Arkansas | | 6,673 |
| Mobile | | 1,436 |
| Florida | | 29 |
| Texas | | 750 |
| Total | | 24,959 |

On Saturday the demand was fair throughout the day, and the supply being only moderate, especially for the better qualities, factors were more stringent in their pretensions, and the closing rates showed an advance of ¼c. in middling, and a slight improvement in the medium and higher grades. The sales embraced 5,750 bales, exclusive of 700 omitted in the previous day's report. On Monday buyers came forward with still more spirit, and the offerings being more copious, fully 9,700 bales changed hands at still fuller prices, showing an advance of ¼c. in low middling and the lower grades, while middling was strong at the previous improvement. On Tuesday the demand was, nevertheless, active, and under a further decline of 1-16d. at Liverpool, a decline in futures at New York, and a falling off of ¼c. in spots, factors were compelled to make some concessions, especially in all grades below strict low middling, which were about ¼c. cheaper, the better qualities generally maintaining their previous position. The sales embraced 5,550 bales. Low ordinary sold at 15½c., but some lots have been offered at 15c., strict ordinary, with staple, sold at 17¼c., good ordinary at 17⅞, 18@18⅛c., strict do. at 18⅛@18¾c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 18¼c., low middling at 18⅛, 18⅜@18¾c., strict do. at 19, 19⅛@19¼c., a higher style at 19½c., middling at 19⅝c., and strict middling at 20c.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 556,718 bales, against 511,823 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 282,714 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 33,571 to Great Britain, of 27,771 to France, and of 129,706 to other foreign ports.

We quote:

The receipts on Saturday and Monday embraced 4,278 bbls., which were mostly sold as landed at 30@47c. for common to good centrifugal, 45@50c. for common, 53@55c. for fair, 55@58c. for prime, 58@60c. for strictly prime, and 60@61c. for choice.

CORN.—On Tuesday the supply was light with a good demand, and prices ruled firm; 5,000 sacks were sold, in lots, at 64@65c. ₱ bushel for white and yellow.

OATS.—The sales on Saturday and Monday comprised 4,000 sacks, in lots, at 48@49c. for prime St. Louis, and 50c. ₱ bushel for choice Galena.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the demand was light, and the sales were confined to 100 bags, from store, at $1.35 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday the market was dull. New mess was quoted at $13.62½@13.75 ₱ bbl.; 200 bbls. new mess sold at $13.62½, and 50 old, extra heavy, at $14 ₱ bbl. New mess is jobbing at $14 and retailing at $14.25@14.50, old $13.50 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday sides were scarce and in request, and the sales embraced 68 casks, in lots, at 5½c. for shoulders, 9c. for clear rib sides, and 10¾@10⅞c. ₱ lb. for clear sides.

HAMS.—Choice sugar-cured are in fair supply and demand. About 25 tierces sold, in lots, on Saturday and Monday, at 16c. ₱ lb. for unenvased, and 16@17½c. for canvased sugar-cured, as in brand. On Tuesday 10 tierces choice sugar-cured sold at 16¾@17c. ₱ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday 16 casks clear rib sides sold at 7¼c. ₱ lb. A retail business is done at 5½c. for shoulders, 7¼@7½c. for clear rib sides, and 7¼c. ₱ lb. for clear sides.

CORN MEAL.—On Tuesday the supply was good and the demand fair, and 500 bbls. sold on the landing at $3.37½@3.40 ₱ bbl. It is jobbing at $3.60@3.75 ₱ bbl.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 112¼@112¾ (against 112¾ at New York,) and closed at 112¼@112½ (against 112¾ at New York.)

The sales of silver include $1,000 in American half dollars, on Monday, at 109½, and $2,500 at 110½. American half dollars are quoted at 109@110 and Mexican dollars at ¼ ₱ cent. premium for gold for new, and 2 ₱ cent. for old.

Anecdotes of Chief Justice Marshall.

Judge Marshall's simplicity of haracter and absent-mindedness ave been the theme of a number f anecdotes. The one best known about his puzzle over the buggy nd the sapling. Turning aside one ay to avoid one of those awful mudoles which abound in Virginia ountry-roads, the axle of his buggy ncountered a stout sapling. The apling was between the hub of the heel and the body of the buggy. oo big to bend down and too supple to break, this sapling seemed to he judge to be wholly unconquerale. What to do he knew not. He ot down out of the buggy the better to apply his great intellect to he knotty subject and to study it horoughly up. While pondering ainly, a negro man came along.

"Uncle," said the chief justice, I wish you would tell me about his sapling. I can't get over it, nd I can't get around it, and I on't want to stay here all day and iss court. What do you think I ad better do?"

The negro could not repress a oad but silent grin. "Why, ole arster," said he, "I 'spec' de bes' hing you kin do is to back yo' buggy till you git clar of de saplin', en turn de hade (head) of yo' hoss, nd don you kin 'void de saplin' and o to cote slick as goose-greese."

"Thank you—thank you kindly, ncle; I should never have thought that in the world. You are a an of superior mind. There's half dollar for you." And the judge rove joyfully off.

Another anecdote, illustrating the me simple-mindedness and easy ood nature, has, so far as I am ware, never been in print. It is is: When Judge Marshall lived Richmond his opposite neighbor as Colonel Pickett, father of the onfederate general, George E. ickett, of Gettysburg fame. Colnel Pickett was a man of wealth, ved well, and was not content unss everything about his household re the marks of good living. His rses were his pride, and were uspicuous everywhere for their lendid appearance, being as sleek, t and high-spirited as abundant d and excellent grooming could ake them. Judge Marshall's horses, the other hand, were notoriously n and unkempt. Everybody but e judge had long remarked this. last it was brought to his notice, th the suggestion that his carge-driver neglected the horses, ld much of their food, and appropriated the money to his own use, a od deal of it going, no doubt, for nor.

The judge called him up without lay. "Dick, what is the reason Colel Pickett's horses are in such lendid condition, while mine are ost skeletons? I am afraid you glect them, don't half curry them, d don't half feed them."

Dick, not expecting the attack, s fairly posed. He hemmed and wed awhile till he could gather negro wits about him, and then id: "Mars John, look at you—is u fat?"

"No," said the judge—"decidedly t."

"Well, look at old miss (Mrs. arshall)—is she fat?"

"No."

"Den look at me—is I fat?"

"No."

"Den look at yo' horses—is dey t?"

"No."

"Now, den, you jes' look at unnle Pickett. He fat, his ca'idge-iver fat, his horses fat, his dogs —all fat. De troof is, Mars John, t run in de Pickett fam'ly, and it n't run in our'n. Dat's all."

"Well," said the judge, after a tle reflection, "there is a good al in that. It never occurred to e before." He turned back into s study, and Dick was never troued any more.—Lippincott's Magaine.

THE PHILOSOPHER AND THE FERRYMAN.—A philosopher stepped on ard a ferryboat to cross a stream; the passage he inquired of the ryman if he understood arithetic. The man looked astonished. Arithmetic? No, sir; never heard it before." The philosopher reied: "I am very sorry; for one arter of your life is gone." A w minutes after he asked the ferryan: "Do you know anything of athematics?" The boatman smiled, d replied: "No." "Well, then," id the philosopher, "another arter of your life is gone." A ird question was asked the ferryan: "Do you understand astrono-y?" "Oh! no, no; never heard such a thing." "Well, my friend, another quarter of your life is ne." Just at this moment the at ran on a rock, and was sinkg, when the ferryman jumped up, lled off his coat, and asked the ilosopher, with great earnestness manner: "Sir, can you swim?" o;" said the philosopher. "Well, en," said the ferryman, "your ole life is lost; for the boat is ng to the bottom."

SCIENTIFIC.

FROUDE—TYNDALL—PEPPER.—Our country is especially favored at this moment by the presence among us of three of the most eminent men of England—Froude, the historian, who has just finished his five historical lectures; Tyndall, who is now lecturing on scientific subjects in Boston; and Pepper, well known to many of our countrymen in connection with the London Polytechnic Institute, where his philosophical and scientific experiments and lectures have been widely popular. Prof. Pepper recently gave a lecture at the Cooper Institute on Contradiction in Nature.

Prof. Pepper in a few words expressed his pleasure at meeting an American audience, and, in commencing his lecture, said that there was a certain positive order in nature. Sometimes experiments looked like contradiction, but Dame Nature was never wrong—it was the experimentalist who was in error. Taking two eggs, he placed one in a vase of water, where it sank to the bottom, obeying the rules of gravity; taking the other egg, and placing it in another vase apparently filled with water, the egg remained half way between the top and bottom of the fluid. This was explained by the fact that in the first vessel there was nothing but water when the egg sank; in the other the vessel had been half filled with a concentrated solution of common salt, and water placed above it. Of course, following the housewife's plan of making brine strong enough to float an egg, the egg could not sink. Here, then, was an apparent difference in the laws of gravity. Chloride of lime was then used in solution upon two bits of paper, where, in the first place, characters were effaced, and, in the second place, letters which were invisible were reproduced. In the first instance the letters were painted in indigo, upon which chlorine exercises bleaching powers. When the characters had been traced with iodide of potassium and starch, the iodine was liberated by the chlorine, and the well-known reaction of iodine on starch was shown. To show how the burning power of a highly inflammable substance could be controlled, Prof. Pepper ignited phosphorous on paper, thereby exhibiting that, when phosphorous only was in contact with the paper, it was not burnt. This, he said, was due to the presence of phosphoric acid, formed by the combustion, which protected the paper. He had thus shown that there might be apparent puzzles in chemistry, physics and in heat. Then, taking a solution of chloride of mercury (colorless,) he precipitated it with a colorless solution of iodide of potassium, making first a bright red, then a yellow precipitate, which, with a final quantity of iodide of potassium, again redissolved the precipitate, and formed once more a clear and limpid solution. Prof. Pepper here stated how difficult it was for the public to form a proper idea of the efficiency of experts; that, when an experiment differed before a class, it was of but little moment, but when a man's life, as in a poisoning case, hung on such experiments, nothing could be more serious. The experiment of making various colors of liquids was also exhibited. The most interesting portion of the lecture was that in regard to the spheroidal condition of fluids. Prof. Pepper, having dipped his hand in ether, withdrew an egg from boiling water, and then, having fully washed his hand in concentrated ammonia, stirred molten lead with his finger.—American Artisan.

ACTION OF LIGHTNING ON TREES.—We condense the following description of the action of lightning on trees from the Building News. In a tree which has been destroyed by lightning the layers are not only shattered and separated into strips, but the wood also appears dry, hard and brittle, as though it had been through the process of curing in a kiln. This is attributed to the instantaneous reduction of the sap into steam. When the sap is abundant, as in May or early June, the amount and force of the steam not only bursts and separates the layers and fibers, but rends the trunk in pieces or throws off a portion of it. When the amount of steam thus suddenly generated is small, owing to a dry condition of the stem from continual evaporation and leaf-exhalation, there may be no external trace of the lightning stroke; yet the leaves will wither in a few days, showing that the stem has been rendered incapable of conveying supplies, and the tree will either partially or entirely die. Still lighter discharges may be conducted down the moist stem without any injury.

IN COLORING WOOD for veneering, to make the color penetrate the wood thoroughly, it is necessary to soak the woods for twenty-four hours in a solution of caustic soda, and finally boil them for half an hour; on being washed and dipped in the color-bath for twenty-four hours they take the color all through.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS, AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which should not be offensive to the

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATtention of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—The representatives of the cotton-growing States are endeavoring to arrange upon a common measure in relation to the refunding of the cotton tax, which shall be just to all the parties interested. It is thought this effort will be successful, and in such case it is thought there is a good prospect of passing the bill.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 15.—Fire occurred this morning at the late residence of Edwin Forrest. A portion of the library was destroyed, including nearly all his valuable Shakespearean collection. The famous original copy of Shakespeare, which Mr. Forrest kept in a glass case, was consumed. He frequently remarked concerning this work that, in case of fire in the house, he would rather anything else should be consumed than that volume should be burned. The volume was published in 1623, and was valued at $5,000. The fire did not extend beyond the library and gallery containing paintings. The art collection is not injured. The fire originated from a defective flue. The greatest part of the books in the library escaped damage, except from heat and smoke. Loss between $15,000 and $20,000.

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—Rev. W. C. Clark has been expelled from the New York Conference of the Methodist Church for carrying on a lottery ostensibly for the benefit of a mission house and free reading room. Mr. Clark continues to serve a church of his own in Brooklyn, apparently successfully.

The steamer Tybee brings full confirmation of the lease of Samana Bay to the American company, and of its ratification by the Dominican government.

The secretary of the Samana Bay Company says it is stipulated with the Dominican government that the company is to protect itself from outside interference, but the company counts upon the sympathy and aid of foreign governments, not opposition. The company will first declare Samana Bay a free port to the whole world.

Rev. Josiah Leavitt, D. D., associate editor of the Independent, died in Brooklyn last evening from apoplexy.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—Nearly all the members of Congress present in Washington from cotton States, at a conference last evening, agreed on a new bill to refund the cotton tax, which they will press on Congress this session, instead of the bill hitherto introduced by Mr. McKee, of Mississippi. The provisions of the latter are materially changed, so as to carefully look after the interests of the planters and freedmen in securing to them absolutely the return of cotton tax they have paid.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20.—A Havana letter says seven hundred coolies recently arrived there. They are worth $600 a head.

It is reported in Havana that a large expedition of the friends of the Cuban revolutionists, with arms and ammunition, had landed safely at Guantanamo.

The smallpox in Boston and vicinity is creating grave apprehensions. Three thousand cases are reported, and more deaths than from all other causes. The victims are buried at night.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21.—The report of the President and the documents on Louisiana affairs cover over three hundred pages.

It is thought that the investigation will now be rapidly pushed, and the citizens' committee are hopeful of good results.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 21.—Smallpox deaths for the past week, fifty-three, mostly negroes. The disease is confined to narrow limits, and rigorous measures have been adopted to prevent its spread.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 21.—Additional reports received from the scene of Friday's battle with the Modoc Indians represent ten of the white troops killed and thirty wounded. Lieutenant Roberts, of Fairchild's command, cannot live.

The Modocs fought with the greatest desperation, springing from rock to rock, picking off soldiers and obliging them to hide till darkness afforded a means for their escape. The troops made several charges along the line of lava beds, but were repulsed. The howitzers could not be used to advantage, owing to a dense fog.

Captain Jack has the strongest natural position in the country.

FOREIGN.

—LONDON, Jan. 15.—One of the persons who came from France to attend the funeral of Napoleon brought with him some soil dug from the garden of the Tuileries, which he strewed over the coffin after it was deposited in the sacristy of the chapel at Chiselhurst.

Many French spies were present at Chiselhurst this morning, while the funeral services were taking place.

The funeral of the late ex-Emperor of France took place at Chiselhurst this morning. Although ten o'clock was the hour fixed for the procession to move from the late residence of the Emperor, it was thirty minutes after that time when the hearse arrived which was to convey the remains to the chapel drew up in front of the grand entrance of the mansion, and the deputation of Paris workmen, who were to walk at the head of the procession, arrived at the same time. They wore immortelles in their coats, and carried wreaths of yellow flowers in their hands. On both sides of the hearse were the imperial arms, surrounded by the letter N. A great crowd, which steadily increased, surrounded the hearse. The funeral procession started for the chapel at eleven o'clock, and moved in the following order: A man bearing tri-color, borne on an ash stick cut at the last moment before the cortege moved; the deputation of workmen from Paris, with uncovered heads, bearing their wreaths; the chaplain of the family, bearing aloft a golden crucifix; the hearse drawn by eight horses, driven by postillions; mourners, who numbered eight hundred in all, and included the prince imperial, who went uncovered, Prince Jerome Napoleon, Prince Joachim, Prince Achille, M. Rouher, and many distinguished Imperialists, English noblemen, Paris priests and others.

The prince Imperial was very pale, and exhibited traces of the anguish he has undergone. The Empress Eugenie was too sick to attend the funeral. The coffin was covered with immortelles and violets. There was no funeral sermon at the chapel.

ROME, Jan. 16.—The Senate approved the bill forbidding theological instruction in public schools.

LONDON, Jan. 16.—A grand reception was given to-day at Chiselhurst by the Empress Eugenie and Napoleon the Fourth to one thousand soldiers, statesmen and other distinguished Frenchmen. The Empress and son passed through the room, filled with people, in the deepest mourning, and gave their hands to be kissed.

The imperialists expect the speedy restoration of the empire, with the Empress as regent.

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Bulwer, the English novelist, is dead, aged sixty-seven years.

German Mission Sunday School.

The Sunday school of this city, under the auspices of the Keener German Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, held its Christmas festivities at No. 142 Pennsylvania avenue, last Friday night.

There were between eighty and ninety scholars present, all looking cheerful and happy, while the large hall was filled, with the parents and friends of the children, giving evidence thereby of the deep interest they feel in the prosperity of the school.

The little ones sang, with much energy and enthusiasm, several beautiful hymns in their Fatherland tongue, which were listened to with evident pleasure and satisfaction by a deeply interested audience.

Appropriate addresses were delivered during the evening by Rev. John Handon, and Rev. G. Meyers, the German missionary.

The happiness of all the children was greatly augmented by the presentation of substantial presents, such as hats, shoes, knives, handkerchiefs, comforts, hoods, etc. No confectioneries or toys were distributed, which is rather a commendable feature and worthy of imitation.

We commend this school to the sympathies and Christian liberality and effort of Baltimoreans, as also the German mission under the supervision of the energetic and efficient missionary, Rev. E. N. S. Blogg, assisted by Rev. G. Meyers.—Baltimore Episcopal Methodist.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.—The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, Astor place, New York, on Thursday, the second instant, at half-past three o'clock P. M. Dr. William H. Allen, president, in the chair, assisted by Norman White and A. Robertson Walsh, Esqs., vice presidents. Four new auxiliaries were recognized: in Georgia and Nebraska, one each, and two in Alabama. Communications were received from Mr. Edwin M. Bliss, Constantinople, stating his safe arrival and entrance on his work as assistant to the agent in the Levant; from Dr. T. S. Williamson, missionary to the Dakotas, giving gratifying information as to the reception of the Scriptures by that people; from Rev. S. H. Carruthers, Florence, returning thanks for a grant of Bibles and Testaments from this society for his school at Pisa; from Rev. Dr. Cote, Rome, Italy, sending a copy of the Testament printed at that city in 1849; from Mr. Andrew M. Milne, Monte Video, with an account of his labors, and stating the supply, by permission of the authorities, of all the prisoners in the jails in that city able to read, with the New Testament; and from others.

SAILING OF MISSIONARIES.—Rev. William LeConte, a native of Georgia, and a recent graduate of the Theological Seminary at Columbia, South Carolina, sailed from New York on the twenty-third ultimo for the mission at Camphas. The Presbyterian church in Augusta, Georgia, has very generously undertaken to provide the means for his support.

Rev. J. Rockwell Smith, a native of Kentucky, and a graduate of Union Theological Seminary, of Virginia, expects to sail from New York on the twenty-third instant for Pernambuco, a large frontier seaport city in northern Brazil, for the purpose of establishing a mission there. Should any insuperable difficulties present themselves in the way of locating there, he may visit the province of Minas Geraes, to the southwest, for the same purpose. He will be followed by Rev. John Boyle and his wife as soon as a favorable opening is secured. The churches in New Orleans have recently, by a special effort, raised the funds necessary to establish this mission. The churches in Mobile have also contributed to the same object.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

The Louisiana Appeal.

The address of the New Orleans committee to the people of the United States deals with a question as deep and vital, as important and far-reaching as the reality and security of State governments in the structure of our political system. It consists mainly in a statement of facts, the most of which were already before the public. Unless it can be refuted and shown to be essentially false, that which is known as the Pinchback government, both in itself and in the processes that have placed it in power, is a revolution of the State government of Louisiana. It has no legal validity and all its acts are of the same character. It has assumed to abolish courts of justice, and create others in their place. It has impeached Governor Warmoth, and called on the President to give it the protection of the Federal power, without the existence of any "domestic violence" to justify any interference on his part. The fundamental defect with these and all its other acts we have in the fact that this pretended government is the creature of a board of canvassers of the votes cast at the late election that absolutely had no authority, under the laws of Louisiana, to canvass the votes or declare anybody elected; but which did, nevertheless, assume to make such a canvass, without having the certified election returns in their possession.

The point at which the Federal government became involved in the difficulty was when Judge Durell, by processes of anticipatory injunctions and orders, undertook to determine and did practically determine which of two canvassing boards was the lawful one, before either had made any canvass, and hence before either had announced the result. The Herron-Lynch board of canvassers was virtually extemporized into being by his power, without a particle of authority for its existence in the laws of Louisiana. The Warmoth board was the one that had the forms of law on its side and the election returns in its possession; yet it was as summarily stricken out of being by Judge Durell, through a series of orders not only enjoining it from canvassing the votes, but also enjoining those by it declared to be elected, including both houses of the Legislature, from participating in the organization of the Legislature, or doing anything implying their rightful possession of office. This same judge directed the United States marshal to take possession of the building in which the Legislature was accustomed to meet, and hold it "subject to the further order of this court," meanwhile admitting free "ingress and egress to and from the public offices in said building of persons entitled to the same"—namely, the persons declared to be elected by a canvassing board that had no legal existence except that which it derived from his authority. The marshal obeyed this order, and a detachment of the United States army was summoned to his aid in carrying it into effect. The Legislature that was organized under these manipulations might very properly be styled Judge Durell's Legislature. Pinchback, the man who now claims to be acting Governor, in consequence of the pretended impeachment of Warmoth, who had been a State senator for a term that had already expired, and who hence had no right to participate in the organization of the Senate, took possession of the chair and directed the organization of this body. In the other house the postmaster of New Orleans was chosen for its presiding officer.

Such are some of the salient facts which appear in the statement of the New Orleans committee, but which had been previously given to the public, without any essential contradiction. It is a noteworthy fact that the apologists on the other side—the New York Times, for example—do not venture to deny the substantial allegations urged in the committee's complaint, or even to argue the question on its merits. We believe the facts to be as above stated.

Who, then, is this Judge Durell and under what authority is he acting? He is a United States judge in the State of Louisiana, having no jurisdiction under the laws of that State, but deriving all his authority for these proceedings from the twenty-third section of the Enforcement Act of Congress. Does this act authorize him to enjoin a State board of canvassers and arrest them in their work before they have reached its result? Not at all. Does it authorize him to take forcible possession of the building in which the Legislature of a State meets, and decide who shall be admitted thereto? Not at all. Does it authorize him to determine any question in respect to the rights of one who claims to be a member of a State Legislature? Not at all; since, whatever jurisdiction it confers, it expressly excepts such a claim from this jurisdiction, and hence furnishes not a shadow of justification for his orders in respect to the Legislature of Louisiana. Under the Enforcement Act United States judges have absolutely no authority over State officers or State offices, so far as the title to office is concerned, until some person not claiming to be "an elector of President or Vice President, or a representative or delegate in Congress, or a member of a State Legislature," has been actually deprived of a State office for the reason which the act specifies. When this is a fact accomplished, and not merely anticipated or feared, and when, moreover, "the sole question" touching the right of said person to the office he claims "arises out of the denial of the right to vote to citizens who so offered to vote, on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude," then, and not till then, are United Sates judges authorized to lift a finger or do a solitary thing in the way of legal remedy. Upon the very face of Judge Durell's orders it appears that no such fact existed at the time of the orders as the one which the law describes. We affirm, upon comparing the facts and the law with the proceedings of this Judge Durell, that he has been guilty of a most unwarrantable usurpation, for which he ought to be impeached and removed from office. The like to it cannot be found in the annals of our American jurisprudence.

The whole superstructure of the government that now claims to rule Louisiana is built upon this usurpation. It has no other foundation in history and no other in legal right. Sincerely do we regret that the President, in responding to the request of what appears to us as a bogus government, should have authorized the Attorney General of the United States to send the following reply to acting Governor Pinchback:

"Let it be understood that you are recognized by the President as the lawful executive of Louisiana, and the body assembled at Mechanics' Institute as the lawful Legislature; and it is suggested that you make proclamation to that effect; and also that all necessary assistance will be given to you and the Legislature herein recognized to protect the State from disorder and violence."

The President has no authority officially to decide which is a lawful State government until what the Constitution calls "domestic violence" and the law of Congress calls "an insurrection" exists; and then he decides the question, as necessarily incidental to the duty of suppressing such "insurrection." Aside from this exigency, of which upon his responsibility he is the exclusive and final judge, he has no authority whatever in respect to State governments. All the authority he has he derives from the legislation of Congress; and this certainly gives none antecedently to the exigency which it definitely describes, and in respect to which directs the President's course of action.

Our zeal on this subject has nothing to do with the parties in controversy; but it has much to do with the principle involved. We cannot look with indifference upon what seems to us Federal usurpation in respect to the local affairs of a State government. For such a wrong there ought to be a remedy; and, if there be none, then let us make one, since without it our political system carries in its own bosom the elements of ruin and failure. Congress, when the President shall give information in regard to the condition of Louisiana, and what action, if any, he has taken in the premises, should sift this subject to the very bottom. The questions of law and fact are so vital that they ought not to be ignored. The Republican party, as the party in power, will be justly held responsible for a proper treatment of the matters in issue.—New York Independent.

OUR ABLE and courteous cotemporary, the Southwestern Presbyterian, notices the recent session, in New Orleans, of the Louisiana Conference as follows:

The Louisiana Annual Conference closed this week an interesting and pleasant session. Various topics of importance were discussed with characteristic earnestness and much ability. Among them the subject of education received a good share of attention. The Conference is evidently a body of hard-working men. The men who rise to discussion are evidently men who are workers—men who have done something, and who represent something. The presiding Bishops, Pierce and Keener, bear on their thoughtful faces the indications of self-sacrificing toil; and their example preaches more loudly than their words. We are glad to see that our Methodist brethren have so much to show for their interest in the cause of education; Homer and Centenary Colleges are manfully struggling on, and the denomination will doubtless rally to release them from their present embarrassments.

At their missionary meeting, held last Saturday night, Bishop Keener, in an address of great power, presented the claims of Mexico as a missionary field. He said that "if there be any land on earth which has stronger claims on the Southern Church than another, it is Mexico." To this great and important field, which for special reasons is peculiarly accessible to the Southern Church, he called the attention of the large audience and demanded that the meeting should provide for the establishment of a Mexican mission. In response, over $1,200 were subscribed. We may therefore expect that the work will be undertaken with the Bishop's usual energy and promptness.

We hope that it may be crowned with abundant success.

On Sabbath our Presbyterian pulpits were occupied by these brethren, much to the gratification of our congregations.

THE German charge at Rome has shut up his legation and gone home, thus terminating all diplomatic relations with the Pope's "government." The immediate cause of this rupture is the Pope's recent allocution. The German government has prosecuted the Roman Catholic journals of Berlin which published the allocution, and thus the conflict of Germany with the Church of Rome grows hotter every week.

First M. E. Church South in Pennsylvania.

On the twentieth of October last the first Methodist Episcopal Church South ever erected in the old Keystone State was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God by Rev. David Thomas, of the Baltimore Conference, assisted by the pastor, Rev. L. W. Hasiup, at Listonville, Addison township, Somerset county, Pennsylvania.

It is a neat frame building, of Gothic design, fifty by twenty-two feet. It has a stoop in front, surmounted by a Maltese cross; also a cupola, finished in the same manner, in which is a nice bell, presented by "a friend." The edifice stands in the front of a nice level lot of one and one-eighth acres, the rear being designed for a graveyard and other church purposes, presented in fee by Mr. William Miller. It has a heavy stone foundation; the outside of the frame is of coped weatherboarding, painted a light cream color, the doors, windows and cornice white. A neat tablet in front bears its name, "Trinity Chapel." The entrance is by a pointed arch doorway into the stoop, thence by two doors into the audience chamber. This is lighted by eight narrow, high windows. The ceiling is a pointed arch, eighteen feet high, finished, like the walls, with three coats of plaster; the last, or hard coat, is of a light pink color, with centerpiece for chandelier. An arched doorway, just back of the reading desk, will lead into the vestry or lecture-room (not yet completed.) The furniture is all of light wood, varnished. The reading desk, chancel-rail, communion-table, pews and arm-chairs are of oak and imitation. The aisles run along the walls, and are carpeted with the best Battan matting; the rostrum with Brussels carpet. The artificial light is furnished by eight coal-oil lamps—two brackets back of reading desk, two by the doors, and a chandelier in the center. Two coal stoves from the foundery of Mr. Judson Hartzell, Petersburg, Pennsylvania, heat the room. The tinted walls and ceiling take away the glare of light; add to this the light oak furniture, and it is easily seen this congregation has one of the most attractive and cheerful places of worship in that section. Its acoustic properties are also so good it is a pleasure to speak or sing in it.

The stone work was done by H. Bowles & Co., Confluence, Pennsylvania; the carpenter work by Rees & Bowman; the plastering by Simon Durbin, and the painting by C. D. Lanier.

THE New York Methodist says that the Methodist Advocate, published at Atlanta, Georgia, vigorously and incessantly discusses our (their) right to be in the South, quotes from a late number of the Georgia paper, then adds:

"The two churches had better make up their minds magnanimously to accept the actual state of things, conceding each to the other the whole right of the apostolic commission to 'go into all the world.' Any alleged contract or treaty to the contrary is unscriptural, and the quicker nullified the better. Conceding this, they should rectify their 'property disagreements by a commission,' and be done with all these wasteful and disgraceful quarrels."

Ah, brother! that is a hard blow on a number of your old friends. Many of them, and among them four or five of your present Bishops, voted for "a contract or treaty," which you now pronounce "unscriptural." A hard blow. Then this idea of a "commission" to "rectify the property disagreements" is admirable. Refreshingly so. Why could it not have been suggested before the necessity arose for so many law-suits, nearly all of which have been decided one way? It might have saved expense, and feeling as well. Or why might not the property have been left quietly in possession of its rightful owners, and thus have avoided the occasion for "these wasteful and disgraceful quarrels?" How nice that would have been. A backwoodsman is reported to have once said in reference to the past and future: "If my foresights were only as good as my hindsights, how well I could get along." So of some others; if they could see as clearly into the future as they can look over the past, they might not make so many mistakes.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

IT IS GRATIFYING, says the St. Louis Christian Advocate, to learn that the revival of religion among the students of Central College and the people of Fayette, that was noticed last week in the communications of President Wills and Rev. Mr. Newland, is still going on with increased interest. The college in other respects is also in a more prosperous condition than heretofore. Everything seems cheering. At least so say the reports that reach us.

THE Rev. Dr. Rosser, of the Virginia Conference, has been for some weeks conducting a series of meetings in Staunton, Virginia, and his labors have been crowned with the happiest results. There had been at last accounts two hundred and one conversions, and over one hundred persons had joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. A large number of converts, it is said, will go to other churches.

Southern Claims.

MR. EDITOR: I have had opportunity lately of learning much more than I knew before about Southern claims against the United States. I have reason to believe there are a great many just and good claims in the South, as well as the North, against the government, lying by unpresented because the owners had concluded, or half concluded they would never get anything, or because they did not know where to send them and how to proceed. I have been here most of the time for the last four or five months, and have looked somewhat into these matters, and my belief is that ultimately all just claims of this sort will be paid if properly cared for and prosecuted. I think, Mr. Editor, you may safely advise your friends this far, at least:

1. Avoid travelling agents who are going about hunting up claims. Such persons can only hunt up business for an attorney here, when you can just as well send it as he.

2. Make out a plain statement of the facts without testimony, setting forth the amount of each kind of property taken for or furnished to the army; by whose order it was taken, giving name, rank, command, and designating the body of troops, etc.; the value of each kind of property—not property destroyed, but taken and used by the army. Loyalty must be asserted, and the names and residences of the witnesses by whom all these facts can be proved. No particular form is necessary; only give the information in some intelligible way.

3. Send this to your attorney here and follow his instructions. Give your postoffice; and if the owners were minors, state age, sex, etc. No advance payment is necessary. The attorney will probably charge you twenty-five per cent. of the money realized.

If you have no attorney here whom you know well, then I might be permitted to say that the Hon. John Wilson, late third auditor of the Treasury, is the attorney of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville. He was selected with great care and deliberation, and is, in my judgment, unquestionably as good and safe a man as can or need be secured. He has held various important offices in the General Land Office and Treasury and other departments in the last thirty years. He is as familiar with all the laws of Congress touching these subjects, and has probably handled as many government claims, both for and against the government, as any other man in Washington. I know him well. There are also many other claim agents here, a number of whom I am well acquainted with—good, reliable, worthy men.

It is quite probable that greater facilities than now exist will be provided for the adjudication of these claims. The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims will probably be enlarged so as to include all claims against the government. At all events, the time has fully come when those war claims, such as are provided for by law, should be sent up and prosecuted.

Yours very truly, etc.,

R. ABBEY.

ON BOARD OUACHITA BELLE, Jan. 16, 1873.

At a meeting of members of the Louisiana Conference, lay and clerical, returning homeward on the Ouachita Belle, Rev. C. R. Godfrey was called to the chair, and Rev. J. E. Cobb appointed secretary.

On motion of Rev. N. A. Cravens the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we, members of the Louisiana Conference, tender our grateful acknowledgments to Captain F. A. Blanks for his kind hospitalities upon our homeward trip on his noble steamer, the Ouachita Belle, and that we recommend him and his beautiful boat, and its superior table and accommodations, to an appreciative traveling public.

Resolved, That Captain Blanks be furnished with a copy of these resolutions, and also the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, with a request for their publication.

TRINITY COLLEGE, NORTH CAROLINA.—We are glad to learn, says the Raleigh Christian Advocate, that this excellent institution is in a prosperous condition under the able management of Dr. Craven. Additions are being made to the college buildings, and the facilities for accommodations have been greatly increased, and it should be and is a matter of congratulation not only to the church but to the people of the State at large, that we have an institution of such an excellent character. The spring term is commencing. Now is the time for the friends of the institution and the public generally to give attention and help. Send on the young men. Endure the difficulties till you can struggle through them; but educate the young men. That must be done, and done without delay.

THE death of Bishop Early, says the Pittsburg Christian Advocate of January 4, may be expected any day. He is very feeble and not able to rise. His faith is bright and his hopes of heaven unclouded.

The Christian Advocate.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1873.

WHITHER GOEST THOU?

Dim child of earth!
With eye upraised to heaven,
No record of thy birth
To thee is given;
The rockings of thy cradle are but known
To One above.

Thou seek'st to fathom far that hidden past;
To reach the shore thine infant being bounding;
In vain thy plummet toward the abyss is cast;
The line's too short for such a deep-sea sounding.

But the Eternal Future lies before thee;
Whence thou dost come, 'tis plain, we cannot know;
But thro' the cloud that spreads its shadows o'er thee,
Say—whither dost thou go?

What realm unknown, thro' all the bright creation,
Shall be thy dwelling-place?
Where, rapt in joy and holy aspiration,
Thou shalt behold His face.

We point our telescope to search the Ages;
We find no star!
Thou ponderest over Revelation's pages;
What read'st thou there?

Upon that page one written line I see;
The hand I know—
"Where I am, there my servant too shall be."
To Him I go.

Report of Homer College.

To the President and Members of the Louisiana Annual Conference:

The undersigned, in behalf of the board of trustees of Homer College, would respectfully report:

An unexpected resignation of the professor of mathematics at the close of the fall session of last year, and the want of funds to make reliable arrangements for the fall session of this scholastic year, have necessitated the board to struggle through the past Conference year without our usual college faculty. Some efforts were indeed made to organize a full faculty in the past fall session; but the present president having informed the board that he felt it his duty to labor in the pastorate for the future, and that he could not consent to act in his present position longer than the current session, the board thought it advisable to leave the organization of a new faculty in the hands of the next president. The Conference will perceive that under such circumstances the attendance of students for the past year must needs have been, as it was, very meager. Our endowment fund was not available, and tuition fees would only, under the most favorable auspices, support an adequate college faculty. With only three in the faculty for the past spring session, and only the president himself for the fall session, we have, by the blessing of Providence, maintained our position as a college, and furnished competent instruction to all who attended. It is due, in this connection, to add that it was not until the dawn of brighter financial prospects that the present president intimated his desire to enter another field of ministerial labor.

The board is rejoiced to say now to the Conference that the college is at last placed financially where we can command all the educational force demanded by our present wants. Our new endowment fund amounts to $80,000 of eight per cent. per annum interest-bearing notes. The annual interest of $2,400, and fees of one hundred students—say $4,000—exclusive of beneficiaries, making in all an income of $6,400, will secure to us the services of an ample and competent faculty. A commodious building, a choice library and apparatus, convenient boarding arrangements, a location unsurpassed for health, in an elevated region of country, are among the other advantages possessed by Homer College, which, beyond all question, present it to the public as one of the most promising literary institutions in the South—a college which is not only an honor to the denomination which has created and nurtured it, but to the State in which it is located. What it can be made to the country, in the future, it does not behoove us here to say; but we may remark that its capacity for wide and permanent usefulness can not be easily overestimated.

For a more definite view of our present condition we submit to you the following exhibit of the assets and liabilities of Homer College:

ASSETS.

|---|---|
| Bills receivable | $30,729 00 |
| Real estate, available | 35,475 00 |
| Tuition balances | 673 97 |
| Library and apparatus | 3,294 75 |
| Furniture | 254 35 |
| Interest due and collectable | 2,375 00 |
| Total available assets | $72,712 07 |
| Lands not available | 101,442 00 |
| | $174,154 07 |
| To this said assets lost and to be sought for | 32,000 00 |
| Total | $206,154 07 |

LIABILITIES.

|---|---|
| Bills payable for real estate | $5,172 48 |
| Salaries due faculty | 4,473 43 |
| Commissions to agent | 2,134 35 |
| Advances for agent's salary, due to sundry persons | 1,000 00 |
| Advances to Prof. Nicholson, due to sundry persons | 766 80 |
| Cost of suit, due Tippet | 142 11 |
| Due J. Sabin & Sons, New York | 114 50 |
| Due J. L. Dunn & Co | 35 25 |
| Stock lost from sight | 32,000 00 |
| Net assets | 160,315 15 |
| Total | $206,154 07 |

It will be seen from this exhibit that the actual assets of the college amount to $72,712.07, in addition to real estate in lands of the value of $101,442, which we have every reason to believe will in due time be in undisputed possession of the college as active capital.

The board has inaugurated an investigation of matters in relation to the old endowment fund. This was removed from our sight by certain unknown parties, perhaps shortly after the war. We know that as trustees it is our duty to use every effort to unravel the mystery overhanging this singular transaction. It is due to the claims of public benevolence, which must be discouraged in its efforts when its contributions are carelessly squandered or illegitimately sequestrated. We shall not relax our efforts to obtain and make a clear exhibit of all the past financial operations of the college. Only by a faithful account to the public of its generous donations can we hope to inspire that confidence which secures to us its liberal support.

It will be seen by the exhibit that we have raised $5,000 toward the endowment of the second chair, provided for by the resolution of the Conference. We propose to continue our efforts to raise the additional $20,000 needed to meet the wishes of the Conference, as expressed by that resolution.

In addition to this new endowment fund in bills receivable, our enterprising and indefatigable agent has managed to secure for the college a valuable landed real estate, as shown in the exhibit. We propose, as fast as it can be safely done, to convert these resources into a productive endowment. A prudent and economical eye to future wants and prospects convinces us that we must pursue a cautious policy in this direction at present.

The repairs still needed on our college building, and the liquidation of sundry small but pressing liabilities, call for provision of some $5,000 of cash funds. In our improved financial condition these can now be raised by loan; but the percentage required for this, and, besides, the desire which the church should ever maintain to keep all her enterprises free from other than unavoidable current indebtedness, argue most urgently that cash collections should be raised to cancel all past and matured liabilities without any further delay. We leave this suggestion to the wisdom of the Conference, prepared to co-operate with it to our fullest ability in its prosecution of this noble enterprise.

As an evidence not only of the faithful labors of our agent, but of the deep and widespread interest taken by the entire community of north Louisiana in the establishment of a college which shall be the product not of State bounty, but of private benevolence, the board would state to the Conference that the present available endowment fund numbers among its contributors a hundred and forty-four citizens in various parishes, giving in sums ranging from $100 to $500, in notes promissory, with eight per cent. per annum interest from January 1, A. D. 1872. Taking into consideration the difficulties and afflictions under which our people are laboring to restore the social structure under new and strange providential conditions, the board think that no stronger evidence can be furnished than that which comes up from the growing interest in Homer College, of the patient but determined purpose of our people bravely to over-master the untoward events of the past in maintaining their God-given Saxon birthright to an honorable position among the communities of the earth. We may be permitted humbly to hope and beseech that not an energy shall be relaxed until the whole Southwest shall point with high gratification to Homer College as a seminary of learning not to be surpassed, for efficient instruction, educational facilities, crowded halls and scientific and literary productiveness, by any college on this continent. Why not? We have the material. Hundreds of young men from the most intelligent families of the country may be educated here, and sent out to give tone and impulse to our whole Southwest.

The board wish here to make one remark in regard to well-meant but, we think, unneeded appeals made sometimes to the public in behalf of this college. These appeals from outside parties are made on the presumption that Homer College has been at times in a sinking condition. True, we have had our trials, and from sources which ought to have helped instead, seeing they will reap a reflex benefit from our prosperity. But for all this, as our books will show, our progress, with the exception of occasional retirement of members of the faculty, and consequent suspension and falling off of boarding students, our progress has been financially onward ever since the present board undertook to raise up the college from the ruins of the war. We wish this to be distinctly understood, because we produce it as evidence that the very wants and demands of the public will create a college in north Louisiana under the auspices of some kind of patronage, whatever may be our temporary drawbacks and obstacles. We wish the Conference, then, to understand that it has a growing and permanent interest in Homer College, the expansive power of which past experiment has by no means tested to a limit that can be estimated.

For your further information in regard to our financial operations since the board undertook the resuscitation of the college, from the time when our building was brought back into our possession by repurchase, we submit the following statement of our receipts and expenditures, embracing a period of some four and a half years nearly. It is as follows:

RECEIPTS.

|---|---|
| Real estate, proceeds from sales and rents | $742 92 |
| Subscriptions | 1,537 95 |
| Peabody fund | 521 25 |
| Donations | 513 55 |
| Tuition fees | 6,204 16 |
| Various funds | 127 20 |
| Advances from sundry persons | 1,766 80 |
| Interest on endowment (collecting) | 2,375 00 |
| Bills payable (proceeds to balance) | 2,161 92 |
| Total | $15,950 75 |

EXPENDITURES.

|---|---|
| Salaries of faculty | $9,642 50 |
| Salary of agent | 2,000 00 |
| Commissions of agent | 1,769 59 |
| Repairs of building | 1,101 05 |
| Advertising, printing, etc | 858 99 |
| Costs of Tippet suit | 142 11 |
| Furniture | 179 85 |
| Beneficiary fund | 256 75 |
| Total | $15,950 75 |

We have not, in these receipts, included proceeds of all the bills payable given for purchase of real estate in land, nor the large returns of profit from that estate so obtained. We wished to give a view of current expenditures; our other financial operations coming out fully in the statement of assets and liabilities. A comparison of this with our last annual statement will show a gain of more than $120,000 for the past year—a progress beyond the expectation of our most sanguine friends. The exact net gain will be duly brought up in the balance sheet of the board's annual session. In the present current fluctuation of the financial year it is obviously impracticable to furnish a net statement of gain that would be true for a single day.

The administration and discipline of the college receives the same indorsement for the present which was given for the past scholastic year.

We have readjusted and amended the course of study so as to give ample scope for those studies of physical science which have become so necessary to average scientific culture in late years: the study of descriptive physics beginning with the second session of the freshman year.

We are convinced that the time is coming when our educational field must take a wider [illegible] instruction in professional studies; but we are content for the time being to perfect our present undertaking to furnish a first-class college. We think, however, that we are entitled to enter our protest against rather an inequitable practice operating against our colleges that choose only to claim their bare rights of position, in that it is sometimes, perhaps too frequently, stated, of course not by men of sound educational character, that in a college the scientific and literary course of study for candidates for the baccalaureate degree is not as thorough as in a university. We shall not enter upon the delicate inquiry as to the claims of many American seminaries of learning to the position of universities in the European sense. It would be a task to invidiens, even in a just defense of colleges that keep to their genuine normal position. But then we may be allowed to assert what all candid professors, even in real universities, must admit, that the text-book recitation and colloquial lecture of the college class-room, for those of the age usually studying for the baccalaureate, must per se be more efficient than the learned and profound and more formal lecture of the university professor, however much it may be demanded for more advanced students, aiming at higher degrees of attainment and professional preparation. We can never dispense with the college. What we wish to say, then, more particularly, is that Homer College does afford for the A. B. course as ample and thorough instruction as any institution claiming university position. We only ask justice in this regard.

The wants of the country have imperatively demanded the addition of a commercial department to our college, and a course suitable to its demands has been planned and adopted, with the intention to conduct it, as far as practicable, parallel with the regular collegiate course; and, when this cannot be done, to furnish such additional instruction as will secure to a student, desirous solely for a commercial course, all the attention he may require for the satisfactory completion of his studies.

The faculty has been reorganized by the appointment of Mr. Hyer to the chair of mathematics, with the superintendence of the commercial department, and Mr. Beck to the chair of languages. We have elected Rev. J. Lane Borden to the presidency, and request you to confirm the election and appoint him president of Homer College.

Our entire financial plan has been remodeled in the efforts to reduce our operations to an intelligible and efficient system. Instead of a mere agent, our plan requires a financial secretary, who can both act as agent abroad, as heretofore, and who can also audit and arrange the finances in the practical workings of the college at home. Laboring in conjunction with our treasurer, and, like him, an adequately-bonded officer, he will in pursuance of our plan, we think, secure us from the calamitous errors of the past, and provide a faithful disbursement, as well as an active productiveness and increase of our funds. We ask you to confirm our election of Rev. Thomas J. Upton as financial secretary, and so appoint him.

Assuring the Conference of the increasing interest of the country at large in Homer College, and our own wish and purpose to promote it to our utmost ability, with the most earnest labor for its welfare and usefulness, and praying the divine blessing on all the deliberations and transactions of your coming session, that they may result to the glory of God, the progress and growth of the church, and the blessing of our whole country, we remain, as ever, dear brethren, affectionately and respectfully,

Yours in Christ,
WILLIAM F. MORELAND,
In behalf of the Board of Trustees of Homer College.

HOMER, LA., Jan. 1, 1873.

Life.

"Life is real, life is earnest."

To the young girl, just standing on the threshold of womanhood, and looking back half regrettingly over her childhood, with its days of tranquil joyousness, life seems tinged with the rose-coloring of happiness—bright dreams of the future, in which every heart is like her own: guileless, lovingly trusting. As we gaze upon the radiant brow, the light, elastic step, the tender light in the earnest eyes, gazing so eagerly into the future, we sadly murmur: "Will life be always thus exhilarant?"

She passes from our sight and is lost amid the bustling throng. By and by we meet again, and how our hearts ache to note the marks of care and sorrow on the sweet face; the slow, weary step, the despairing look in the eyes, once lifted so frankly to ours. We watch the bowed form once more disappear, with the query: Why is life one bitter scene of trial, disappointment, sorrow!

Yet again she crosses our path, but oh, how changed! The holy, chastened, tranquil light irradiating every feature, the firm, assured step—all speak of a victory won, a high, soul-sustaining trust. Ay, the golden splendor of a Savior's love has dispelled her soul's gloomy chaos. With Faith and Patience as her attendants, her eyes steadily fixed upon the noble goal before her, she calmly rends from her pathway the nets of passion and temptation, purified from the levity and romance of youth, earnestly working in the cause of right, taught by experience the sweet lesson of forbearance, we see her disappear for the last time into the midst of life's busy whirl, feeling assured that, though happy girlhood can never more be hers, she is now prepared to take her place in the ranks of God's workers. And as the beauty and harmony of the "ways not like our ways" flashes upon us, we are constrained to exclaim:

"Who fathoms the Eternal Thought?
Who talks of scheme and plan?
The Lord is God! He needeth not
The poor device of man!"

Report of Committee of Visitation to Southern University.

On the fifth Sabbath of June last the commencement exercises of the Southern University were appropriately and profitably introduced by a sermon of eloquence and power from Dr. Winfield, of the Little Rock Conference.

On Monday night following the exhibition of the Belles Lettres Society occurred, and the speakers exhibited such a high degree of proficiency that it required but little time to discover that the excellencies of declamation had been successfully taught. On Tuesday, July 2, a well-matured address was delivered before the literary societies of the University by the Hon. David Clopton, of Montgomery, followed immediately by Mr. D. M. Calloway in a speech to the alumni. The exhibition of the Clarlosophic Society, on Tuesday night, was highly entertaining to the large audience present, and the addresses pronounced by the young gentlemen of the society reflected much credit on both students and teachers. The graduating exercises were in a high degree appropriate and gratifying, and the addresses of the graduating class were pronounced by all to be of the highest order.

The committee of visitation experience much pleasure in reporting the very efficient aid the University is rendering Southern Methodism in the gratuitous education and training of so large a number of young men looking to the work of the sacred ministry.

The spirit pervading the University is, we rejoice to report, much more healthful and encouraging than it has been since the close of the war, and that the eyes of many, both far and near, are kindling with the light of increasing hope with regard to this institution. A brighter period has come, which promises to inaugurate a career of increasing prosperity in the great work of moral and intellectual training, that may well make our hearts thrill with gratitude to Almighty God.

Report of Centenary College.

To the Bishops and Members of the Louisiana Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN—The board of trustees of Centenary College, of Louisiana, would respectfully report that since the last meeting of this Conference the sum of $5,920 has been collected and expended upon the college, nearly all of it upon the repair of the central building. This was collected without any expense for agency. Making in all about the sum of $12,500 which has been given for the full restoration of this college. The sum originally required ($25,000) we hope to fully realize, and the remaining $12,500 is absolutely necessary to putting the wings of the building in such condition as to make them available as dormitories, and for the supply and repair of philosophical apparatus.

Meanwhile the patronage of the college has been steadily increasing under the able management of President Andrews and Profs. Holcombe and Wiley. Ninety-five students have matriculated the present term, of which number five are preparing for the ministry. This is now the twenty-sixth year of the college since its control by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the forty-sixth of its existence. It has a large representation in its alumni, many of whom occupy the very highest places in the State and in the church. The board would respectfully urge upon the Conference that the way to fully restore this institution to its former strength and usefulness is to direct to its halls the youth of our church, and, as far as possible, influence our people to contribute promptly to the full repair of the buildings. It knows of no educational enterprise in the Church South where so much can be accomplished at so small a cost. The large sums which are usually required for setting on foot a church college have already been provided and put in the substantial form of the buildings and grounds of this institution. The church is now only called upon to avail itself of the generosity and wise forethought of our fathers in the original projection of Centenary College.

J. C. KEENER,
President Board of Trustees.

A PARABLE OF DEATH.—"I asked him what he had done with the beautiful flowers which he had stolen from our earthly gardens; for he had done that thing to me, and I felt that I had a right to ask. But Death replied very calmly: 'You should not say stolen, for I am not a thief. There is one that owns all the flowers upon your bread, green earth, and he has a right to transplant them when and where he pleases. He sends me to your gardens.' 'But why,' I asked, 'do you snatch them so rudely, and leave hearts all torn and bleeding?' 'Alas!' replied Death, 'why do not mortals let them go? Little children are the paradise flowers—"of such is the kingdom of heaven." But be the world ever so bleak and desolate, mortals would keep them here; so they bind them with chords lest they be taken away, and these chords are twined with their own heart-strings. How can I loosen the one without breaking the other?'"—Family Treasury.

SOME ONE SAYS: Have you ever noticed how badly boys write at the bottom of the pages in their copy-books? There is the copy at the top, and in the first line they look at that; in the second line they copy their own imitation; and the writing grows worse and worse as it descends the page. Now the apostles followed Christ; the first fathers imitated the apostles; the next fathers copied the first fathers; and so the standard of holiness fell dreadfully; and now we are apt to follow the very lees and dregs of Christianity; and we think if we are about as good as our poor imperfect ministers or leaders in the church that we shall do well and deserve praise.

OBITUARIES.

ARTEMPY BATIN, daughter of Henry and Eliza Batin, was born in Lawrence county, Mississippi, on the fourth of January, 1842, and removed with her parents to Copiah county, Mississippi, in childhood. She was a good, obedient child. When near womanhood she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and lived an acceptable member, loved and respected by all who knew her. About the first of January last she was taken with consumption, and was soon conscious that she was not long for this life. But, not alarmed at her condition, she continued humble, patient and resigned—sometimes happy in God, her Savior, sometimes exulting in the fullness of the love of God. On the thirtieth of December last she departed this life at peace with God and all the world.

She was buried in the family graveyard on the first of January, in the presence of many loving and weeping relatives and friends. But they sorrow not as those who have no hope. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

THOMAS SIMMONS.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sacred to the memory of Miss LAURA O. HALL, daughter of N. J. and Sarah T. Hall, and member of the Grove Street Methodist Episcopal Church South and Sunday school, who was born in Panola county, Mississippi, February 20, 1852, and died suddenly in Vicksburg, Mississippi, November 30, 1872, aged twenty years, nine months and ten days.

She gleamed, a lovely, bright, peculiar star,
In Jesus' earth-born galaxy, and shed
Her borrowed rays divine of loveliness
On those who knew her best and loved her most.
A child of God she was—a joyous, bright,
A sunny-faced and smiling Christian girl:
Not one who, for religion, wore a long,
Cadaverous visage; and who dressed the love
Of God in melancholy, nun-like robes
Of awful sanctity mysterious;
Nor one who sighed for joy, and never sang:
Who frowned in love, and never smiled or laughed;
But one whose sparkling eye and sun-lit face,
And radiant smile, and merry-ringing laugh,
With words of tenderness and deeds of love,
All gleamed and spoke: "Rejoice forevermore."
Her mother's joy, her father's fond delight,
Her brother's love—a household angel bright;
A beauteous, polished pillar in the church,
A radiant star, she gemmed the social sky.
But she is gone! Her mortal day is past!
Death's herald, gaunt Disease, but gave one blast—
One warning blast. Its notes had died away;
And rosy Health, with roseate hue, had dyed
Again her snowy cheeks, and lulled to sleep
The apprehension which that startling blast
Had roused. When lo! another blast is heard;
And, quick succeeding, Death appears, and with
His ruthless sickle mows the opening flower.
She never stood, as some, just on the brow
Of Life, and gazed into the vale of Death;
Nor on the brink of Jordan, peering o'er
Its gloom-wrapt waves; nor did its waters long
Enwrap her new-fledged soul. The blast is heard;
She bows her head: the flower droops; her soul
Across the darkling river quickly flies,
On seraph wings upheld, and leaves behind
Its beauteous casket, pale in Death's embrace.
Our Laura now is gone—not dead, but gone!
Just gone across the flood into the land
Of life, where now, enrobed in heavenly form,
She towers o'er the plains of light, and high
In rapture's scale ascends on pinions white;
While harp and tongue—a white-robed seraph there—

H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

MRS. SARAH E. THARP, relict of the late Rev. George A. Tharp, of Keachie, Louisiana, died at her residence near Shreveport, Louisiana, on the twenty-second of October, 1872, aged sixty-one years.

She was the youngest daughter of Rev. Charles Crawford, then rector of the Episcopal church at Shelbyville, Kentucky. She graduated at the celebrated school of Mrs. Lewis forty-five years ago, soon after which she was married to James Livingston Henderson, Esq., of Ouachita, Louisiana. At that time north Louisiana was a comparative wilderness; there were but few settlements; there was no Episcopal church within reach of her, but she gladly heard the gospel from the heroic pioneer Methodist preachers of those days, as they traveled through the land preaching wherever two or three could be gathered together. She soon joined the Methodist Church, and lived in it a devout member all the years since then. She was left a widow at twenty years of age; after the lapse of several years she was married again to Rev. George A. Tharp, a local preacher of the Methodist Church, then living near Keachie, Louisiana. In a few years she was left a widow again by the death of her second husband, and so remained until the time of her death. She was a woman of great gentleness of character, and was much esteemed for her pious walk and conversation. She died surrounded by her children and her children's children, waiting upon her to the last with most affectionate devotion. Her last utterances were expressions of peace with God and blessed assurance that for her to die was gain.

JOSEPH S. WHITWORTH was born May 27, 1790, and died at Jeanerette, Louisiana, December 29, 1872. Living to the mature age of over eighty-two years, he was then gathered as a ripe sheaf to the heavenly garner.

He emigrated from North Carolina, his birth-State, to Tennessee in 1796, joined the Methodist Church in 1812, and for sixty long years walked with God. In 1820 he removed to Indiana; from thence, in 1850, to St. Mary parish, near Franklin; from thence, a few months since, to Jeanerette, Iberia parish, where, with the kind nursing and attention of three devoted sons and one brother, and his aged companion, now seventy-seven years old, he met death after a lingering illness, through which his language was: "O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave."

Father Whitworth was exceedingly fond of the Bible all these long years, and in his last days showed his love and veneration for it. It was a "lamp to his feet and a light to his pathway," and shone with increased splendor on his way as it led to the margin of the river, and then illumined the "dark valley" and transformed it into merely the "shadow of death." How promptly he replied to the pastor's question, "What portion of Scripture shall I read you?" "Read me a chapter of Job." That wonderful and matchless poem had been his solace—now it was his stay and comfort.

He had family prayers as long as he had a house of his own. He volunteered and served under Captain Weakley in a Tennessee regiment in Jackson's war, and was one of the veterans of New Orleans, January 8, 1812.

T. B. WHITE, Pastor.

ANOTHER old soldier of the cross is gone to her great reward. Sister SUSANNA BELL, wife of the Rev. Drury Bell, died on the eighteenth of October, 1872, aged about eighty-seven or eighty-eight years.

Sister Bell was born in the State of Georgia about the year 1783 or 1784. [illegible] was [illegible] her father she emigrated from Georgia to Tennessee, and from there to Louisiana; thence to Mississippi, where she was married to Mr. James Crawford, by whom she had five children. About the year 1812 her first husband died, and she was left a widow, with five children to provide for. In April, 1816, she was married the second time, to Mr. Drury Bell, by whom she had five or six children. Sister Bell embraced religion when she was about sixteen or seventeen years of age. As a Christian she was faithful to her duties, serving the Lord for seventy long years. Oh, how many hard battles has she passed through, and always found that the grace of God was sufficient for her great need. Her faith in the promises of her Savior was unshaken. Amid all the temptations and troubles of a long life she was enabled by grace to stand firm; and when she came to her last hours she said all was well. She was ready and awaiting the welcome summons: "Come away from all thy toils and troubles and labor." She calmly fell asleep in the arms of Jesus, with a smile upon her countenance. Thus died the blessed old saint of God, who has gone to join the great family in glory, to spend a happy eternity with that Savior whom she so long served and so much loved, and with some of her dear children who preceded her to the glory-land. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord. They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

Sister Bell has left behind six or seven children and a good husband to mourn her loss. But it will not be long before Bro. Bell will shake hands with that precious wife on the other shore, where they will no more part. May God help all her children to live so as to meet their dear mother in the better world.

P. W. HARPER.

MRS. ELIZABETH MARIA STEWART was the daughter of Joseph and Catherine A. M. Rembert, and was born in Houston county, Georgia, May 9, 1812. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Columbus, Georgia, during the summer of 1837, and was married to Mr. Walter Stewart on the eighteenth of July, 1861. She moved to Montgomery, Alabama, in the fall of 1866, where she remained until her death, which event took place December 23, 1872. As a child she was pious, obedient to her parents, affectionate and kind to all who knew her. As a wife she was a pattern to many, and was valued as a priceless, precious jewel by him who now mourns her loss, and who perhaps alone knew her full worth.

The writer of this notice first became acquainted with Sister Stewart as her pastor in December, 1870, when he found her a member of the Herron Street Methodist Episcopal Church South in Montgomery, to which charge the writer had been appointed, and during our relation to her as her pastor ever found her a meek, consistent and working Christian. Nothing but the sickness of herself or husband ever kept her from the house of God. Always regular at the Sabbath services, the prayer and class meetings, she was a bright example to the membership to "wait upon the appointed means of grace." In the Sabbath school she was a constant and a faithful worker, and many voices will be ready to testify at the last great day of what she did for Jesus in the Sunday school.

Her last illness was of short duration, but from its commencement she felt it was unto death, and so expressed herself to several of her relatives and friends. Her sufferings were very great, but amid the varied pains and agonies that shook her mortal frame no murmur or complaint ever passed her lips, but a meek and quiet submission to the will of her Heavenly Father. It was my privilege to be with her the last few days of her sojourn here below, and never shall I forget the look of holy triumph which lit up her countenance as I stooped over and asked her "if all was well," and if Jesus was with her. She replied: "O! yes; I am ready, waiting to go. Death to me, Bro. Golland, has 'no terrors.' Repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as my Savior have wrested the sting from death, and made me more than a conqueror through him who loved me and gave himself for me. The valley of the shadow of death is all alight. I can see my way through. Jesus, my Savior, is with me. I shall soon be home, home, sweet home." Calling her relatives and friends to her bedside one by one, she gave them her parting blessing, and charged them to be faithful and meet her in heaven. To her brethren and sisters in the church, and to the superintendent and Sabbath school, she sent special messages, urging upon them to prepare in health for sickness, and in life for death, that they, like her, might have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. She retained her consciousness until the last hour of life, praying to and praising God for his great love and goodness unto her. About noon of Monday, the twenty-third of December, she closed her eyes on earth, and passed away, without a struggle, to that bright and blessed world to which she had looked forward with a lively hope and full assurance for many years. And thus has passed away one whose place in the family circle we feel can never be fully supplied, and whose place in the church militant and Sabbath school God can alone supply. She has gone to the tomb; but we will not deplore her, since our loss is her unspeakable gain, and she has gone to be forever with that Savior she loved and served so faithfully in life. May we so live that we may meet her yet again, where family circles never break up and partings are no more.

WHY is a note of hand like a lost land? Because it is matured by falling due.

A FOOLISH WISH.

~~Why [illegible]~~
Before I go?
Will not a host of nobler souls be here,
God's will to do?
Of stronger hands, unfailing, unafraid?
O silly soul! what matters my small aid
Before I go?

I tried to find, that I might show to them,
Before I go,
The path of purer lives: the light was dim—
I do not know
If I had found some footprints of the way;
They will not heed—they care not what I say
Before I go.

I sought to lift the little ones; I said:
"Before I go,
If I might help, in the good-gardener's stead,
One blossom grow!"
But I was weak—oftimes I stumbled, fell;
They seek a sterner guide. Sweet souls, farewell,
Before I go.

I would have sung the rest some song of cheer
Before I go;
But still the chords rang false—some jar of fear,
Some jangling woe.
The saddest is, I cannot weave one chord
To float into their hearts my last warm word
Before I go.

I would be satisfied if I might tell,
Before I go,
That one warm word—how I have loved them well,
Ah, loved them so!
And would have done for them some little good;
Have sought it long; still seek—if but I could!
Before I go.

'Tis a child's longing, on the beach at play:
"Before I go,"
He begs the beckoning mother, "let me stay,
One shell to throw!"
The evening night; the great sea climbs the shore—
Ah, let me toss one little pebble more
Before I go!"

The Papal Protest.

Pius the Ninth has spoken to the world, through the College of Cardinals, in a vehement address, which is specially directed against the resent anti-Jesuit movements of the principal continental governments. The text of this address to the Sacred Consistory has not yet reached us, but the telegraphic summary of it states that his holiness declared that the church was still sorely persecuted. The purpose to destroy her was shown in the acts of the Italian government, which compelled the clergy to serve in the army, and imposed heavy taxes on church property. He solemnly protested against the bill now pending in the Italian Parliament for the suppression of religious corporations, and declared that, title to property acquired by this means would be null and void. He repeated his censures of those who encroached on the rights of the church, and denounced Germany, where the pitfalls of open violence, calumny and ridicule were employed to destroy the church by men who, ignorant of religion, sought to define its dogmas.'" The allocution concludes with a protest against the clergy dotation bill recently passed by the Spanish Cortes, and a general condemnation of the Armenian schism.

If the Roman Church is one and the same with the Jesuits, then its corporate destruction is manifestly determined upon by the governments of Germany, Italy and other European nations. So long as members of "the Society of Jesus" constitute the right arm of the papacy there cannot be much less expected that incessant warfare upon that hierarchy by the powers which have crushed them. The protest of Pio Nono is but the wail over a lost cause.

The Catholic World, in its "retrospect of the year 1871," asserts that "the war against the church," which began in Germany and has spread through Italy, Switzerland and Spain, under the form of the educational question, is growing to wider dimensions. It pleads vigorously for what it calls, "the rights of man, the freedom of conscience," it appeals to the enlightened spirit of the age, "to its common sense and fairness, to allow us the freedom in our own worship, which they, if they possess any, claim for themselves." With prophetic solemnity it predicts a general European war, which may be kindled by a single flash. And it concludes that public opinion must be shamed "into powerful and persistent action to overthrow the mountain of intolerance, bigotry and opposition, which rulers who are neither Protestant nor Catholic are raising up in order to overwhelm all religion, all right, all freedom."

This and a great deal more is put forth in behalf of the Jesuitism which has grown up under the papal powers, which has kept almost every European government—Romanist and Protestant alike—in a turmoil for a score of years, and which to-day is the great reactionary force against all real liberty of conscience, of speech, of the press and of religion. It dies hard, and until it is dead and buried it will continue to be the troubler of nations, and the enemy of all that will not bow the neck to the yoke of Rome.

The most significant fact in this great contest is that the Infidelity, communism, atheism and anti-religious social combinations, and the vast governmental league against the Jesuits and the church, have sprung up and spread out from the most intensely Romish countries of the continent. Italy, Spain, Austria, all preceded Germany in the movement of which at last the fortunes of war have made her the leader. If, as the Catholic World asserts, the rulers of these countries are "neither Protestant nor Catholic," whence and what are they? History will fix the religious antecedents of most of them in the most thoroughly papal courts of Europe, and it will testify that the most dangerous atheism of the nineteenth century has been nurtured and developed in lands where Romanism has held almost undisputed sway for many generations.—Christian Intelligencer.

Churchyard Voices.

While engaged in tracing the virtues of the dead, handed down to posterity for the benefit of the living, I heard from my friend, the gravedigger, the characters of others whose remains were deposited within a circumference of twenty feet from where I stood; and there, as in numbers of other beautiful places in this favored land of ours, I found that there were homes made desolate, blighted and destroyed, wives made widows, children made orphans and fatherless, and deep degradation, misery, poverty and distress, by the ruthless, fell destroyer, "strong drink," ruining both the bodies and souls of many of the inhabitants! Yes, there were the slain victims to intemperance, as the following sad revelations from the tombs do testify:

"Here you observe the grave of a gentleman aged forty-four, who left home to attend some races at the neighboring city, got drunk, and was found dead in an outhouse.

"The next grave is that of a man aged thirty-nine, who, in a state of intoxication, ran a race with another man, was thrown from his horse and died from its effects.

"A little further on you see the grave of ——, aged fifty, who often drank to excess. He died soon after the Russian war, under the effects of strong drink. He would often turn his wife out of the house; and once, in a state of drunken frenzy, he took the butter which she had been churning, and battered the walls with it, saying that he was taking Sebastopol."

My attention was then called to a grave a little distance from the last, in which were deposited the remains of another drunkard, who died from the effects of drinking a gallon of gin for a wager.

We next came to the grave of a man who, in a state of intoxication, attempted to ford the river in the valley below, and was drowned.

And now my footsteps are directed to the grave of the village publican who, the sexton informed me, had such an insatiable thirst for strong drink that he swallowed all before him. He had possessed property in houses and land, but all went, and his life also fell a sacrifice to strong drink.

A little further on was the grave of the village doctor, who, while engaged in trying to cure others, killed himself through indulging to excess in intoxicating drinks.

I now come to the last of this sad catalogue of drink-victims—a man aged fifty, who was a great drinker, as the sexton said. "He drank hard, and in a state of inebriation passed through the graveyard and saw me making a grave. 'John,' said he, with an oath, 'are you making that grave for me?'"

His words were nearly verified, for the very next grave was made for this poor drunkard.

After listening to these startling disclosures, I appealed to the sexton if they were not sufficient to make him abandon the drink altogether, to which he replied: "I like a little drop yet." And so it is; "the little drop" was the first step downward in the career of these poor drunkards. They started in the belief that they would be able to withstand temptation, but see how they fell! Hundreds and thousands of others are now treading the same dangerous path, and will fall over the precipice, victims to strong drink. If there are those who, in perusing this, feel that they still have a craving for intoxicating drinks, may they be strengthened and encouraged to give up the little drop, and banish it altogether. Fathers and mothers, give it up for the sake of your children; wives for your husbands; husbands for your wives; Sunday school teachers for the sake of your scholars; and, above all, Christian ministers, Christian professors, for the sake of your churches and those near and dear to you, deny yourselves, sacrificing your own appetite and indulgences for the sake of those who are perishing around you, for whom Christ died.—The Christian, London.

Richard Cameron, the Scotch Martyr.

Richard Cameron, hunted like a deer upon the mountains, went by night from place to place, wherever he could find some of the scattered sheep, till he came to Hyndbottom, where he preached to a large congregation, while a guard was set to give notice if the soldiers approached. After pressing Christ upon his hearers with the most thrilling eloquence, he closed by saying:

"We offer him to all you that dwell hereabouts; and what say ye? Will ye take him? We take as testimony these hills and mountains, that we offered him to you this day. Look at them now, for they are all witnesses, and when ye are dying they shall come before your face. And we take you to be witnesses, one against another, that we have invited and urged you to come to Christ, and yet ye would not."

The whole congregation began to weep. Pausing again a few minutes, he added with great sweetness and solemnity:

"Angels are going up to report before the throne what every one's choice has been this day, and will say: 'There are some in these parishes that have received the Lord Jesus Christ, and he has become their Lord;' then there will be a great shout, for this will be welcome news there."

The whole congregation wept. Strong men, as well as women and children, stood, as one said, as if their faces had been washed with a shower of rain. And many that day declared themselves on the Lord's side.

It was his last sermon. As he passed away across the moors in company with two friends, the troopers overtook them. They ran till he fell down exhausted, and as they raised him up the soldiers fired, and he fell as they plunged into a ravine. The soldiers passed on and left him, and his friends returned. They found him alive; he knew them and said:

"I am dying, I am dying; but I am happy, happy, HAPPY; and if I had a thousand lives I would willingly lay them all down, one after another, for Christ's sake. Oh, it is sweet to suffer for Christ! Many a pleasant hour have I spent in religious ordinances; but I have never spent a happier season than that since these bulls passed through my body! I shall soon see him whom my soul loveth and who gave himself for me. I know that God has received me for Jesus' sake. I feel it, I feel it in my heart. He has sealed me unto the day of redemption. I now die as a witness for Christ, and what a privilege is that. Bear my love to my dear parents and sister at Marion. Tell them not to weep, but continue steadfast in the faith, and not to fear a suffering lot for Christ.

"Oh, he is near me. I think I see him. I am just coming, Lord Jesus. I leave my love to all my suffering brothers and sisters. I forgive my murderers. Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Two or three hard breaths, and he was with Christ. They gathered the blooming heather and strewed it in his grave—gently laid him down on the moor where he fell, and strewed more heather blossoms over his loved form, and left him alone, and went on their way, to do and suffer the like for Christ.

Oh, how far we have fallen from the vigor of that piety! Is it not possible, by a voluntary offering of ourselves to Christ, to cultivate something of such strength and energy? Now almost universally outward prosperity generates indolence, and indolence weakness, till the very life of religion perishes from the soul and the church.—American Messenger.

Large Stories.

An article in the British Quarterly Review, on "Wit and Humor," gives some attention to the consideration of hyperbolical stories, or such as are styled in current popular speech Munchausenisms. The Spaniards and the Gascons have been the greatest practicers of the art of hyperbole. From the latter we have derived the term Gasconade to denote over-boastful speaking. Among the stories of the Gascons we have the following:

"A Gascon, while skating, was pushed down by an acquaintance; he got up, and said in a rage: 'It is very lucky for you, sir, that I don't dislike falling.' An officer hearing some one celebrating the exploits of a prince who, in two assaults upon a town, had killed six men with his own hand, cried out: 'Bah, I would have you to know that the very mattresses I sleep on are stuffed with nothing but the whiskers of those whom I have sent to slumber in the other world.' Another Gascon, in proof of his nobility, asserted that 'in his father's castle they used no other firewood than the batons of the different marshals of France of his family.' A soldier said 'he had been in so many battles, and had been so battered with bullets, that he swore he had a mine of lead in his inside.' Some of the hyperbolical stories are more poetical than these; as when a Spanish officer, on the morning of battle, addressed a company of dragoons thus: 'The dust on which we now are shall soon be changed to a mountain of dead bodies, and the sun, seeing a height of where he had been accustomed to see a plain, will think he has lost his way.'"

Many of the gasconades quoted in the modern jest-books appeared originally in a little book published in the seventeenth century, and entitled "Al-man-sir, or Rhodomontades of the Most Horrible, Terrible and Invincible Captain Sir Frederick Fight-all. This contains many of the gasconades quoted in more modern jest-books. Here is one of these that has undergone various alterations: 'If I come to thee with my foot I will kick thee so high into the air that hadst thou ten cart-loads of bread thou shouldst be in greater fear of starving than of falling.' Another is an elaborate description of the vaporer's furniture: 'My bedstead is made of the ribs of giants, the ticking of my bed is tilted with the mustaches of the masters of the camp to the Grand Turk,' and so on."

Some quite beautiful stories of this kind are from the Greek. Thus it is related that "on Dieneces, the Spartan, being told the number of Xerxes' army was so great that when they shot forth their arrows the sun would be darkened by their multitude, he answered: 'If the Medes darken the sun, we shall have our fight in the shade.'"

American hyperboles are among the most original. They generally take a ludicrous turn, and are almost always marred by roughness. Of these are such as the following:

"'A man was so tall that he had to go up a ladder to shave himself;' 'another was so strong that his sneeze would kill a buffalo across the Mississippi river;' 'a Massachusetts pig was so lean that it was necessary to tie a knot in its tail to prevent it getting through the chinks of the paling;' 'an American artist painted a snow-storm so naturally that he caught a bad cold by sitting near it with his coat off.' 'Some land was so rich that a squash-vine, in its rapid growth, overtook a drove of pigs.' 'The reason why cream is dear is that milk has risen so high the cream can't reach the top.' There is a capital story, in which it is related that 'a coach drove through the country so fast, and the mile-stones passed so quickly by, that the passengers thought they were in a churchyard.' A witness who was examined on the trial of a life insurance case, growing out of the blowing up of a steamer on the Ohio, 'What was the last time you saw him?' answered, 'The very last time I ever set eyes on him was when the biler burst, and I was going up. I met him and the smoke-pipe coming down.'"

Even a people so heavy in their joking as the English ordinarily are have given some good things in this line:

"A commercial traveler, boasting that his firm spent £300 a year for writing-ink alone, was answered: 'During the last twelve months we have saved in that article alone £2,000 by merely omitting the dots to our i's and the crosses to our t's.' One of the best specimens of rhodomontade is the following: Two men, who were famous for their vaporing, laid a wager as to which could tell the biggest story. One said that he was in the mid-ocean, far away from land, when he espied a man swimming. The ship was stopped, and preparations were made for taking the man in, when he cried out: 'I am all right, and only want to know the latitude and longitude; for I am swimming to England.' This seemed sufficiently improbable; but the other capped it by asking 'whether his friend had seen the man again?' and, being answered in the negative, said: 'Then I am he.'"—Methodist.

Something About Dress.

A very clear writer in the Edinburg Daily Review, in a series of articles on matters and things in general, has the following humorous observations on the styles of dress that prevail in civilized countries:

Our friends who come up from the country to Hollow Fair usually take advantage of the opportunity to rig themselves out in a suit of the latest fashion, incited thereto by the sensation they produce in Princes street by their rustic appearance. I don't know that their town-made attire is always an improvement upon the native manufacture. We submit helplessly to the tyranny of fashion, when the smallest exercise of our own cool judgment would satisfy us that we are often sacrificing ease and comfort and economy for the sake of being neighbor-like. A Turk or a Syrian or a Hindoo has much better reason for laughing at our costume than we have for deriding that of our country cousins. Just think of it. Our coats and waistcoats must be made tight enough to button, otherwise they are wrinkled and baggy. Well, there are many who vary in condition to such an extent that their clothes never fit. They may be stout when they get fitted, and in a few weeks their clothes are several inches too wide for them. Or they may be in poor condition when they pass through the tailor's hands, and soon their garments won't meet on them. Many a man can't eat a hearty dinner without letting out several buttons of his waistcoat. I once knew a newspaper editor who could not write a leading article till he had eased both waistcoat and trousers; he had his brains in that locality, and they required room to work.

Why all this toil and trouble? Loose robes, such as they wear in the East, with a sash or shawl for a girdle, would fit and be comfortable, however much the wearer might shrink or expand in body. Then they would cover the knees and protect them from the weather; whereas our fashion of short coats, under and upper, instead of protecting the knees, sends the rain dripping upon them, and makes them wetter than if there were no coat at all. Your robes of Eastern style would never go out of fashion, and would wear double the time that tights do. Then think of the comfort of throwing yourself down at night—or by day either, for the matter of that—when you are sleepy, and having your comfortable snooze without more ado. Why, what do we do when we want to go to sleep? We strip to the buff, probably take a sponge down or a rub with a wet towel, put on a night-shirt, which sends a shiver through a delicate frame, and then perhaps mount to an immense four-posted bed by a flight of steps, as if we were ascending a public platform, and finally plunge between a pair of cold sheets which communicate as great a shock to the system as if it were to plunge into the sea. And we call this composing ourselves to sleep! It is much more like a design for murdering sleep. It may do for those who have a Napoleon Bonaparte or Dr. Candlish faculty for going to sleep at will, but it is a very strange way of wooing that coy maiden who personifies sleep.

The Orientals are more rational. When an inspiration of sleep comes upon them they don't forthwith proceed to drive it away by the laborious movement we go through at bed-time, but they draw their long robe about them, curl up their feet within its ample folds, lie down on their divan, and are off to the Land of Nod before a Western beauty could get her chignon taken off and her hair let down. Doth not nature itself teach you that this is the proper way of going to sleep? Look at your dog, if you have one, or your cat—everybody has a cat. What does Towser or Baudrons do when he gets sleepy? He just lies down and sleeps. And we think it a proof of superior wisdom to undress and dress again, and give so rough a reception—to tired—nature's sweet restorer that she flies away offended. When I think how sweetly the subjects of the Sultan do compose them when wooed by "the balmy," I feel disposed to say with a staunch old "Moderate" member of the General Assembly: "Moderator, I love a Turk." It is the irrational costume that leads to the other irrational practice; and I don't expect that people will listen to reason about dress in this tailor and milliner-ridden Western world of ours. A couple of centuries hence the then editor of the Review may have a "local" some morning pointing out that the old file of the paper proves this journal to have been the first to urge the dress reform recently inaugurated. That is all the reward that can be looked for.

SERVING TABLES.—A missionary was once complaining in the presence of Dr. Goodell, of Constantinople, that his time had been used up in attending to secular matters—accounts with natives, book sales, making purchases for missionaries in the interior, etc.—till he had had very little time for the study of the language, or for that direct missionary work to which he had regarded himself as devoted. "Were not the disciples truly serving the Master when, at his command, they went after the donkey?"—Missionary Herald.

A MINISTER made an interminable call upon a lady of his acquaintance. Her little daughter, who was present, grew very weary of his conversation, and at last whispered in an audible key: "Didn't he bring his amen with him, mamma?"

"I WISH I was a little French girl," said a ten-year-old. "Why?" asked her mamma. "Because then I should know two languages." "How so?" "Why, you know I can speak English now, and French would make two."

SOME men's minds are like a nest of clean and unclean birds, all crowded together; so that one can with difficulty get out a clean bird without pulling out an unclean bird with it.

Religious Intelligence.

BISHOP COXE, of western New York, sailed on November 9 for Hayti, intending to establish a mission there and to ordain to the ministry of the Episcopal Church several candidates.

MISSIONARIES GOING OUT.—Rev. V. Wittling, superintendent of the Methodist missions in Sweden, left the port of New York, in the City of Washington, December 7, for his headquarters in Gottenburg.

A SUBLIME PURPOSE.—The missionaries, or rather the Bible Society at Allahabad, India, have begun and purpose to continue until they shall have furnished a copy of the Holy Scriptures to every inhabitant of India.

THE female members of the First Baptist church in Nashville, Tennessee, have agreed that they will dispense with all finery on Sunday, "wearing no jewels but consistency," and "will hereafter appear at church in plain calico dresses."

THE Waldensian Synod reports thirty-seven mission stations throughout Italy and Sicily, with eighty-eight laborers and 2,000 communicants. Outside of the valleys of the Waldenses 4,000 would probably represent the whole number of Protestant communicants in Italy.

THE Ashland avenue Presbyterian church, Chicago, which was organized last November, installed its pastor, Rev. Arthur Swasey, last week. Mr. Swasey was lately editor of the Interior, and for many years the popular pastor of the Third Presbyterian church. The new church numbers about sixty members.

PROVISION FOR WORSHIP.—The census reports that there are 72,459 church organizations in the country, of all religious persuasions, having 63,082 edifices that are valued at $354,483,851, capable of seating 21,665,062 persons. The church property of the Methodists is valued at $69,854,121; of the Presbyterians at $69,339,726, and of the Roman Catholics at $60,985,536.

THE Evangelist says that the plan of considering particular mission fields each month in a certain order has met with general approbation in the Presbyterian churches during the past year. Each mission has in its turn been brought prominently to view. Many churches in which no monthly concert had for a long time been observed have revived it, and others have for the first time established it.

FROM Morant Bay, Jamaica, where the English Baptists have recently established successfully a missionary station, Rev. W. Teall reports great encouragement. He had formed two new churches in the vicinity, and was about to establish the third, with the expectation that the churches of Morant Bay (with its successful native pastor) and Monklands would become this fall so independent that he would be at liberty to devote all of his energies to the new churches.

PROF. E. HITCHCOCK, writing from Canton, bears enthusiastic testimony to the labors of missionaries whom he has met on his way, to the Christian courtesy received at their hands by him and his fellow-travelers, as well as to the Christian fellowship, unaffected by denominational differences, which exists among them, which has made Prof. Seelye as welcome to preach in Canton for Archdeacon Gray in an Episcopal pulpit as in the college church in Amherst.

A WONDERFUL REVIVAL.—Rev. H. H. Spalding, the venerable missionary to the Nez Perces Indians in Idaho Territory, within the past year has received 479 persons into the church. In a letter to the New York Observer he says: "I never saw human hearts get so near to the cross of Christ." The whites, though not Christians, acknowledge the power and the manifest results of the wonderful work. "Every man among the young converts has abandoned the use of tobacco, though frantically attached to it.

RELIGIOUS WORK AT THE EXPOSITION.—The directors of the great Exposition at Vienna will not allow the erection of a kiosk within the grounds or in the vicinity for the distribution of the Bible and tracts, as was done at Paris. Space, however, has been afforded to the Bible Society and the Tract Society for the exhibition of their versions and publications within the English compartment. A committee of resident ladies has been appointed to distribute tracts, and a large supply in various languages will be provided, but owing to the laws of Austria great caution will be required for their distribution.

OUR CHINESE WORK IN CALIFORNIA.—The report of Rev. O. Gibson, in charge of the Chinese work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in San Francisco, gave a detailed account of the work in the mission and school during the past year. The average attendance in the school has been thirty-five—an increase of ten above the preceding year. A chapel has been provided in the Chinese quarter of the city, in which Bro. Hu Sing Mi preaches every day. He is assisted by our first Chinese convert, who is fairly educated and devoted to the work. He is a promising young man, who, if faithful, will be a useful laborer among his countrymen. The report recommends the establishment of a mission in Canton, China.—New York Christian Advocate.

IT IS REPORTED, says the Independent, that there is a society of "fathers" in connection with the Ritualistic Church of the Advent, in Boston, which is quietly laying its plans to besiege that abode of the wicked, Harvard College, and convert the same to the Catholic faith, which save every one do keep whole and undefiled he shall without doubt perish everlastingly. These same paternal young gentlemen are said to have in view legal proceedings for the recovery of King's Chapel and its property; a task which, if there are no other good works to be done in Boston, will probably furnish them with amusement for several years to come, and will also demand liberal alms and oblations from the faithful.

THERE are eight counties in Pennsylvania which do not contain a Roman Catholic church edifice. In the whole country there are but 3,806 of these edifices, but they will seat 1,999,515 persons. The Catholic increase for the last ten years is less than that of the preceding ten years. In 1850 there were reported 1,222 edifices, with room for 667,863 persons. In 1860 the numbers were 2,550 edifices and 1,401,437 sittings—more than double in each column. But in 1870 the increase was only a little over one-half in the number of buildings (up to 3,806,) and a little over one-third in the accommodations (up to 1,999,515.) Nor has there been any greater advance in the value of the properties.

THE Pall Mall Gazette notices a letter in the Allgemeine Zeitung, indicating religious changes in Turkey likely to be brought about by political causes. Among these is the union of the Old Catholics and the Protestant Armenians. The Greek Church, in some parts of Turkey, is also represented as having become alienated from Russia in feeling, and from the Czar, who is the acknowledged head of the Greek Church, and to be tending toward the simple truth of Protestantism, and from the superstitions and formalities which have from a very early age marred the Eastern Church. They are represented as tending to fraternal relations with the free Protestant churches of Germany and America.

THE mayors of English towns who happen to be Dissenters are shocking churchmen by attending, on the Sunday after their election, their regular places of worship, instead of going in state with the aldermen and councillors to the Established Church. Mayor Wrigley, of Oldham, attended the Unitarian church in this way, saying that he had been in favor of the separation of Church and State, and could not, by the customary ceremony, give the lie to his life-long convictions. When service was over a large crowd had assembled, including many roughs, who had a deep reverence for the church; and a carriage containing the members of his family was mobbed, and he was hooted as he came out of the church and followed a long distance by the crowd.

THE Presbyterian Witness, of Halifax, tells a story of priestly Bible-burning that took place lately in Nova Scotia. Mr. Bourillotte, a Presbyterian missionary, gave a Bible to a lady at Grand Falls, who had become a Protestant. Father Dupe the Catholic priest, calling to see the lady, saw the Bible and thrust it into the fire. The priest was summoned before a magistrate to be tried for the outrage; but on the day before the trial the Bible-burning priest took counsel of his worldly discretion and agreed to pay for the burned Bible, to pay all the expenses of the trial, and make an apology for his wrong, and so he was let off—probably a wiser man for his experience. It is always a good thing when priests are taught that they are answerable to the laws of the land.—Independent.

THE GREATEST HINDRANCE TO MISSIONS.—Rev. Albert Bushnell, at the Gaboon mission, West Africa, writes to the National Temperance Advocate that "in sight of their mission house are over twenty establishments, the majority of which were established by merchants from Christian lands for the sale of rum and other intoxicating liquors. Native young men are employed to carry their liquid poisons in every direction along the coast and into the interior, destroying the natives and desolating the country." He states it as his deliberate opinion that more than half the past generation have died directly or indirectly from rum, and that where the traffic has prevailed scarcely an aged person can now be found. The work of civilizing and evangelizing the people has been retarded, and in some cases almost prevented, by this great curse.

DURING the last thirty-seven years the publication department of missionary labor in Northern Turkey has issued more than 500,000 bound volumes. More than 150,000 of these are partial or complete copies of the Scriptures. That religion and education might go hand in hand, an equal number of school books has been published, including reading and spelling books, text books on arithmetic, geography, grammar, elementary works on the various branches taught in academies, besides a work on theology for theological students. In addition to these, numerous religious books and tracts make the number of printed pages to amount to more than 250,000,000. A newspaper established in 18[illegible] continues to be published, though it is hoped that native energy will soon assume this enterprise, as it has already begun to undertake that of preparing and issuing educational works.

AT THE last stated meeting of the American Bible Society, among the communications read were those from Rev. S. R. ### After Conference.

A few hours, sometimes a day or two after adjournment, and all have scattered to their homes and appointments for another year. We confess to a feeling of loneliness, almost of sadness, to be so suddenly bereft of the rich and goodly fellowship of the Conference week. It is as the silent hall after the feast, when the lights burn low, and nothing is left but the fragments of the repast. The memorabilia of a Conference session would be worth gathering up—the gems of wit and humor, the sparkle of thought, the anecdote, and things grave and pathetic. With these kings and priests of God, jewels drop from their raiment at almost every step, and the many precious words, incidents and sermons of the occasion will long linger in the memory.

The Conference is the preacher's New Year—the point from which his dates run, the beginning and the ending. By the years, thus marked, he grows, labors and lives. Here he is wound up and put in order to run for another year, and here he kindles his zeal anew and puts on his armor for another campaign. With whatever of discouragement and depression the preachers come, they usually go away strengthened and determined to toil on in the harvest-field of Christ. The weak hands are strengthened and the feeble knees are confirmed by this godly communion. Some who come to Conference, resolved upon locating, leave with an appointment and with a large accession of faith and zeal. These annual gatherings, apart from their utility and necessity in the business economy of the church, are most potent to quicken, inspire and comfort.

There is nothing like our itinerant system to avoid stagnation, and to keep up a living and flowing stream of ministerial life and service. These siftings of character and work, and changes in the appointments, keep everything and everybody moving. The very possibility of a change every year is an element of freshness and vitality to both pastors and people. The annual stirring of the pool by our episcopal angels imparts a certain healing power to the waters. The trust committed to the preacher, and the relation which the people sustain to him, are for another year and no more. Dull routine must give way, the ruts of the past are obliterated, and there is a free and fresh entrance into the appointed field of labor. The itinerancy, as seen in connection with the Conference, is not a stagnant reservoir, but a flowing stream, carrying verdure and bloom to the most distant and barren wastes.

Methodism and Mexico.

As Southern Methodism is about to enter the Mexican field everything relating to it will be of interest to our readers. The Methodist Episcopal Church (North) has entered Mexico, appropriated money liberally to establish a mission there, and Bishop Haven has gone to survey the ground and organize the work. In connection with what we are about to append from the Northwestern Christian Advocate, published at Chicago, it will not be out of place to reproduce the following paragraph from the letter of Bishop Keener, published by us in the ADVOCATE of the ninth instant:

The Spanish missionary, Alejo Hernandez, has, during the past year, made further proof of the genuineness of the work so wondrously wrought in him by the Holy Spirit. He went out into Mexico and made his way back, through adverse circumstances, without any money, excepting what he was able to make by teaching. He resisted the pressing methods adopted by the superintendent of the Foreign Christian Union Missions at Monterey for transferring him from our church to the service of that association. He staid long enough in company with the brother to rally an audience for him that had dwindled into a shadow, and taught long enough to get means by which he might come up to the Conference. The testimony of the brethren on the line was highly favorable to the integrity, the ability and the Christianity of Bro. Hernandez. I am well advised in all that I have stated above, and letters to Alejo in Spanish, confirmatory of these facts, were read me.

God mercifully quickens our zeal in the direction of Mexico by sending to us, unsought or in answer to some one's prayer, this stranger, educated, who has groped his way unaided out of the confusing mazes of Romanism into the radiant pathway of a renewed mind. Another Mexican is hopefully expected by Bro. Hernandez. He is already exhorting and teaching Protestant Christianity. Several of the preachers in this Conference speak the Spanish of the Rio Grande regions, and I am in hopes that the young men who are stationed on this frontier will make the study of the Spanish language a specialty. The church at large expects that we will see after the spiritual condition of our neighbors. Soon after the war, I was visited by a messenger from those who are now the principal Protestant preachers in the City of Mexico. The work then employed a number of converted Catholics, lawyers, priests and laymen, who were reading the Scriptures and preaching at thirty or forty points every Sabbath day. This messenger went on to New York, and through the Christian Union secured the services of Mr. Riley, and has received substantial aid for its extension. That the Christian Union should now seek to monopolize this vast and open field is possibly very natural, but it is not in accordance with the indications of that spirit which had brought the work nearly up to its present point before the Christian Union had so much as heard of it. For one I believe that Methodism has a mission that cannot be substituted acceptably or be discharged by any other church, and I cannot forget that the messenger was knocking at our door soon after the war and sooner than at any other door, only we were then in too crippled a condition to answer the call. Now, by the blessing of God, we will respond, and I henceforth challenge all the lovers of Jesus among us who desire the extension of his kingdom to do something worthy of his name, and respond to every draft I may draw on them in favor of Mexico.

The attention of all the Protestant denominations is being turned in this direction. We trust there will be no unseemly strife and no unfriendly competition. Neither the American and Foreign Christian Union nor any other society can monopolize this open door. These organic unions nearly always lead to trouble, and the frictions and mutual reproaches revealed by the Northwestern show that charity is best subserved and the evangelization of the world is best promoted when each church keeps to itself and sails under its own colors. The union has perhaps served a temporary purpose, and we hope in its dissolution there may be no deposit of bitterness and animosity left behind. The Northwestern says:

We regret the Interior's ill-humor in reference to our new mission in Mexico. That paper indorses a correspondent who claims that our Missionary Society has "played sharp" in entering Mexico; that two years ago, when the Congregationalists abandoned the American and Foreign Christian Union, and when that society ought to have died, Methodists gave it increased attention, raising money by a Methodist agent, "with one eye on Mexico all the while," to which country all the contributions went; and now the Interior says that Bishop Simpson has arranged to "largely appropriate"—that is, steal—the whole.

Now as to the facts. Dr. Butler was appointed secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union four years ago, instead of two. He has had free access to our Conferences and people, has nobly aided the union by his eloquence as a speaker and his fidelity as a collector, and his collections have been largely from Methodist sources. "Two years ago," says this Presbyterian organ, "the Congregationalists advised us to drop the union and take Mexico while they took papal Europe," thus tenderly leaving Methodists out in the cold. The Congregationalists did drop the union, and now recently so have the Presbyterians. Their missionaries were already in the field when our General Missionary Committee met, and nothing was left us but to either run the union, with no aid but that which Low-Church Episcopalians gave us, or to render effective our appropriation for work in Mexico. Since the union is so manifestly destined to but a brief existence, its best friends and most liberal supporters were not only willing but anxious that we should enter the field with them. No steps were taken by the missionary authorities of our church contrary to the wishes of Dr. Riley, who is the union's chief missionary in Mexico, and they were in continual communication with the doctor. The case is just as it was with the Freedman's Aid Society; we faithfully adhered to the union till but little support came to it besides our own, and then we preferred to administer our own funds and do our own work. Even the appointment of Dr. Butler was made so as not to harm the union, for he is yet in the service of the union, raising supplies for their coming year's work before he shall leave them. The Low-Churchmen in Mexico naturally feel a warm side toward Methodists, for we are much alike, and were of common stock. We will work harmoniously together in that field. If the Presbyterians prove discordant, and so interfere with the success of Protestantism, we are confident the fault will not be ours. Certain it is that Presbyterians should be the last to complain of us, since they have left the union and have gone vigorously into Mexico without regard to the union or to us.

Mexico!

MR. EDITOR: To-night one week ago we were all at the Louisiana Conference missionary anniversary, where our thoughts and hearts were moved toward Mexico. How easy it was to raise money under that sudden impulse of the Holy Spirit! On Sunday night a good sister handed me $15 "for Mexico." On Monday the subject was again up before the Conference. The next day after a gentleman, Mr. R. M. Walmsley, unsolicited, promised an additional sum of $325, and also proffered the further assistance of letters of credit toward the establishment of that mission. The same day I went to inquire when a steamer could be had for Vera Cruz, and learned that one sailed direct in four days. Here, it seemed to me, were effectual doors opening at every turn. Now what was I to do? Why clearly to go forward, and expect the same unseen Presence that can both open the hearts of men and turn the rivers of water, to guide, protect and bear me safely and steadily on to the City of the Montezumas. So I did as the prophet before me—engaged and promptly paid my fare, not to escape, but in obedience to the call of the Master. And on Monday next, God willing, I shall be on the deck of the propeller Tabasco, steaming down the river on the highway to Mexico. I have already taken on some Spanish, in the shape of dictionary, grammar and Bible, and the crew, captain, vessel, owners, stokers, everything, down to a game chicken covered in among the slack of the halliards, everything on board the Tabasco looked intensely Spanish. Fortunately English is spreading over the world by the commercial enterprise of the Anglo-Saxon race, and yet more by its missionary zeal, so that I can reasonably expect to find all along the route English-speaking men from Vera Cruz to the capital.

This will suggest to those friends who subscribed so promptly at the anniversary how doubly precious their offerings, if but available at the commencement of the enterprise. I hope they will forward them at their earliest convenience to the care of Rev. R. J. Harp. The purchase of suitable property for church purposes in a large city will require $10,000 at the least, and from that to $50,000. As I send back word from point to point of this missionary journey I hope that the hearts of our people will be stirred to come up to the support of the kingdom of Christ. At the present about $1,600 have been contributed, but then we have only been a week at it.

I had agreed to dedicate the church at Greenville, Alabama, on the fourth Sabbath of this month, and am sorry that I shall be deprived that pleasure.

Let me, in conclusion, ask not merely contributions, but the substantial help of sincere prayer for the success of this undertaking, that Southern Methodism may take a new departure in spreading the highest style of Christianity—that the superscription and image of the Master may be recognized upon her by all who see her good works among the nations.

Centenary.

MR. EDITOR: Before Mexico comes Centenary with me, because it would be making poor headway to relax effort in a direction where very much has been accomplished, and take hold of something else, especially when just within reach of complete success. We have gone steadily up from twenty students to ninety-eight—not one hundred and twenty, as the last ADVOCATE reported. President Andrews, in his inspiriting address before the Conference, said that students were coming in every week, and that he doubted not that the spring session would open with one hundred and twenty. But the difficulty now is to room these students. There are ample accommodations in the two wings of the college for two hundred and forty students, but they are sadly out of repair. If we could now get $8,000 or $10,000 we should be over our trouble. I know of no institution of learning in the church where so little money could accomplish so much. The amount I originally called for was $25,000. Of that, say one-half has been raised; with it the college has been fairly set upon its logs. Now will not those who love Christ, and who wish to see the brain and youth of our church cultivated and retained for our own strength and growth, come up to the help of this noble work? It is fairly upon me; I feel it on my head, on my heart and both my shoulders. The professors, trustees, president and builder—all are calling, looking and sending word. What is to be done? The people of New Orleans have never failed me yet, and if their ears are still open to plea and cry the money will come. The Lord send it speedily! If it were left to me, how soon I could give to every one his share, of this mercy—that is, how easily could I divide this burden among the noble hearts in this city who love and respect Southern institutions. President Andrews will begin the work of putting the dormitories in order, with full faith in the unflinching support which our friends have heretofore shown, and which we both think cannot fail us as the representatives in this cause of the Mississippi and the Louisiana Conferences. I write this to prepare the way for him and for myself, inasmuch as Bishop Pierce could not spare a man from the general work for the agency of Centenary.

Yours truly, J. C. KEENER.

P. S.—We have five young men there preparing for the ministry, besides the sons of preachers who are receiving their tuition gratis.

Rev. J. S. Yeater.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of the nineteenth ultimo appears an article by J. S. Yeater, criticising a communication of mine in the number for November 7 with considerable severity, and attempting to convict me not only of vanity, but of misrepresentation and false statements. Who Mr. Yeater is I know not, but I am decidedly of the opinion that he ran somewhat before he was sent, and that he had better deliberate some time before he goes out of his way again to assail any one.

A man that sets out to correct misrepresentation in others ought to stick to the truth himself, or as nearly so as he conveniently can. Mr. Yeater starts with the assertion that I signed myself "Jefferson Hamilton, D. D." Now what evidence had he for this assertion. Not a particle. He could have none; he did not see the manuscript, and there was no signature to the article as it appeared in the paper. He only had the editor's statement that said article was by a certain party, and lo! he proceeds to tell the world, or as many as he can reach, how the author signed his communication! The assertion is utterly untrue, as you, Mr. Editor, well know.

Did he sign himself "Rev. J. S. Yeater?" If so, more modesty next time. Mr. Yeater informs us that he is "an humble preacher in the Southern Methodist Church." I am glad to be told this, for the fact needed other proof than that furnished by his attack. But true humility is cautious and prudent, and does not hastily charge grave faults upon others, and never without proof positive.

But vanity and weakness, even if contemptible, are not the worst part of the charges brought against me by this volunteer defender of the Methodist. That was a small affair. I am charged by the clearest implication and insinuation with a want of "truth" and "fair dealing." If I ever was thus charged before, I am not aware of it. He says of my article: "If I am capable of forming a correct conclusion in regard to the article in your paper, its writer has laid himself liable to the terrible indictment!" He gives two quotations from the Methodist, and aims to make the impression that they are both editorial, and embody the sentiments of that paper." Again: "How your correspondent can reconcile it with truth and fair dealing to blend these two articles together, and hold the editor responsible for both, when he took direct issue with this occasional correspondent in his charges against the ministry, is for your readers to decide."

Now I have done neither of the three things here charged. I have not aimed to make the impression that they were editorial, or to hold the editor responsible for the sentiments. So much for the "humble preacher" who attempts to reprove and correct unfairness in others, and talks about "truth" and "fair dealing." The only sentence in my communication that could be possibly construed to favor any one of the above charges is the following, while all the rest of the article shows conclusively that I only held the editor responsible for furnishing a vehicle for the publicity to such sentiments. In the sentence alluded to I say: "The Methodist (New York) has recently been discussing Methodist worship in a series of articles, in which there are not only sad and striking concessions in regard to the Methodist Episcopal Church, but a fearful indictment brought (by a correspondent) against the ministry of that church; such an one as we can hardly credit." Now this paragraph refers not particularly to the editorials of Dr. Crooks, but to the whole list of articles that had appeared in the paper, and could only be so interpreted by a thoughtful, candid man, who should read the whole article together. The insertion of the three words included in the parentheses above sets my meaning in an unquestionable light; but they were not needed. In proof of this, after quoting from the indictment the charge that "many of the preachers are not converted, and deny the true, old-fashioned gospel work of salvation," I say: "Is this so? Is this the judgment of a sober, reliable man, or the dictum of an extremist." Now could I ask such questions as the above if I attributed the statement to the editor and held him responsible for it? Impossible. And I go on to say: "We should judge that Dr. Crooks would hardly publish such a charge from an unreliable source." And yet I am charged with aiming to make the impression that they are both editorial. The statement is simply and unqualifiedly untrue. That my statements might have been clearer I do not deny; that they were sufficiently clear to keep the reader from such mistakes, and charges as Mr. Yeater has made I do affirm. I am sorry he should have so misunderstood me. I am sorry he felt called upon to write upon the subject, and I am very sorry he found it in his heart to make such uncalled-for charges against a brother who never knowingly wronged him in any way. The manner in which he sneeringly quoted, as he supposed, my signature, but which was only his invention, showed something more than a zeal for truth. It showed the presence in his heart of something that gentlemen despise and Christians lament. Pray for its removal, Bro. Yeater.

J. HAMILTON.

Education in the M. E. Church.

The Northern Church has a Board of Education constituted by the General Conference, and Dr. E. O. Haven, one of their first-rate men, was elected corresponding secretary. This arrangement is calculated to give unity and effectiveness to their plans and enterprises, and to raise the standard of education. The annual meeting of the board was held in New York, December 19. The Northwestern notices the meeting as follows:

As before noted herein, the Board of Education, at its annual meeting held in New York, December 19, made a statement of the condition of the treasury and of its objects. The funds of the board amount now to a round $100,000, and the board is in condition to appropriate all that it receives from collections, and such part of the income from its fund as remains after paying office expenses, to help needy young students who are called of God to the ministry. The board wisely resolved not to contract any debt under any circumstances, but simply to expend what is actually received. The corresponding secretary in his report made a somewhat elaborate argument in behalf of aiding such students, which is to be printed. The board voted to establish a system of scholarship, agreeing to give a certificate of scholarship to any person or Sunday school or society that may contribute $1,000, by the interest of which one student may be aided perpetually thereafter, according to the regulations of the board. They also called attention to the action of the General Conference which appointed the last Thursday in January as a day of prayer for colleges and seminaries, and requested all churches to observe the day. They approved of the suggestion that on the Sunday following it would be well to take the educational collection ordered by the General Conference. In the evening the first public anniversary of the board was held, presided over by Bishop Janes, who made some remarks commendatory of the purpose of the board, and was followed by Dr. C. A. Holmes, of Allegheny City, Pennsylvania; Dr. Cobleigh, of Atlanta, Georgia, and the corresponding secretary, Dr. E. O. Haven. It is understood that Dr. Haven will visit the Southern Conferences, and be prepared in his next report to give his views of the educational wants of our church in that part of the country.

THE Baltimore Episcopal Methodist puts on a new dress at the beginning of the year—beautiful and comely, a model paper and worthy of all praise. In speaking for herself the Episcopal Methodist sends her salutations to all of our denominational papers. The following words to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are duly acknowledged, and the friendly sentiments most heartily reciprocated:

But I hasten on to the Crescent City, and there spend a passing moment in fellowship with another of my elder sisters, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, a lady of honorable relationships, noble bearing and generous impulses. Although in a land of perlodic diseases, thou art always vivacious, healthy and vigorous. Thou art doing a good work, which no other sister can do for thee. May great success crown thy labors, and the increase of years only mature thy faculties and augment thy strength and efficiency. A happy New Year to thee.

THE twenty-third anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society will be held at the Presbyterian church, Lafayette square, on Sunday night, January 26. Rev. E. G. Taylor, D. D., is to deliver the address.

A Hopeful View.

There is much complaint that the children of the Sunday school do not attend the preaching. The Independent has this to say on the subject:

It is true that many children are in Sunday school each Lord's day who are not at the other exercises of the sanctuary. This is a cause of common complaint, and the fact is sometimes mentioned as telling against the value of Sunday school instruction. But more children are church members now than formerly, and a larger share of all children in the community attend the principal sanctuary services than before the days of Sunday schools. Hence it is not a cause of exclusive regret that so many children who have not yet been attracted to other sanctuary services are under Sunday school instruction and influence. The Sunday school is a hopeful field in which the pastor and his assistants may work to secure church attendants and church members. A writer in the Sunday School Magazine rightly says as to this:

"By remaining for a length of time in the Sabbath school, without professing religion, the children meet the church more than half way. Shall the church, then, leave them unnoticed until, during a protracted meeting one of the most susceptible out of twenty is seen asking for prayers, and then begin to inquire for the nineteen?"

JOHN MATHEWS, Pastor.

LORD BULWER LYTTON died on the eighteenth instant. He was born in 1805. He was a many-sided man, and attained success in literature and politics. He was a poet of no mean order, his career in Parliament was both solid and brilliant, but his widest and most enduring fame rests upon his pre-eminence as a novelist. His first works—Falkland and Pelham—were published more than forty years ago, since which time he has filled a conspicuous place in the literary firmament, and all this time he has been a star of the first magnitude. For genius, learning, broad culture, capacity and industry he was surpassed by few if any of his contemporaries. We may hope that the general influence and results of his life were for good, but in the judgment of many this will be doubtful. Richly endowed, and diligent and laborious in the employment of his gifts, we still feel that his splendid abilities might have been directed to higher achievements.

BISHOP KEENER has set out upon his missionary expedition to Mexico sooner than we had supposed it possible when we mentioned the matter last week. He left this port for Vera Cruz, on the steamer Tabasco, on Monday morning, the twentieth instant. As there is a railroad from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico the trip can be made with comparative ease and expedition. We believe the Bishop expects to be absent at least one month.

WE FIND in the last Western Methodist a very complimentary notice of our paper. We are tempted to the sin of envy every week by the handsome appearance and tasteful management of the Western. We hope some day to have as large a sheet and as good quality of paper as our confrere. The kind wishes of our brother editor are fully reciprocated. God speed the Western Methodist on its arduous but important and successful mission!

ATTENTION is directed to the advertisement of the Mansfield Female College. This old Conference institution has the best of facilities for the education of girls. The friends of the institution should bestir themselves to increase the patronage. It is located in a good community, a healthy country, and is presided over by Rev. C. B. Stuart, one of the most experienced and capable educators in the South.

PACIFIC METHODIST COLLEGE, says the Pacific Methodist, began its twenty-fourth semi-annual session propitiously. One hundred and fifty-seven students were present, thirty-five of whom had never been on the rolls before. This is the best opening the college has ever had.

IMPORTANT REPORTS of Homer and Centenary Colleges will be found on the second page; also report of the visiting committee of the Southern University.

ORGAN FOR SALE.—The organ now in use in the Presbyterian church at Natchez, Mississippi, is for sale. Address Messrs. Abbott & Henderson, Natchez, Mississippi.

THE MUTUAL NATIONAL BANK.—The second semi-annual statement of the above-named bank, which appears in our columns, presents a gratifying exhibit, and gives evidence of a vigorous thrift, which must be highly gratifying to the stockholders and friends of this institution. It is managed by some of the best and most experienced business men of our city, whose standing as competent financiers is a sufficient guarantee for its safe and judicious management in the interest of the business classes. We call special attention to the mutual feature adopted by this bank.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER.—Mr. E. B. Hayes, the energetic and efficient agent for the above-named machine, has met with unusual success in its introduction in this city. So far as we have heard, it has given universal satisfaction. Other machines have been thrown aside to adopt the "Woman's Friend." The certificates appended to his advertisement are from well-known residents of New Orleans, who may be relied upon as stating nothing but what they believe to be strictly true. See advertisement in another column.

WE DIRECT the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Mr. Louis S. Metz, proprietor of Metz's Armenian Hair Vigor. Mr. Metz claims for his preparation that it contains no lead or other corrosive mineral substance, and gives new vigor and vitality to the hair. He is also proprietor of the Zozozontz, a cure for toothache, headache, etc. Messrs. Wheelock, Fluhy & Co. are the agents in this city.

INDIAN TURNIP COMPOUND PECTORAL BALM, for the cure of coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchitis, asthma, and the various affections of the lungs and throat, and for the relief of consumptive patients, is prepared and for sale by H. Laplace, Nos. 23 and 25 Elysian Fields street, and the principal wholesale and retail druggists of New Orleans. Price, $1 per bottle.

CARRE'S CABINS are known everywhere as the most complete and cheapest plantation cabin manufactured. The price of a double cabin, of two rooms, each fourteen by fifteen, built with boards placed upright and the joints stripped, delivered at land, is $135. Messrs. W. W. Carre & Co. will build cabins to order at proportionate prices.

EAGLE COTTON GINS.—The great popularity of the Eagle Cotton Gin is established from the well-known fact that it is reliable, strong and well built. The sole agent for the Southern States is Mr. W. L. Cushing, long located at the corner of St. Charles and Union streets, and for many years among the foremost and most successful dealers in labor-saving implements.

PLANTERS AND COMMISSION MERchants desiring to purchase plows, sweeps, cultivators or other plantation implements are requested to call on Mr. B. J. West, Nos. 115 and 117 Magazine street, where they will find a complete stock at low prices.

NEW ORLEANS WATER CURE.—Dr. Kalow, of Berlin, respectfully informs the citizens of New Orleans and the surrounding country that he has opened a water cure establishment at No. 9 Prieur street.

COAL! COAL! COAL!—Messrs. B. D. Wood & Bros., to Common street, offer to deliver, at lowest market rates, Pittsburg, anthracite and all kinds of coal. Orders left at the office will receive prompt attention.

AT the two stores of the Septolphe Oil Company, No. 42 Camp and 45 Dauphine streets, will be found a large assortment of lamps, trimmings, etc.; also Japanned wares in great variety.

WE CALL the attention of our readers to the card of the old and reliable grocery and commission house of Messrs. G. M. Bayly & Pond, Nos. 31 to 42 Canal and 30 to 34 Common street.

COTTON SEED.—Mr. R. H. Smith, No. 11 Peters street, offers for sale many varieties of choice cotton seed, in quantities to suit purchasers.

WE DIRECT ATTENTION to the card of the long-established furniture house of Messrs. Sampson Bros., Nos. 33 and 35 Royal street.

MESSRS. NAVRA & OFFNER, 174 Canal street, importers of china and glassware and household comforts.

HAVANA CIGARS, at Messrs. Ed. L. Zell & Co.'s, corner of Canal and Carondelet streets.

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of persons in search of a commercial education to Dolbear College, 20 and 23 Camp street. de12 3m

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A WARNING.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a grave-yard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many grave-yards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons addicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility or similar functional derangements to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible.—Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medicinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to all the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending on exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously recuperate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

A WARNING.—There is no case of consumption that did not commence with a cough. Therefore the slightest cold or cough should receive immediate attention. Take at once the great remedy of the age, Dr. TUTT'S EXPECTORANT, and thereby save yourself years of suffering, perhaps life itself.

AUGUSTA, GA., Dec. 31, 1870.

DR. WILLIAM H. TUTT—Dear Sir: My little son, aged about three years, was attacked with pneumonia last winter, which left him with a violent cough, that lasted till within about a month since, for the cure of which I am indebted to you and your valuable Expectorant. I had tried most every kind of medicine recommended for coughs, but none did my good until I tried your Expectorant, one bottle of which removed the cough entirely. With many thanks for your valuable preparation,

I am yours truly, JOHN M. WEIGLE.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

REMOVE from the blood those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause for their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion Bitters fresh life and vigor to them, and makes of them the best blood purifiers one can have. This preparation is for sale at Frederikson & Harte's and E. J. Hart & Co.'s drug stores. jn11 2m

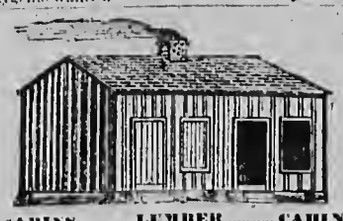
IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.



The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can safely send for Eagle Cotton Gin Circular. Say they are not working an entire crop of cotton, and will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand motion gins.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Paper makers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleansing is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly well with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

The Child's Corner.

INTEMPERANCE.

BY MRS. SIGOURNEY.

I saw a little girl
With half-impassioned form,
And wondered why she wandered thus,
Amid the winter storm.

They said her mother drank
What took her senses away,
And so she let her children go
Hungry and cold all day.

I saw them lead a man
To prison for his crime,
Where solitude and punishment
And toil divide the time.

And as they led him through the gate
Unwillingly along,
They told me 'twas intemperance
That made him do the wrong.

I saw a woman weep
As if her heart would break;
They said her husband drank too much
Of what he should not take.

I saw an unfrequented mound
Where weeds and brambles wave;
They said no tear but fallen there—
It was a drunkard's grave.

They said these were not all
The risks th' intemperate run,
For there was danger less the soul
Be evermore undone.

Water is very pure and sweet,
And beautiful to see;
And, since it cannot do us harm,
It is the drink for me.

The Little Peddler.

One rainy afternoon, in the earliest part of autumn, I heard a low knock at my back door, and, upon opening it, found a peddler. Now peddlers are a great vexation to me; they leave the gates open; they never have anything I want; and I don't like the faces that belong to them, especially those of the strong men who go about with little packages of coarse goods; and I always close the door upon them, saying to myself: "Lazy."

This was a little boy, and he was pale and wet, and looked so cold I forgot he was a peddler, and asked him to come in to the fire. I thought he appeared as though he expected I was going to buy something, for he commenced opening his tin box; but I had no such intention. He looked up in my face very earnestly and sadly when I told him to warm himself by the fire, and did not wish to purchase anything. As he rose slowly from his seat there was something in his manner which reproached me, and I detained him to inquire why he was out in the rain. He replied:

"I am out every day, and can't stay in for a little rain; besides, most peddlers stay at home then, and I can sell more on rainy days."

"How much do you earn a day?"

"Sometimes two shillings, sometimes one; and then, ma'am, I am very tired."

Here he gave a quick, dry cough, which startled me.

"How long have you had that cough?"

"I don't know, ma'am."

"Does it hurt you?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Where does your mother live?"

"In heaven, ma'am," said he, unmoved.

"Have you a father?"

"Yes, ma'am; he is with mother," he replied in the same tone.

"Have you any brothers or sisters?"

"I have a little sister; but she went to mother about a month ago."

"What ailed her?"

"She wanted to see mother, and so do I; and I guess that is why I cough so."

"Where do you live?"

"With Mrs. Brown, in N—— street."

"Does she give you any medicine for your cough?"

"Not doctor's medicine—she is too poor; but she makes something for me to take."

"Will you take something if I give it to you?"

"No, ma'am, I thank you; mother took medicine, and it didn't help her, though she wanted to stay. And, you see, I want to go. It would not stop my cough. Good-day, ma'am."

"Wait a minute," I said. "I want to see what you carry."

He opened his box, and for once I found what I wanted. Indeed, I don't think it would have signified what he had—I should have wanted it; for the little peddler had changed in my eyes—he had a father and mother in heaven, and so had I. How strange that peddlers had never seemed like human, soul-filled beings before! How thankful he was! and how his great sunken blue eyes looked into mine when I paid him!

"You don't ask me to take a cent less;" said he, after hesitating a minute; "I think you must be very rich."

"Oh! no!" I replied; "I am far from that, and these things are worth more to me than I gave you for them. Will you come again?"

"Yes, ma'am, if I don't go to mother soon."

"Are you hungry?"

"No, ma'am; I never feel hungry now. I sometimes think mother feeds me when I sleep, though I don't remember it when I am awake. I only know I don't wish to eat now since my sister is dead."

"Did you feel very sad then?"

"I felt very big in my throat, and thought I was choked; but I didn't cry a bit, though I felt very lonely at night for awhile. But I'm glad she's up there now."

"Who told you you were going to die?"

"Nobody, but I know I am. Perhaps I'll go before Christmas."

I could not endure that, and tried to make him stay; but he would run and tell Mrs. Brown what good luck he had met with. He bade me good-day again cheerfully, and went out into the cold rain; while I could only say: "God be with you, my child!"

He never came again, though I looked for him every day. At length, about New Year's day, I went to the place he called home. Mrs. Brown was there; but the little pilgrim—his weary feet were at rest; and nevermore would his gentle knock be heard at the door of those who, like myself, forget the necessity and stern want that often send about these wanderers from house to house, and that their employment might be far more unseemly to them than annoying to us.—Household Treasure.

The Ship of the Desert.

The camel is called by the Arabs "the Ship of the Desert," and is said by them to be a special gift from God. It is certainly one of the most useful creatures given for the use of man. Without it the Arabs could not live, trade or travel. They drink its milk, eat its flesh, and make garments and tents of its hair.

The foot of the camel is broad and spreading, divided into two parts, with a horny tip at the end of each. On the bottom of the foot is a soft cushion, which enables it to tread over the sandy desert or the hard and rocky plain with equal ease and comfort. A troop of camels move without making the least noise, and it would not be known they were coming did not the passengers look up.

This animal has four stomachs; in one of these it stores up a quantity of water before it sets off on a journey. It can draw this water as it pleases from the little cistern which holds it, and thus refresh its thirst and moisten its food. It also bears hunger without appearing to suffer, and a few dates or a handful of beans will at any time satisfy its wants. It is very fond of prickly shrubs, which it plucks with its strong teeth. When we see the sharp thorns of the bushes we may esteem them of little or no use; but if we saw the camel eating them with a relish, where nothing else can be found in the wilderness, we should be taught that God has made nothing in vain.

As the camel kneels to be loaded, its skin would be endangered by kneeling on hard stones had not its all-wise Creator provided each of the fore legs with two pads or cushions, and one on each hind leg. On these it rests when it is loaded; and then rising up, with nearly a thousand pounds in weight on its back, it is ready for its journey.

There are many references to the camel in the Bible. Abraham's servant took ten of his master's camels when sent on a journey; and when he came to a well of water they knelt down to drink. Job's riches consisted, among other animals, of three thousand of this useful animal. The haunches of this creature are referred to by Isaiah, and our Savior speaks of the camel in Matthew.

The customs of the East are much the same now as in former times. Ornaments were hung on the necks of camels in the days of Gideon; so are little bells and trinkets at the present time. Cloth is still made out of camels' hair, as in the days of John the Baptist, and caravans of merchants, with their camels bearing spices, are seen crossing the desert, as when Joseph was sold by his brethren.

Mr. Macfarlane, after describing the animal, says: "I never saw a Turk ill use this useful, gentle creature, but I have often seen him give it a portion of his own dinner when it had nothing else but chopped straw to eat. The Arabs will kiss their camels in gratitude and affection after a journey across the desert."—Children's Hour.

Effie's Mistake.

Effie stood by the window idly playing with the curtain tassel, and looking dreamily out into the street. She soon betrayed the subject of her thoughts by saying:

"Mamma, I think those Lovells, who have lately moved into the great house yonder, must be very rich. I have seen the most elegant furniture carried in there, and they seem to have plenty of servants."

"Yes, Effie, I have been told they are very wealthy."

"I thought so, mamma, for Clara never has to walk out; I always see her riding in their beautiful carriage, or else upon the back of her Shetland pony. I have to walk everywhere I go, and never can ride except in the horse cars. It seems too bad, mamma, that she should have so much and I so little."

"God's gifts are much more evenly distributed than you suppose, my dear; and you have made a great mistake in regard to Clara. I dare say the poor child would be willing to part with her horses, carriages, servants, and indeed all the luxuries which she enjoys, if she could walk and run about as you can."

"Why, mamma, what do you mean? Cannot Clara walk if she chooses?"

"No, my dear, she is a cripple, and has never walked a step since she was two years old. The reason that she rides out so much is because that is the only way she can take the air. In the house she has to be wheeled about in a chair, or carried in the arms of a servant. I fear you have been envying your rich little neighbor. Do you think, now, you would like to change places with her?"

"Oh, no, indeed, mamma; I had rather be a great deal poorer than we are, and have the use of my limbs. Oh, dear, how dreadful not to be able to walk a step! I am sure, mamma, I shall always pity Clara now when I see her riding out, instead of envying her."

"I hope, my dear, you will never allow yourself to indulge in the feeling of envy. God has given us our lot in life, and he denies us some good things. He knows what is best for us, and makes it up to us in other ways. I want my little girl to cultivate such a spirit that she can say, as St. Paul did: 'I have learned in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content.'"—American Messenger.

GOD'S GREAT LOVE.—Some two years ago two gentlemen were riding together, and, as they were about to separate, one addressed the other, thus: "Do you ever read your Bible?" "Yes; but I get no benefit from it, because, to tell the truth, I feel I do not love God." "Neither did I," replied the other, "but God loved me." This answer produced such an effect upon his friend that, to use his own words, it was as if one had lifted him off the saddle into the skies. It opened up to his soul at once the great truth that it is not how much I love God, but how much God loves me.

A FRIEND cannot be easily known in prosperity; nor can an enemy be easily hid in adversity.

The Farm and Garden.

HONEY PLANTS AND HIVES.—At the Cleveland bee meeting the Alsike was highly commended, especially for rather damp soils. Much was said in favor of the linden or basswood as of the highest value. Mr. Hosmer astonished the society by his statements in regard to the yield of honey from this forest tree; one swarm had gained fifty-two pounds in one day. Mr. Root has four thousand small trees of the linden ready to set out this spring for this purpose, and others were proposing to set out large numbers. One man stated that he intended to put out one hundred acres for this purpose. Honey from the linden is the most crisp and delicious of all honey, and this tree should have a place in all of our shelter belts or artificial planting of forest trees. In regard to hives it was stated that no bee-keeper now thought of doing without movable frames, and, as there are few swarms in box hives to be transferred, little time was spent on that subject.

ANTS ABOUT BEE-HIVES.—A correspondent inquires "If ants do any damage to bees, and what is an effectual remedy against them?" We do not think ants will do any great damage to bees if stocks are in good condition. A colony almost totally depopulated might be overrun with them and destroyed, or a community of ants might locate under or even in the top of a hive, not so much for the purpose of destroying the bees as for securing comfortable quarters. They would, no doubt, become very troublesome to the bees, and destroy numbers. In such instances the communities should be broken up and destroyed, or stocks may be removed to other stands by moving a little each day. Large numbers of ants are often caught in a sponge which has been well saturated in thin sirup; then by dipping the sponge in boiling water they are destroyed.—Canada Farmer.

GREASING OF HORSES' FEET.—I had an excellent opportunity of observing the effect of greasing the feet while working in a shop where horses were shod for a large undertaker's establishment. The treatment of the horses by the horse-shoer was the same as that of hundreds of other horses shod at the same shop; but the feet of the funeral horses were greased every time they went out, to make them nice and black; and as the fruit of this practice the hoofs almost ceased growing. They were exceedingly dry and brittle. The sole was not hard and glassy, as feet are after paring, but of a dry nature, and could in many cases be easily crumbled down by the fingers. Correspondent Canada Farmer.

TWO EXCELLENT COMPOSTS.—The editor of the Reconstructed Farmer recommends the following composts. Those who have all the materials at hand will do well to try them.

Good Compost.—By mixing twenty bushels of cotton seed and twenty of ashes, or fifty of marl, with seven hundred bushels of vegetable mold, you will have a fine compost.

A Number One Compost.—Take five or seven hundred bushels of any rich earth and mix it with two hundred bushels of cotton seed, twenty of ashes, forty of stable manure and fifty of marl, and you will have that which is superior to any commercial fertilizer on any crop.

GROWING PEARS.—J. W. Adams, in the Gardeners' Monthly, says that soils which are of a strong, gravelly texture, with some clay admixed, appear to be the best adapted to produce excellent pears. Any soil not inclining to be dry, with good culture will produce fine fruit, either on the pear or quince roots. In either case it must be deep and rich. As to the question between dwarfs, he says truth is found between extremes. He would not have all his trees of either kind exclusively.

ROSE CUTTINGS.—One of the best methods of securing the success of these is to stick the cutting about an inch deep into clean river sand, with properly-prepared soil about an inch below to receive the roots as soon as they strike. The clean sand prevents the roots from rotting. A correspondent of the Horticulturist succeeded with this when every other mode failed, and says she does not lose one in twenty.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

MR. JOHN WOODHOUSE, of Lehi City, Utah, writes that some of his heaviest crops are from land which, four years ago, was totally barren, in consequence of the alkali it contained. He states that the proper treatment of such soils is to plow in an abundance of coarse, half-rotted manure, and then flow water completely over the land instead of around it. Generally this will bring the land to in from two to five years, according to the proportion of alkali in the soil.

AN ENGLISH PAPER describes a case of yellow primrose which, when planted in a rich soil, had the flowers changed to a brilliant purple. It also says that charcoal adds great brilliancy to the colors of dahlias, roses and petunias; carbonate of soda reddens pink hyacinths, and phosphate of soda changes the colors of many plants.

SCRATCHES IN HORSES.—Take four ounces of ointment of rosin, half an ounce of finely-ground verdigris, two ounces of turpentine, half an ounce of oil of organum, half an ounce of tincture of iodine, one and a half pounds of mutton tallow. Mix all well together. Once a day will be sufficient to apply the ointment.

CORN FODDER.—It is a great mistake to sow corn broadcast. Sow in drills three and a half feet apart, say four bushels of seed per acre, or a kernel about every inch in the row. The land must be as rich and mellow as possible. Use the cultivator frequently.

THE NEW MUSICAL CURRICULUM.

A New and Complete Course of Instruction

FOR THE PIANO.

BY GEORGE F. ROOT.

The attention of Teachers and Students of Music is called to the new and greatly improved work of this experienced and conscientious teacher.

The New Musical Curriculum,

as expanded, is the result of years of observation and labor devoted to its compilation, and is

There are in the State of Texas thousands of acres of land belonging to unknown heirs of parties who went to that State at an early date, bought or located lands, and have since died, owning them. Being in possession of facts in reference to original titles of lands, that have made many wealthy who were unaware they owned a dollar in that State, we invite all parties who had relatives who emigrated there, and have since died, to open a correspondence in reference thereto. ## New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather was extremely cold on Saturday, ice forming in exposed situations one-quarter of an inch thick, since which it has been clear and mild.

The river is 10 feet 3 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the seventeenth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 20,549 |
| Lake | | 297 |
| Tennessee | | 1,515 |
| Arkansas | | 3,125 |
| Mobile | | 887 |
| Texas | | 207 |
| Total | | 26,490 |

On Saturday the market opened with a pretty fair demand, but, the movement being checked by light supplies, a moderate business was done during the morning, mostly at previous rates, but partly at a shade less, after which prices exhibited less unsteadiness until toward the close, when they were manifestly weaker, without, however, showing any quotable decline. These remarks apply to the grades from strict low middling down, middling and the better qualities maintaining their position with continued firmness. The sales embraced 6,650 bales. On Monday the movement was much more active, and the discouraging telegrams from Liverpool and New York being counteracted by an advance in foreign exchange, prices, after some unsteadiness in the morning, ruled for the rest of the day without any falling off from previous rates, closing, in fact, strong at quotations, with but little to be had at inside rates. The controlling element in sustaining the market was evidently the competition among buyers, and the full extent of the movement was consequently of more than usual importance, the sales summing up, all told, reported and unreported, 10,350 bales. On Tuesday, under the stimulus of advancing gold and foreign exchange, buyers came forward with unabated spirit, and took 9,600 bales at prices showing some irregularity, but a general tendency in favor of factors. A few sales were made at ¼c. more than would have been accepted on Tuesday—in fact, at ¼c. more than would have been taken in the morning—but the general business hardly showed an improvement of more than ⅛c., to which we have conformed our quotations. More than half of the day's business was for Havre. Good ordinary sold at 17⅞, 17⅞@18c., strict do. at 18⅛, 18⅛@18⅜c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 18⅛@18⅜c., low middling at 18⅛@18⅝c., and for strong style at 18⅝c., strict do. at 19c., middling at 19⅛@19⅝c.; strict middling at 19⅞@20c., strict middling to good middling at 20⅛c., and good middling at 20⅜c. The course of foreign exchange has had a material influence, the advance on Tuesday being ⅜ ₱ cent., and since Friday 1⅜ ₱ cent.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 608,063 bales, against 559,657 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 291,457 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 43,426 to Great Britain, of 26,851 to France, and of 119,272 to other foreign ports.

CORN.—On Tuesday the demand was moderate, and prices were a shade easier; 1,000 sacks white and yellow, in lots, sold at 74@75c. ₱ bushel, and 1,000 do. on private terms.

OATS.—The sales on Saturday and Monday embraced 4,000 sacks, in lots, at 49@50c., the latter for choice Galena.

BRAN.—On Tuesday the sales were confined to 50 bags at $1.35, and 100 at $1.30 ₱ 100 lbs.

PORK.—The market has been quiet, though on Tuesday it was decidedly firmer, with a more general demand. New mess is quoted at $13.75 ₱ bbl.; jobbing at $14 and retailing at $14.25 ₱ bbl. Repacked old mess is retailing at $13.50 ₱ bbl. On Monday 100 bbls. new mess sold, in two equal lots, at $13.75 ₱ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday 120 casks sold at 9¼@9¾c. for clear rib sides, 9¾@10¼c. for clear sides, and 5¼c. for shoulders.

HAMS.—On Saturday 10 tierces uncanvased sold at 15c., and 50 canvased sugar-cured at 15½@16½c. ₱ lb. On Monday 20 tierces sugar-cured sold at 15½c. ₱ lb. On Tuesday 25 tierces sold on private terms.

LARD.—On Tuesday 57 tierces poor packers' sold at 7¾c., and 25 tierces refined at 8¼c. ₱ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON—Is scarce, and Western commands 10½@11c., Northern 11@11½c. ₱ lb.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 112⅝@112¾ (against 113¼ at New York,) and closed at 112½@113¼ (against 113¼ at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 109@110, and Mexican dollars at ½ ₱ cent. premium in gold for new, and 2 ₱ cent. for old.

THE STEP AT THE GATE.

The shades of eve are falling
Athwart the garden wall,
The summer winds come whispering by,
And showers of rose-leaves fall,
As I sit by my cottage window,
And dream and listen and wait
For the sound of a well-known whistle
And a welcome step at the gate.

The tea-kettle out in the kitchen
Is humming its busiest song:
"I'm boiling, I say! It's time to get tea,
So why don't you come along?"
The table is set in the parlor,
But the singing kettle must wait,
For the tea will spoil if I make it,
Till I hear the step at the gate.

Baby sleeps in her cradle,
Dreaming with all her might,
And over both her blossom blue eyes
Are drawn their curtains white.
But her nap is nearly over,
She seldom sleeps so late;
She'll wake in a glow of gladness
When she hears the step at the gate.

This is our little kingdom,
This cottage with vines o'ergrown;
Papa's the king and mamma's the queen,
And baby's the heir to the throne.
Why lingers the king, I wonder?
'Tis growing so very late!
Ah, there he comes! Baby, wake up,
For I hear the step at the gate.

The Great Strasburg Clock Beaten by an Ingenious German.

A German of Cincinnati has invented a clock which, though much smaller than the celebrated one at Strasburg, is, from its description, much more complicated. We see, in a glass case, a three-story, steeple-shaped clock, four feet wide at the first story, and nine feet high. The movement is placed in the first story, upon four delicate columns, within which swings the pendulum. The second story consists of two tower-like pieces, on the doors of which there are two pictures that represent boyhood and early manhood.

A tower crowns, as third story, the ingenious structure. A cock, as a symbol of watchfulness, stands on the top, directly over the portal. When the clock marks the first quarter the door of the left piece of the second story opens, and a child issues from the background, comes forward to a little bell, gives it one blow, and then disappears. At the second quarter a youth appears, strikes the bell twice, and disappears; at the third comes a man in his prime; at the fourth we have a tottering old man, leaning on a staff, who strikes the bell four times. Each time the door closes of itself. When the hours are full the door of the right piece of the second story opens, and Death, as a skeleton, scythe in hand, appears, and marks the hour by striking a bell. But it is at the twelfth hour that we have the grand spectacle in the representation of the day of judgment. Then, when Death has struck three blows on the little bell, the cock on the top of the tower suddenly flaps his wings, and crows in a shrill tone, and after Death has marked the twelfth hour with his hammer, he crows again twice. Immediately three angels, who stand as guardians in a central position, raise their trumpets with their right hands (in their left they hold swords) and blow a blast toward each of the four quarters of the earth. At the last blast the door of the tower opens, and the resurrected children of earth appear, while the destroying angel sinks out of sight. Then suddenly Christ descends, surrounded by angels. On his left there is an angel who holds the scale of justice; on his right another carries the Book of Life, which opens to show the alpha and omega—the beginning and the end. Christ waves his hand, and instantly the good among the resurrected are separated from the wicked, the former going to the right and the latter to the left. The Archangel Michael saintes the good, while on the other side stands the devil, radiant with fiendish delight—he can hardly wait for the final sentence of those who fall to him, but in obedience to the command of the central figure he withdraws. The figure of Christ raises its hand again, with threatening mien, and the accursed sink down to the realms of his satanic majesty. Then Christ blesses the chosen few, who draw near him. Finally we hear a cheerful chime of bells, during which Christ rises, surrounded by his angels, until he disappears, and the portal closes.

A complete drama is here represented without the aid of a human hand. The movements are calm, steady and noiseless, with the exception of the threatening gestures of the figure of Christ and the movements of Lucifer, who darts across the scene with lightning rapidity. Of course the peculiar action of these two figures is intentional on the part of the artist, and adds greatly to the effect.

"THE gospel of the kingdom" is the burden of every true ministry, the life of every sincere church, the inspiration of every devout soul, and the hope of deliverance and salvation to every lost sinner.

TO DOUBT the providence of God is presently to wax impatient with his commands.—Edward Garrett.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Some interesting particulars are furnished by correspondents of the daily papers respecting the state of affairs in the Sandwich Islands, the death of the late King and the mooted project of annexing the islands to the United States. The reason that the King named no successor, as generally stated, is that he desired to be the last of his line and the last of Hawaiian kings. "This seems likely," says one writer, "as the choice of the monarchists of the country lies between an habitual drunkard, though a naturally able man, named Lunalilo; an imbecile old woman, who would be the merest tool of her advisers, named Keliikolani; and an inferior chief, named David Kalakana.—There is no other noble timber out of which royalty may be reconstructed here. The native aristocracy is defunct; and if American residents make the slightest manifestation in behalf of their political principles, we will have a republic or annexation right away." The natives indulged in the riotous mysteries traditionally enacted at the death of their kings—dancing, howling and reveling all night long.

The question of annexing the islands to this country has naturally arisen since the death of the King, and if the Hawaiian people express their understood desire for it, the matter may speedily come up before the consideration of our government. During the time that Mr. Seward controlled our foreign policy the standing instructions to our ministers at Honolulu were to watch the doings of the British and French ministers, and to inform them that any attempt on the part of either of their governments to interfere with the independence of the Hawaiian kingdom would be regarded by the United States as a cause for war. Of late years Great Britain has regarded it as definitely settled that we are to control the commerce of the Pacific in the future. Her citizens are largely interested in our Pacific railroads, and her statesmen are believed to look with favor upon the growth of trade between Liverpool and Japan and China by way of San Francisco and New York. "It is quite safe to assume," adds another writer, "that England will not object to their annexation to America;" in fact, the London Times already opens the way for this concession by saying: "We must confess the Americans will eventually people these islands." As to the views of the natives on the question of annexation to the United States, it is asserted that two-thirds of them have favored for the past ten years any arrangement that would bring them in closer relations with us.—New York Observer.

AN IMPERIAL WEDDING.

A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from Pekin, gives an account of the marriage of the Emperor of China. An imperial wedding is an event that has not occurred there for more than two hundred years.

"In the eyes of the people the interest of the occasion has been greatly enhanced by its connection with the majority of their sovereign. They have accordingly been expecting it with impatience for some years, though the happy bridegroom is now but just turned of seventeen. And for as many years have the looms of Nankin, Canton and Hong Chou been employed in the preparation of silken stuffs for the trousseau of the Empress. On these vast sums have been expended, amounting in the aggregate to not less than half a million of dollars. Yet this is but a small item in the whole bill of expense, which, including the repair of palaces and largesses to the Imperial Guard and Tartar banners, will foot up, it is said, some fifteen or twenty millions. The lady in whose honor all this treasure is lavished is a person of some consideration, being the daughter of one of the first scholars of the empire. Chinese ladies have in general but little education, but the daughter of such a man would not be allowed to grow up in ignorance; and it is to her attainments in letters, no less than her beauty, that the lady Alata owes her elevation. As for the Emperor's presents to the bride and her parents, they were sent, according to custom, some time in advance, to the house of the bride, occupying five days in the delivery, and each day being borne by between five hundred and a thousand men. Furniture, clothing, silks and satins, jewels and solid treasure, made up the bulk of the presents.

"Among the gifts to the Empress I may mention a thousand rolls of satin, and sixty-eight horses. To her parents were given a hundred and thirty ounces of gold, a golden tea-canister, six thousand six hundred ounces of silver, five hundred pieces of satin, fur robes, six horses, etc. Nor was the grandfather forgotten, the presents for him being similar in kind, but less in quantity."

SELF-MADE MEN are very apt to worship their maker.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. MAURY, of the Virginia Military Institute. "A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By CHARLES S. VENABLE, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By GEORGE F. HOLMES, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.

Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.

G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.

T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.

Rev. R. D. NORSWORTHY, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

|---|---|
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College | $60 00 |
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department | 40 00 |
| Contingent expenses | 5 00 |

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1842.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

SONG.

The wind blows fresh from the cold north-west,
The ship swings clear and free,
And we tread the deck with a sailor's zest,
And we polat for the open sea.
We trim the sheets and fill the sails,
And let the boats swing by;
There is not one heart "in our midst" that fails,
Each pulse beats loud and high.

The white sails shiver, the thin sheets lash,
And up in the taut-strung shrond
We hear, keeping time with the soft waves' plash,
The wind pipe sweet and loud.
For the breeze of the ship and the sounding sea
Makes his harp and trumpet thrill,
And plays the strings with a Triton's glee,
And murmurs or peals at will.

Crowd hard the helm! till the flashing spray
Flies up o'er the vessel's prow,
Till the deck is wet, and the sailors say
She quivers from stern to bow.
Then away, then away o'er the white-capped wave,
And sing as we sail along,
For our spirits are light and our hearts are brave,
And our good ship tight and strong.

Egyptian Record of the Exodus.

The Cologne Gazette publishes the subjoined: Dr. Eisenlohr, and professor of the University of Heidelberg and a learned Egyptian scholar, went to England, a few months since, to examine a papyrus found in a tomb by Mr. Harris, editor of the Hieroglyphical Standard. This is the finest, largest, best written and best preserved of all that has hitherto been discovered in the country of the Pharaohs, forming a roll of one hundred and thirty-four feet in length, and sixteen and a half inches wide. It dates from the end of the reign of Rameses the Third (the Rampsinit of Herodotus,) and is thus more than three thousand years old. It contains most valuable information relative to the political and religious civilization of Egypt at that distant period, and is written in hieratic characters—that is to say, a mixture of hieroglyphics and signs for letters and syllables. The text is an allocution from Rameses the Third, "to his people and all the men on earth," on the great deeds of his reign and of those of his father, Setinecht, and grandfather, Maneptah the Second, Seti, acts which had brought to a term a period of religious evolution, highly important for the study of biblical writings. Rameses himself recounts how he re-established the ancient Egyptian worship, rebuilt the temples, and endowed them with a munificence on the effects of which he dwells largely. At the end of his address the King enumerates his warlike exploits and all the services he had rendered to his people. The religious movement alluded to relates to the period of Moses, to the Monotheistic worship founded or restored by him, and comprises all the events which terminated in the ruin of Monotheism in Egypt, and the exodus of the Jews. This papyrus is consequently of the highest interest for the study of the Mosaic religion and legislation, and is eminently useful to explain, co-ordinate and confirm a great variety of details. Dr. Eisenlohr recently gave a lecture on this subject at Heidelberg, at a meeting of the Historico-Philosophical Society, and read a complete translation, made by himself, of the historical address of Rameses to his people. A report of the sitting has just been published by Himrichs, of Leipsic.

GREAT STORM AT NAPLES.

A correspondent of the London Standard writes as follows of the extraordinary storm of wind and rain that swept over all Italy recently. At Naples the spectators lined the beach and the heights to witness the heavy labor of the angry waters, and amid the resounding turmoil of the waves to satisfy their curiosity as to the agonies of anything in the shape of a boat. The fierceness and grandeur of the tempest were such as not even the oldest mariner and coral-seeker remember to have seen upon their smiling gulf. Only one or two deaths occurred, but the material injured or destroyed will be a heavy loss to government and private individuals. The waves destroyed the dykes, and leaped over the quays into the streets, inundating the magazines of the arsenal. The losses by this inundation are estimated to be seven million francs. Along the bend of the Chiatamonte and the Riviera di Chiaja the waters overflowed the parapet of the street. The new street built along the beach from Fort Ovo to Santo Lucia was quite destroyed, and the large blocks of stone of the parapet reared to defend it were blown down by the gusts, and borne inland by the rushing waters several yards. During the precipitous downpour of rain, when the elements were in the thickest of their fight, the waves beat up against old Castle Ovo and the quays with thundering thumps like discharges from heavy artillery.

WITTY SAYINGS are as easily lost as the pearls slipping off a broken string; but a word of kindness is seldom spoken in vain. It is a seed which, even when dropped by chance, springs up a flower.

THE VIRGIN OF THE FISH.

"La Vierge au Poisson" (the Virgin of the Fish,) one of the famous masterpieces of Raphael, has excited much curiosity and controversy as to the significance of the presence of the fish. The picture was painted in 1514 for the Order of Dominicans at Naples, and is well known from the various engravings of it. The Virgin sits with the infant Christ in her arms. An angel, on her right, stands by a youth, who, kneeling on one knee, holds a fish in his hand suspended by a string. On the Virgin's left is an old man holding an open book. A lion crouches at his feet.

A French author, P. V. Belloc, in 1833 published, at Paris, a small octavo volume upon the subject, giving a new theory, which is that the picture symbolizes a candidate about to enter the Christian church. The fish, of course, means Christ, for both the Greek word ichthus and the fish itself were used by the early Christians to signify Christ, when they were forbidden by the Roman law to pronounce his name. All the commentators seem to agree that the youth presents the fish to Christ, who holds out one hand, when it would seem plain that the youth has taken the fish—that is, he has accepted Christ, a figure of speech used even to this day to express conversion to the Christian religion. The fish was a most significant choice as a symbol of Christ, for the conception or impregnation of the fish in the early days of science was a profound mystery. But neither M. Belloc nor any of the writers on the subject seem to have discovered this clew to the choice of the fish as the symbol of Christ.—Appleton's Journal.

Protestantism in Roman Catholic Countries.

Protestantism continues to advance steadily in the Roman Catholic countries of southern Europe and America.

The National Synod of the Reformed Church of France met, by the special permission of the government, in June, for the first time since 1659. It adopted a declaration of belief in the sovereign authority of the Holy Scriptures in matters of faith, and in salvation by faith in Jesus Christ, the only Son of God. This declaration was opposed by a large minority in the synod, who entertain "liberal" or Unitarian doctrines, but no rupture occurred. The synod also adopted a resolution in favor of separation from control by the State.

The Free Christian Church of Italy is composed of between twenty and thirty congregations in different parts of the kingdom, and is growing healthily. The missionaries of the Wesleyan, Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopal and other churches are established in every part of Italy, and are laboring with vigor and success.

A public debate was held in Rome on the ninth and tenth of February, on the question: "Was St. Peter ever in Rome?" Moderators, selected by the Roman Catholics and the Protestants, presided over the discussion, and champions chosen by either side engaged in it. The discussion was understood to be sanctioned by the express authorization of the Pope, but an order was issued shortly afterward forbidding the priests to engage any more in such debates.

The Protestant churches in Spain are growing slowly. Protestant congregations have been organized in Portugal. The Protestant churches in Mexico are growing with wonderful rapidity. The advance of evangelical Christianity in South America is less rapid, but is visible.—Methodist.

THERE is a tortoise now living in Driffield, England, said to be two hundred years old, having been contemporary with Samuel Johnson, LL. D., etc. It was the pet of a maiden lady, recently deceased, and is said to have been in her family one hundred years. It bears marks on its shell which indicate that it is two hundred years of age. Those acquainted with the habits of the tortoise know that it adds an additional scale to its shell every fifty years, and this tortoise has four such scales. The common age of the tortoise is reckoned at eighty years, but there are many well-authenticated instances of their having lived a much longer time. There was one in the Bishop of Canterbury's garden, at Lambeth, which was known to have lived above one hundred and twenty years.

IF YOU walk by faith you will never live in sin; faith purifies the heart, gives you to realize the presence of a holy God, and will set the whole force of the soul against evil.

"THEM WATERMELONS," indignantly retorted an Indianapolis grocer, in response to the doubts of a timid question, "is as harmless and healthy as if they was cholera medicine itself."

SCIENTIFIC

ON THE ORIGIN OF ATMOSPHERIC ELECTRICITY.—There are few departments of physical science in which more hypotheses have been framed regarding the origin of a force than in that which treats of the electricity exhibited by the air. At the time when only frictional electricity was known, the phenomena of atmospheric electricity were sought for in the friction of the air against the clouds and the earth.

Priestley was of the opinion that there existed an empty space above the clouds, having an electricity opposite to that of the earth. "May not thunder and earthquake," he inquires, "be owing to the re-establishment of the equilibrium between the two electricities?" Franklin entertained the opinion that the sea conveys to the air the electricity with which it is charged, and Volta sought it in the evaporation of water at the surface of the earth. This view was also adopted by Pouillet, to whom we owe quite a number of original experiments. This scientist found that electricity is always produced when the evaporating water holds in solution gases, acids or salts. The steam becomes positively electrified, the solution negatively: Reich confirmed those experiments, but he showed also that the signs of electricity must not be attributed to evaporation, but to the friction of the finely-divided liquid against the sides of the platina capsule used in the experiment. Again, signs of electricity are only obtained when the liquid boils, never by slow evaporation. It is known that Ponillet considered the act of vegetation as another source of electricity in the air. We know that plants yield carbonic acid while they inhale oxygen. If it be true, says that philosopher, that carbonic acid is positively electrified at the moment of its being set free, it follows that plants ought to yield positive electricity. He tried to verify this supposition directly by experiment. Riess, however, showed that electricity produced by vegetation was very variable, now negative and then positive; and investigations with earth alone left little doubt that the signs of electricity afforded are not due to the process of vegetation. In fact, it follows from all investigations of Riess and Reich that the conclusions arrived at by Pouillet regarding the origin of electricity by evaporation as well as vegetation are not demonstrated by experiment. Thus the only opinion which presented some degree of probability has fallen to the ground. Poltier, Jr., propounded an altogether new theory regarding this subject, which is now entertained by the most distinguished physicists of the day. Lamont, in Munich, explains this theory substantially as follows:

The earth possesses a fixed quantity of negative electricity, the distribution of which only is changeable. Let us call this electricity the permanent electricity of the earth, in contradistinction to the induced one, generated by any isolated body when approached by another electric substance. The atmosphere, viz., the pure air, possesses no electricity whatever; it is neither capable of conducting nor retaining electricity. If our earth had a perfectly smooth and uniform surface all points would exhibit an equally strong tension; however, this equilibrium is disturbed by two agencies, namely, by the elevations of the globe itself, and the vapors floating in the air.

It is a well-known fact that electricity collects preferably in points and edges, whence the fact explains itself why it accumulates on roofs, church-towers, mountain-summits, and that collecting apparatus become charged the more the higher they are elevated from the ground.

The second above-mentioned cause which brings about an unequal distribution of electricity on the earth's surface is the watery vapor contained in the air. In this case the vapor may either be in contact with the earth, or it may be isolated. In the first instance the same phenomena take place as upon mountains—the electricity leaves that part of the earth's surface in contact with the vapor, and collects on the surface of the latter. With regard to the second case, it is to be considered that all bodies may contain latent or disguised electricity in unknown quantities, which is set free according to known laws when another electric body is approached. Thus it is explained why clouds floating in the air by the distributing action of the earth become now positively and now negatively electrified.

By this theory the various indications of electro-atmospheric instruments find as simple and easy an explanation as by the hypothesis of the electricity of the air. Upon an electrometer provided with a point, the negative electricity of the earth acts under a clear sky, distributing in such a manner that the positive electricity of the isolated system is drawn into the pendulums, while the negative escapes through the point. It is evident, on the other hand, that in the systems of Lamont and Dellmann, where a ball is brought into connection with the ground, negative electricity must stream in. If the observations are conducted under a cloudless sky, after continuous rain, and when the air is saturated with vapors, so that the clouds are in conducting connection with the earth, the electrometer exhibits no tension. In this case the electricity has collected at the upper borders of the clouds, the observer being in the interior of the electrified body, in which, as little as in a room, electric tension can exist.

Electrified clouds isolated from the earth react distributing on the latter. A negative electric cloud induces a decrease of the permanent electricity of the earth's surface, and, if strongly charged, may bring about an accumulation of positive electricity at those points above which it floats. A positive electric cloud, on the other hand, will increase the permanent negative electricity of the earth.

The electrical phenomena which take place in the atmosphere have thus received a basis for rational explanation, and it is to be seen whether by further investigations this theory will be confirmed or rejected.—Dr. Adolph Ott, in American Artisan.

THE Italian astronomer Secchi announces that for some months past he has observed indications of the existence of general currents in the atmosphere of the sun, proceeding from the equator to the pole, more particularly in those high regions of the chromosphere reached by the most elevated portions of the protuberances. This appears from the fact that the summits of these protuberances are often inflected like volumes of smoke by wind—sometimes in one direction, sometimes in another. In noting the number of times in which the movement or direction seemed similar to that of a trade-wind, he observed four hundred and three instances. These were opposed by only one hundred and thirty-eight instances unfavorable to the supposition of an elevated general current of uniform course. M. Faye, however, regards these phenomena merely as movements caused by local perturbations, believing that the sun and the earth differ so greatly in respect to character and economy that the solar atmosphere cannot be compared to our air, with its currents, winds and clouds.

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case in a separate and additional set of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never part of what is known as the "Vox Humana," and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ECOLINE,

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.—Advices from Peru report the smallpox raging in Lima and other cities.

ALBANY, Jan. 24.—Susan B. Anthony and fifteen other women have been indicted for illegal voting. The three inspectors who received the votes were also indicted.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—The ear-hook murderer, Foster, was to-day sentenced to be hung on the seventh of March.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 27.—The result of the day's proceedings before the Senate committee is decidedly damaging to the Pinchback party. Forman and Warmoth made a good impression by testimony. Lynch, subjected to searching examination by Morton, Trumbull and Carpenter, had to confess the extraordinary mode his board adopted of counting the returns. His admissions afforded much merriment to the committee. He owned up about their recent appointment to office. The committee was obviously disgusted at his revelations.

The Kellogg case seems rapidly breaking down.

The South voted nearly solid to-day for the motion to get the cotton tax refunding bill before the House, and some changes will give the measure a majority. The friends of the bill are very hopeful of final success.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The drift of the examination to-day before the Senate committee on the Louisiana case was directed chiefly to the question of the composition of the Legislature and how many were returned by both boards.

There is nothing yet to indicate the course of the committee, but it looks as if they were anxious to complete the investigation and exclude all irrelevant topics.

The proceedings generally were courteous on both sides. Pinchback's insolence was the only exception.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 22.—It is reported that at the conference recently held at Chiselhurst it was decided that the Empress Eugenie and Prince Jerome Napoleon should be the political guardians of the prince imperial, and therefore direct the movement of the party.

It is said no manifesto announcing the intention of the Bonapartists will be issued, nor will any proclamation be published.

The prince imperial will not be called Napoleon the Fourth, but will be known as Count Pierrefonds. He has adopted as his motto: "Strength, but not impatience."

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 22.—The Grand Duchess Helene Paulovun is dead.

PARIS, January 22.—Ferovilly, De Camp and Berot, the condemned Communists, were shot early this morning on Satory Plain. Fenovilly died without uttering a word. De Camp's last words were: "I die assassinated. Down with false witnesses, lawyers and Thiers." Berot died cheering the republic, the Commune and the army. Only one volley was fired, as all died instantly. There were but few spectators on the ground to witness the execution.

BERLIN, Jan. 22.—By order of the Emperor William the German court will go into mourning one week for Napoleon.

LONDON, Jan. 23.—It is reported that the emigrant ship North Fleet, hence for Australia, with four hundred and twelve passengers, exclusive of her crew, collided with an unknown steamer. Only eighty-five are known to be saved.

The passengers on the North Fleet were panicked from sleep by the collision. The captain was compelled to fire on the terror-stricken passengers. It is believed, had the passengers obeyed the captain, more would have been saved.

The ship North Fleet was at anchor when the collision occurred. Three hundred and twenty persons, including the captain of the North Fleet, were drowned.

A hundred pounds reward has been offered for the vessel which ran the North Fleet down.

Twelve other persons have been saved from the emigrant ship North Fleet, which makes ninety-seven lives known to have been saved.

Lloyd's have telegraphed to their agents at all Southern States to stop, if possible, the steamer which ran the North Fleet down.

HAVANA, Jan. 23, via Key West, Jan. 25.—Advices have been received from the City of Mexico to the fifteenth instant. The Vera Cruz and Mexico railroad has been finished. The festivities attending its inauguration lasted a week, and were participated in by the present members of the cabinet, congressmen and principal citizens. Business was suspended on the first, and President Lerdo de Tejada left the capital on a train, which was preceded by an advance locomotive. At Tepexpan, the first station outside of the capital, the desperadoes had placed three boulders across the track; but, with the exception of breaking the cow-catcher of the first locomotive, no damage was done. At all the stations at which the presidential train stopped the President was received with enthusiasm. Minister Nelson, who was just returning from his visit to the United States, met the President at Arlseava and returned with the party to Vera Cruz. On the third instant the President and the minister of Spain to Mexico took breakfast on board the man-of-war Isabel Catollen, at which toasts complimentary to Spain and Mexico were drank.

The party left Vera Cruz on the sixth instant, and arrived at the capital on the eighth. The political condition of the country is unchanged. The message of President Grant is considered favorable toward Mexico; nevertheless, complications are feared, owing to affairs on the Rio Grande. Minister Nelson has returned to the capital.

BERLIN, Jan. 24.—In the House of Deputies to-day a question was asked touching emigration and measures the government had taken to prevent it. The minister replied that it was impossible to restrict emigration after granting the right of domicile. What was wanted was enlightened and judicious legislation which would make those who now thought of emigrating value their country above all others. Emigration could best be counteracted by elevating and improving the condition of the people at home. This was what the government was aiming at, and by this means hoped to check the tide of emigration.

LONDON, Jan. 25.—The funeral of Lord Lytton took place to-day. Among the distinguished persons present were Baron Selborn, Right Hon. Mr. Gladstone, Chief Justice Cockburn, Right Hon. Mr. Childers, Viscount Stansfeld, Mr. Vernon Harcourt, Hepworth Dixon and Miss M. E. Braddon.

Dean Stanley read the funeral services.

PARIS, Jan. 26.—Legitimist journals report the words of Duke de Nemours announcing that the union of the Orleans branch with the oldest line of the house of Bourbon is complete, and that seven princes of the Orleans family have recognized the Count de Chambord as the rightful King of France.

LISBON, Jan. 26.—Dowager Empress Amelia, of Brazil, died in this city to-day, aged sixty-one years.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—The Prince of Wales, who is president of the British commission, will probably assist at the opening of the Vienna exhibition. The Shah of Persia will also be present, as his visit to Europe is now placed beyond a doubt.

The Emperor William will visit St. Petersburg at the end of May and proceed thence to Vienna, accompanied by the Czar.

A dispatch from Cettigne says Hospodar of Montenegro is preparing to attend the Vienna exhibition.

Adam Sedwick, the geologist, died at eight o'clock this morning.

LISBON, Jan. 28.—The mail steamer from Rio de Janeiro reports yellow fever raging there when she departed.

ROME, Jan. 28.—A royal decree has been promulgated whereby the State formally takes possession of sixteen convents in Rome.

Smallpox in New Orleans.

This dreaded disease is present to some extent in all large cities nearly the year round. There is some of it here now, but not in a degree to excite alarm. We quote from the Picayune of January 26:

> The experience of the past teaches that this obnoxious disease can never prevail with the same virulence as in a colder climate. Yellow fever develops itself under the intense heat of summer; so smallpox is chiefly developed in the season of winter. It is to the North, in a large degree, what yellow fever is to the South.
> For some months past this disease has ravaged nearly all the cities of the North and West, and even spread into the rural districts. Little by little it has encroached with the advancing season upon the States of the South. An examination of the health records shows the direct importation of the disease from Cincinnati, Louisville and New York. Along in October a few cases were brought to the city on steamboats, all white persons; in November the number thus brought to the city was increased—all, or nearly all, white—and in December, the imported cases continuing to increase, the disease was definitively developed in our midst. The record kept by the Board of Health of cases of this kind of sickness, commencing say in October, shows first all white, then a preponderance of white, then about equal proportions of white and black, then a preponderance of black, and finally, as at the present moment, the disease is largely confined to the black race. During the present month of January one hundred and fifteen cases have been reported, and of these twenty-six were white, seventy-one colored and eighteen not stated, but supposed to be black.
> The disease is chiefly confined to the district contiguous to the river at and above St. Mary's market. The number of cases of our own citizens is small, a large proportion of those mentioned above being imported, and are under treatment at the smallpox hospital.
> Under all the circumstances, the precaution of vaccination is one which prudent people will not fail to practice.

EARNEST RELIGION.—A baronet was one day examining some works of the celebrated sculptor, Mr. Bacon, and observed a bust of Mr. Whitefield among them, which led him to remark:

"After all that has been said, this was truly a great man; he was the founder of a new religion."

"A new religion, sir!" replied Mr. Bacon.

"Yes," said the baronet; "what do you call it?"

"Nothing," was the reply, "but the old religion revived with new energy, and treated as if the preacher meant what he said."

Letter from England.

MR. EDITOR: When I saw you in New Orleans about the tenth of October, on the eve of my departure for this country, I promised to write to you on my arrival here. I have been in this country nearly six weeks. During that time the weather has been very unfavorable, raining nine days out of every ten. I have been unable, in consequence of the unsettled state of the weather, to visit as much of the country as I desired. I may say I have seen but little of this country up to this time. But I have not been idle since my arrival. I have visited Birmingham, where I have spent the most of my time. The last week I spent in the city of London. I there visited the annual cattle show. This exhibition was a grand affair. Cattle were on exhibition there from all portions of the kingdom. I presume the cattle and sheep were of the best blood in the country. I saw one bullock that weighed two thousand nine hundred pounds. He was of cream-color, and a magnificent animal he was. I there saw one bullock from the highlands of Scotland that I was favorably impressed with. He appeared to be quite woolly—intended by nature for the climate. The sheep were as nearly perfect as could be, at least it so appeared to me. There were some African sheep on exhibition—three in number, eight months old. They were small for their age, with yellow spots rather numerous. The wool appeared coarse, and to have quite an amount of hair in it. The machinery was all that any person could ask. The road steam engine, as well as the plow engine, was there. Also every variety of machinery for plantation use that you could imagine. The vegetable department was complete, though as a general thing the vegetables were not of as large a size as were exhibited in Birmingham the week before. There was no poultry on exhibition, as at Birmingham. There every variety in the poultry line was represented, and of the best breeds—not only in England, but from the United States and the Continent. The dog show at Birmingham was a curiosity to me. Every species of that family appeared to be represented. I can say that I was not very favorably impressed with the show, for various reasons.

The weather here, so far, is as mild as it is in Mississippi at this season of the year. Were it not for the rains and the fogs I would like the country much better. Last week, while in London, the lamps were burning the whole day. This was a new thing to me.

I have filled most of the orders I brought out with me for emigrants. I find it quite difficult to procure families without children—they being in great demand in this country. Young women, such as I am willing to send out to our people, are hard to get. Young men can be engaged in any number to work on farms at from $10 to $12.50 per month by the year. There is no difficulty in procuring large families to go to the South. But our people seem to think that they would not be profitable to have them sent out, in consequence of the extra expense. In this, I am inclined to think, they are mistaken; once on a farm they will be likely to remain, as they cannot afford to move yearly. And the neighbors would not be likely to tamper with them, to make them dissatisfied with their situation; and, in addition, our people could get servants through these families. They, being anchored down, as it were, could be relied on.

From what I have seen, and the inquiries I have made since I have been in the country, I am satisfied that there is no kind of labor that cannot be procured.

Mechanics, say carpenters, stone masons, smiths of every kind, can be had in any number—those who have served a long apprenticeship to the business; and may be called skilled mechanics, such as the various machinists, cabinet-makers, gunsmiths, printers, confectioners, bakers, millers and warehousemen. Anything in the mechanical business—that is, those who have served their time to such business—can be had in this country, as well as farm laborers and servants. I have been engaging farm laborers—that is, men with families—at $150 by the year, and their wives at $100 by the year; young women (whom I have found hard to procure) at $100 for the year. I have contracted with young men at from $10 to $12.50 per month by the year, with board. I find that large families can be more easily procured, and at more reasonable wages. I brought with me some orders for farm laborers to work for a share of the crop. In procuring such I have failed, they not being willing to contract for a share of the crop until they can see for themselves. This is nothing more than right and just not only to themselves, but to the landowner. I expect to remain in this country until spring. Any person or persons wishing servants, farm laborers or anything else, I would be pleased to have their orders. Up to this time I have been unable to procure orphan girls. I have made arrangements for orphan boys. I will send out on the steamer St. Louis, which leaves Liverpool on the eighteenth instant, nearly two hundred, who will arrive in your city about the tenth of January next. Should any persons wish to correspond with me, they can do so by sending to the care of Messrs. Ellis, Main & Montgomery, 12 Launcelot Hey, Liverpool. Yours very respectfully,

GEORGE TORREY.

P. S.—H. F. Givens can give you any information about me.

LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND, December 16, 1872.

Letter from China.

To the Members of Felicity and Moreau Sabbath School Missionary Societies:

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS: You have often heard of China, with its teeming millions of human beings who have no knowledge of God and the plan of salvation through Jesus. I propose to give you occasional talks about these people, who have kept the doors of their great empire closed for so many ages, and who now only have them ajar. This they did not do until they were forced to it. And even now we must have a passport in traveling through the country.

Some say there are four hundred million people in China, and others say there are only three hundred million. I shall not pretend to say which is right, for I do not think any one knows with certainty. There is one thing we are quite sure of, and that is: the people of the middle kingdom, as they call their own country, are in gross darkness and superstition. In their blindness they bow down to wood and stone, and call on their gods to bless them. They have a beautiful country, which produces everything necessary to make man happy; but it is, to look at it in another light, a great valley of dry bones, without life and without light. The land is made a desolation, and the wrath of God hangs over the people on account of their vices; and superstition envelops the whole, and fills the minds and hearts of all, both rich and poor. North, south, east and west the crushing and withering influences of idolatry are felt, and the people are made to suffer for their many sins. Famine is spread abroad over the land in one part, and waters flood another and destroy the fertility of the soil, and in another armed bands of lawless men lay waste the land and destroy the lives of thousands of innocent beings.

Chinese suppose they are the wisest and best people in the world; but their wisdom is of this world, and in the majority of cases their goodness is only in outward form, and to be seen of men—a perfect fac simile of the Pharisee of the Bible. They have some good maxims, taught by their great sage, Confucius, who lived about the time of Daniel, some five hundred years before Christ. The people of China worship him—that is, they bow down before images on paper, and before his tablet. They also make sacrifice to him all over China by bringing whole carcasses of bullocks, hogs and many other kinds of animals, besides all kinds of fruit. These are placed before his tablet, while all those who pretend to read and observe all his sayings come and prostrate themselves before his tablet. I believe no image of wood or stone has ever been allowed to be made of him in all China, for Confucius taught them to keep, as far as possible, from the gods. Some would inquire of him concerning the life to come, but he said: "If you do not fully know the things of this life, how can you expect to know the things of a future life?" At another time he said: "He that offends against heaven has no one to whom he can pray." At the time of Confucius there was no idolatry in China, and it was only introduced into China from India shortly after the Christian era. I will tell you how that happened, and how at that time the people of China heard of the fame of our Savior.

The Emperor Mingte, who reigned in the fifty-eighth year of the Christian era, sent messengers to India to look for "the holy man of the West," and he desired that his books and his religion should be brought to China—Sakya Mani Buddha, in the twenty-fourth year of Choan Wong, B. C. 1027, in the southern part of India. At the age of sixteen he thought of becoming a recluse, but it was some time after this that he betook himself to the hills to cultivate virtue, and where, after a long time, he had, in his own mind, reached that point where he was without feeling, and, according to the belief of his followers, he became perfect, and finally was absorbed into nothing, and became, as it were, annihilated. But before this happened he is said to have written the following lines:

"In his system of religion Buddha followed no system, but his baseless system still became a system. He now delivers you this unorganized plan, that by imitating it you may form a system."

The Chinese Emperor had no doubt heard of the fame of our Savior, for it was only fifty-eight years after his birth when he sent his messengers to look for "the holy man of the West," where Buddha had lived and died nearly a thousand years before the birth of our Savior.

I will in my next letter give some further account of how Buddha was brought to China, and how received, and its extent throughout the country.

I would again beg the prayers of all who love the Lord Jesus that the light which is just dawning may soon break forth in all its splendor, and shine in the hearts and the minds of the poor deluded heathen of China. I pray the blessing of God, our Heavenly Father, to rest and abide upon you and all those who love him. As ever, yours in Christian fellowship, J. W. LAMBUTH.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, December 10, 1872.

BISHOP PECK has appointed Rev. J. C. Davidson and Rev. Julius Soper, members of the forthcoming graduating class of Drew Seminary, as missionaries to Japan. Bishop Wiley has selected Rev. J. H. Corrella, probationer of the Philadelphia Conference, to reinforce the mission of Foochow, China.

Statistics of the M. E. Church (North) for 1872.

From the official statistical returns from the several Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the year 1872, the Christian Advocate compiles the following summaries:

| | | Increase. |
|---|---|---|
| Annual Conferences | 76 | 4 |
| Bishops | 13 | 4 |
| Traveling preachers | 10,242 | 513 |
| Local preachers | 11,964 | 582 |
| Total preachers | 22,206 | 1,125 |
| Lay members | 1,458,441 | 37,118 |
| Total members | 1,468,680 | 37,669 |
| Churches | 14,008 | 568 |
| Value of churches | $62,393,237 | $5,481,337 |
| Parsonages | 4,484 | 175 |
| Value of parsonages | $8,575,877 | $789,073 |
| Value of churches and parsonages | $70,969,111 | $6,269,410 |
| Sunday schools | 17,471 | dec. 71 |
| Officers and teachers | 193,091 | dec. 288 |
| Sunday school scholars | 1,278,529 | 11,817 |
| Missionary collections | $571,000 | $63,000 |
| Church extension collection | 91,572 | 19,029 |
| Tract collections | 21,586 | 140 |
| Sunday School Union collections | 22,674 | dec. 485 |
| Woman foreign missionary collections | 18,755 | 18,755 |
| Freedmen's Aid Society collections | 12,048 | 12,048 |
| Collections for Conf. claimants | 150,141 | 8,998 |

Traveling Preachers.—The total number is 10,242. These are classified thus: In full connection, 7,175; on trial, 1,498; supernumerary, 919; superannuated, 950. During the year 72 traveling preachers located, and 101 died. Adding these to the net increase (513,) gives 710 as the number of preachers who entered the traveling ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church during the year—an average of nearly 14 every week.

Local Preachers.—The whole number for 1872 is 11,964—an increase over the previous year of 582. The number who died during the year is not given. The Southern Illinois Conference reports the largest number of local preachers, namely, 358; Illinois Conference reports 342; Mississippi, 339; Philadelphia, 291. Nevada returns the smallest number, 13; and Colorado the next smallest, 24. The increase is over 11 per week.

Lay Membership.—The total lay membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church—not including the numbers in our foreign missions not connected with the Annual Conferences, the returns from which for the year have not yet come to hand—is 1,458,441. The number of deaths during the year was 17,078. The other members lost by removals, etc., are not reported, but after deducting all losses the number—correctly given above—shows a net gain of 37,118, an average net increase per week of about 714.

Churches.—The number of churches—houses of worship—is 14,008, a net increase of 568, an average of about 11 each week, or nearly 2 each secular day of the year. Pittsburg Conference returns the largest number, namely, 591. Erie Conference reports 435; Central Pennsylvania, 358; North Indiana, 364; Baltimore, 341; and Indiana, 338. The total value of these churches, carefully estimated severally by their Board of Trustees, is $62,393,237, an increase of $5,481,337, a net increase per week of over $105,000.

Parsonages.—The number of parsonages reported is 4,484, a net increase on the number reported in 1871 of 175, an average gain of about three and one-third per week. The estimated total value is $8,575,877, a net increase of $789,073. These figures give an average weekly gain for the year in parsonage property of over $15,000. The average estimated value of the parsonages is nearly $2,000.

Shall we Meet Again?

The following is said to be one of the most brilliant articles written by the lamented George D. Prentice:

"The fiat of nature is inexorable. There is no appeal for relief from the great law which dooms us to dust. We flourish and fade as the leaves of the forest, and the flowers that bloom and wither in a day have no frailer hold upon life than the mightiest monarch that ever shook the earth with his footsteps. Generations of men will appear and disappear as the grass, and the multitude that throng the world to-day will disappear as the footsteps on the shore. Men seldom think of the great event of death until the shadow falls across their own pathway, hiding from their eyes the faces of loved ones whose living smile was the sunlight of their existence. Death is the antagonist of life, and the cold thought of the tomb is the skeleton of all feasts. We do not want to go through the dark valley, although its dark passage may lead to Paradise; we do not want to lay down in the damp grave, even with princes for bed-fellows. In the beautiful drama of Ion, the hope of immortality, so eloquently uttered by the death-devoted Greek, finds deep response in every thoughtful soul. When about to yield his young existence as a sacrifice to fate, his Clemantha asks if they should meet again, to which he replies: 'I have asked that dreadful question of the hills that look eternal—of the clear streams that flow forever—of the stars among whose fields of azure my raised spirit has walked in glory. All were dumb; but as I gaze upon thy living face I feel that there is something in the love that manifests through its beauty that cannot wholly perish. We shall meet again, Clemantha.'"

THERE still lives in England a clergyman named Cheese, who, more than forty years ago, had as pupils two young men named Tate and Manning. The former is now the primate of the Church of England; the latter is the famous Roman Catholic Archbishop of Westminster.

WHY is a false friend like the letter P? Because, though always first in pity, he is ever last in help.

Books and Periodicals.

REMINISCENCES OF PUBLIC MEN IN ALABAMA FOR THIRTY YEARS. With an appendix. By William Garrett, late Secretary of State. Atlanta, Georgia: Plantation Publishing Company's Press. 1872.

This is a portly octavo of 807 pages, and a work of great interest and value. The author displays much industry and painstaking in the collection of the vast mass of facts and data which fill his pages. Most of the personal sketches are of persons whom the author knew, and the incidents and delinations are fresh and entertaining. Our readers, especially those in Alabama, will find the work of great interest, and valuable for its political, historical and general information.

THE SERVANT GIRL OF THE PERIOD. By Charles Chamberlain, Jr. New York: J. S. Redfield, publisher.

A sprightly and entertaining volume. Many of our housekeepers will read it with zest, and possibly with profit. For sale by Gresham, New Orleans.

ENGLISH GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS. With illustrations and diagrams. By Stephen W. Clark, A. M. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago. 1873.

A work which will commend itself to teachers. It is worth examining by all interested in text-books for schools.

GOOD WORDS for January is the best of all we have seen of this always incomparable magazine. We note especially: Devotional Readings from the MSS. of the Late Norman Macleod; The Gulf Stream; Richard Hooker; The Science of Health; Paganini; The Faithful Sayings of the Pastoral Epistles.

THE AMERICAN ARTISAN, an illustrated journal of popular science, published by Wales, Brown & Allen, is one of the most valuable publications of the day. It is a sixteen-page weekly, and exceedingly cheap at $3 a year. It fully keeps up with the patents, inventions and scientific progress of the times.

THE WORKING CHURCH is the title of a new weekly, issued in New York. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., George H. Hepworth and George J. Mingins are the editors and publishers. It is a very handsome eight-page paper. Price, $1 per annum.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE began a new series with the first number in January. This old and popular periodical promises to be more valuable than ever.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Minutes of the twenty-third annual session of the Texas Conference. A very neat pamphlet, and out in good time.

AMERICAN HOMES is an interesting illustrated monthly, published in Boston. We have received the December number.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for January has been received. One of the best popular monthlies in the country.

THE HOUSEHOLD for January is a fine number of this always interesting publication.

THE Abbe Michaud has written a letter to the Cologne Gazette, in which he claims that the Jesuits had much to do in hurrying the late Emperor of the French into the disastrous war against Germany. It was thought that France could be victorious, Prussian Protestantism be humbled, and Austria avenged for her reverses of Sadowa, and be driven back to her inquisitorial concordat. In the meantime the attention of the laity would be distracted from the doings of the Ecumenical Council, and its manufacture of dogmas thus be carried on without criticism or opposition. Everything turned out just as the fathers did not desire; but they have their own blindness to blame for the strengthening of Germany and the Protestant cause. Bismarck really owes them a vote of thanks.

A SHORTER PRAYER.—"Mr. C.," said a self-righteous but ungodly farmer to a pastor in a New England village awhile ago, "I think I had rather use the Lord's Prayer, when I do my praying, than to join with you ministers in your off-hand, long-winded addresses to the Almighty. It's short, you know, and it's just what Christ taught us."

"Yes," said the minister, "but there's another prayer which is even shorter, and fits your case and mine quite as well."

"Ah, what is that?"

"God be merciful to me a sinner," was the emphatic answer.

The shorter prayer must precede the longer one; and no man can devoutly say "Our Father" until he has first from his heart cried out: "God be merciful to me a sinner."

THE following anecdote of Pope Pius the Ninth, which came to hand a few days ago, is good enough to repeat. It is truly witty, and has in it, moreover, enough of papal gall to give it flavor: "Some one having informed his Holiness that Father —— had taken to himself a wife, the Pope lifted his hands to heaven and cried: "Now let all the saints be praised: the sinner has taken his punishment into his own hands!""

A LITTLE BOY accosted his papa thus: "Papa, are you growing still?" "No, dear; what makes you think so?" "Because the top of your head is coming through your hair."

NOT IMPROBABLE.—It is said that more criminals are sent to the California State prison from the wine-producing districts of the State than from any other portion.

NEARER HOME.

BY PIERRE CAREY.

One sweetly solemn thought
Comes to me o'er and o'er:
I'm nearer my home to-day
Than I ever have been before.

Nearer my Father's house,
Where the many mansions be,
Nearer the great White Throne,
Nearer the crystal sea.

Nearer the bound of life,
Where we lay our burdens down,
Nearer leaving the cross,
Nearer gaining the crown.

But the waves of that silent sea
Roll dark before my sight,
That brightly the other side
Break on a shore of light.

Oh, if my mortal feet
Have almost gained the brink,
If it be I am nearer home,
Even to-day, than I think,

Father, perfect my trust—
Let my spirit feel in death
That her feet are firmly set
On the Rock of a living faith.

The Northern General Conference

ON INTOXICATING LIQUORS, GAMES OF CHANCE, AND WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

MR. EDITOR: I now invite attention to the prohibition, by the amended rule, of "attending theaters, horse-races or circuses," or "taking such other amusements as are obviously of misleading or questionable moral tendency." Theaters, horse-races and circuses concentrate in themselves a vast amount of attractiveness, and at the same time of sinfulness, that renders them exceedingly deceptive and dangerous. The witty French woman who, in the midst of some innocent enjoyment, cried out, "Mon Dieu! how delightful this is! It would be perfect if there were only a little sin in it," could have no occasion to make such remark in respect to these; she could find just as much sin as her depraved heart could desire.

The theater, notwithstanding the efforts which, in recent years, some men of genius, claiming to be Christian ministers, have made to defend and uphold it, must ever be utterly condemned and rejected when weighed in the balance of common sense and enlightened piety. It is true that some of the plays which may be acted are in themselves unexceptionable in their moral tendency, and present the highest expression of creative genius; yet the majority of those presented, if I am correctly informed, are vulgar in their taste, coarse in their allusions, and too often demoralizing in their influence. The actors and actresses are, many of them, of questionable character, while all the associations and accompaniments of the place and all its air and spirit are decidedly irreligious, if not positively immoral. In my boyhood, while residing in a city and away from my parents, and left far too much to my own guidance, I was accustomed to visit the theater night after night, and I thus had the opportunity of witnessing the performances of many of the great actors who figured upon the stage thirty years ago. In looking back to those days I readily recall the glare and witchery and seductiveness of the varying scenes, but I am not conscious that I derived in any shape or form one particle of good. I distinctly remember the impression made by the farces and comedies which constitute the main attraction of play-goers, and which then, as now, were too often low, unrefined, and sometimes even bordering on the indecent and the sensual. If I may trust to my own recollection, I should say that the theater is one of the last places in which the refined and devoted follower of Christ should be found. The theater, as it is conducted and will be conducted—for all hope of its regeneration is out of the question—is an institution which, so far from being an adjunct to the church, is a leading obstacle to its progress, and the only line that can be drawn in respect to it is, as Bishop McIlvaine, of Ohio, has stated, "that of entire exclusion."

Horse-racing, with all its associations—with the knavery, the drunkenness and the gambling which are its invariable attendants—is surely no spectacle for Christian eyes to behold; the race-ground, with all its snares and pitfalls, is no place for Christian feet to tread. While the training and running of horses against each other for money is a vicious sport, the whole category of appendages—the bars, with all their variety of tempting drinks, and the gambling dens, with all their variety of alluring game, and the army of sharpers and black-legs gathered from the four winds—makes the race-course a place of immoral tendency, and to be shunned as would the fatal upas of oriental climes. Voluntarily to witness such exhibitions, on the part of a professing Christian, it seems to me, implies a disregard of the obligations assumed in uniting with the church, and an indifference to his own reputation and that of the body with which he is associated, and indicates the last verge of lukewarmness, if not total apostasy.

What shall I say of the circus, that peramulating concern which comes along two or three times a year to throw the children and the laboring population into a state of feverish excitement, to interrupt the exercises of schools and the work of plantations, and to carry from every community in which it pitches its tent hundreds of dollars which could be far more wisely and usefully spent? It has been a long time since I was at a circus, but from my own recollection, and from what I gather from those who are now in the habit of attending it; I should think that much that there transpires is offensive to good taste, and too well calculated to bring a blush to the cheek of modesty and to shock all true refinement. I may lay it down as a matter beyond successful contradiction that the circus, while it may exhibit remarkable feats of agility and strength, and may produce a vast amount of uproarious laughter, yet cannot be declared, when all things are considered, an institution in any wise imparting useful knowledge, cultivating a refined taste or promoting a high morality. Rather it must be regarded as calculated to lower the tastes and to blunt the moral instincts of the people, while it gives employment to hundreds of persons who are contributing nothing to the productiveness of society, and are absorbing means which might otherwise be profitably expended. The circus is a place too unrefined, too doubtful in its taste and moral tendency, to constitute a proper resort for the pure and elevated disciples of Jesus.

Theaters, horse-races and circuses are evils—common evils, pressing evils, evils attractive and popular—and our brethren in the North did well to pronounce at Brooklyn the edict of their great communion against them. I like, too, that clause of their amended rule which prohibits the "taking of such other amusements as are obviously of misleading or questionable moral tendency." The evil one, in his shrewdness and ingenuity, may suggest to men amusements and practices equally as offensive as those prohibited, yet not apparently embraced in the terms of the prohibition. This latter clause will render all such attempts futile. In certain sections of country remote from large cities, where the prejudice against the dance has not been obliterated, or where the dancing-master has not yet reached to teach his fine art, a variety of kissing plays have been introduced and are practiced at social gatherings. This is a sad species of social demoralization, and the brilliant author of the "Dance of Modern Society" thinks that, in communities where such customs prevail, the dance itself, whose evils he has so unmercifully exposed, would be a sign of progress and a step in advance toward "ultimate more thorough reform."

While I have thus commended the legislation of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and while I consider it in the particular measures to which I have alluded as worthy of imitation by other Christian denominations, I do not favor any organic union with that body. While I shall ever regard with interest her polity and her achievements, and shall be happy for us to imitate whatever is wise and practical in her institutions and movements, I yet believe it far the best that the two churches should remain separate and run their respective careers. There is room for us both and work for us both in this great country, and we shall accomplish more by cherishing a generous rivalry and provoking each other to good works. I am opposed to consolidation in Church and State, and think that it would be a sad day for the religious interests of the land when all the different branches of Methodism become combined into one ponderous and unwieldy body. I trust that before many years have elapsed all causes of irritation between the churches will be removed, that their respective members will regard each other as brethren, and that they will strive harmoniously and lovingly to promote their common principles and to accomplish their common end—the spread of scriptural holiness over these lands. Yea, I go further and say that I hope that the time will come when the different members of the Methodist family, at least in this country, while each retains its own individuality and integrity, will adopt the suggestion of the noble editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, and unite in some form of council to secure an interchange of views, to promote Christian fellowship, and to recommend measures calculated to advance common interests. Of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in whose fold I have been sheltered and in whose fields I have labored for more than three decades of years, I say in all the fullness of a grateful heart: "Esto perpetua."

I have no doubt, Mr. Editor, that among your readers there are those who may think that many of the views which I have presented are puritanical and extreme, and in no wise consistent with the liberalizing tendencies of the day. I admit that they are strict and unfashionable, but I regard them as scriptural, and essential to the vitality and power of the church, and such as have received the indorsement of the most illustrious names that adorn the various evangelical denominations of our country. Brethren of my own church may differ with me as to the propriety of further legislation upon the matters which I have discussed, but they cannot differ with me as to the propriety of suppressing, by every practical mode, the worldly spirit and the worldly practices which are insinuating themselves into the church, and are eating out its vigor and efficiency.

I am sure that I cannot close this series of communications better than by quoting a paragraph from the episcopal address of 1867, from our own Bishops, as follows:

"This is no time to abate our testimony against worldliness in all its forms. Our church has never faltered in its teaching or modified its tone in relation to dancing, theaters, the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits, drunkenness, revelings, and such like, as demoralizing and fatal to godliness. Now that we are threatened with these evils coming in like a flood, we renew our warning." S.

MANSFIELD, Louisiana.

A Doorkeeper Rather.

MR. EDITOR: When the enraptured psalmist declared that he would "rather be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of iniquity," he must have alluded to the glory and honor conferred by a connection with the church, as contrasted with the stings of conscience brought about by attending something similar to a modern circus. One of these living panoramas of moral death has just visited northwestern Louisiana. For some weeks previous the country was in a flutter of excitement, while the bosom of the church heaved nightly over the prospect of learning some great moral truths from that illustrious individual—the clown.

Well, let us pass round and see who is going. "Bro. X., you are not going to the circus, I hope." "Well, I don't keer nothin' about it myself, you know me, I didn't, but the children wants to see them animals, and I thinks I orter go long; not that I keer about the circus." After some further conversation we settled down on the conclusion that Bro. X. was about as well suited to the task of "training up a child in the way he should go" as the clown was to teach morals. "Sister Y., are you going to the circus?" "Well, I suppose so." "But you will be breaking the rules of the church." "Well, as to that, I think there are a heap worse sins; and then I can't see any harm in it no way; and then there's the animals and ('the clown,' we threw in edgewise.) No, not the clown, for I don't care about him, but"— "What about the rules of the church, sister?" "This is a free country, and if you go to turning out you will turn them all out." "We did not threaten anybody; we just want to know what your conscience says about the rules of the church." "Ha, ha, ha; why we all want to enjoy ourselves, and we don't want to do any wrong, and we can't see any harm," etc. Round and round the circle of the same stale arguments did this sister go, faster than the horses around the ring, nor with half so much grace and ease, for it was evident that the one had left her heart and the other her conscience.

"Miss Q., are you going to the circus?" (This young lady was converted at the protracted meeting, and shouted, and said she loved God and honored the church.) Coloring slightly: "Is there any harm in going?" "We did not say there was; but what does your conscience say about breaking the rules of the church?" "It is no more harm than to go to the theater," said she, in an interrogatory tone. "Miss Q., in comparing vices among themselves you do not act wisely; compare them with the Bible, and the usage of all Christians of all ages, and then judge them." "Well, may be so; but I never could see any harm in amusement. And then there's old Aunt V. and Grandma L., who are going, and I am sure they would not do anything wrong." This is the representative of the girl who wanted to "be perfect!" And now she has gotten her consent to lay aside the spotless garments of salvation, and to put on the sackcloth of vanity, that she may sit in the dust and ashes of a modern circus.

* * * * * * * *

Here they are coming. What stretching and running and looking. There's "the chariot of gold!" (a little two-horse wagon, with a yellow box on it.) There's the live lion, with a dog-collar around his neck; and there's the happy family (a big box full of monkeys,) and the Cardiff giant (a stone giant ten feet long,) who lived before Adam; and then there are tigers and leopards and wolves and 'coons and rats, all ring-streaked, speckled and striped; and birds of all sorts and sizes, and shapes and colors. Here they go, all bands keeping step to the music, and on their way to see the animals, and see the showman put his head in the lion's mouth, and cut up other tomfooleries. There goes old Bro. X. and Sister Y. and Aunt V. and Grandma L. and Miss Q., all; and all around them are negroes galloping and prancing and dancing and swearing. But pshaw! don't they hear that every day? "Just going to see the animals," as they see their pastor regarding them with pitying eye. Oh! for a look from the all-seeing eye of Jesus to melt their hearts. No harm to go to see the animals, especially when the kind managers have been so good as to prepare a separate canvas "for the benefit of those whose religious principles forbid their visiting circus performances." (That was what this circus did, and it was no trap, but a noble, honorable concession to the Christian religion.)

But let's follow these Christians. Are they going alone to see the animals? If they are they will return in a little while. The door from the menagerie to the circus is opened, and the music swells on the air. The king of beasts is left alone as the mighty current of humanity sweeps in and fills the amphitheater about the pit, in which some no-account fellow is going to stand on his head to make somebody laugh. Look around. Who do you see? There are the Methodists by scores—Uncle Steve, the great camp-meeting man, and Uncle Joe, the exhorter, and Bro. John, the Sunday school man, and the temperance men en masse. Then Aunt Sallie and Katie and Phœbe, all famous camp-meeting people and altar spirits. Then young Methodists in abundance. There are the Baptists in solid columns! All followed the example of Christ, and have "got into grace." And now there they are; won't kneel at the Lord's table when spread by Methodists—that would be falling from grace—but can go to the circus. These "are the salt." Now let us examine "the earth," who are tare. There's the liar and the lounger, the gambler and the gouger, the drunkard and the deviolish, the slimy and the slanderer, the vain and the vulgar, white and black, like spirits blue and gray, all ranged around, and with hungry looks on their faces. Never did the witches of Shakespeare mingle such a caldron as there is boiling here. For a month or more their digestive apparatuses have been preparing for this repast of vulgarity, and now they are just waiting for the clown to bring out his stew of toads, and dish them out by the ladle full. How much salt would it take to save such a crowd? More than is sprinkled on it at present, and of a better quality also than circus-going Christians.

But the moment has arrived when something wearing horns runs out into the ring. It is not old Actæon, and if it was there would be no danger of being eaten by his own dogs for surprising that virtuous assembly. It is the clown—a combination of man, monkey, parrot and Beelzebub. Striped like the tiger, he is as ferocious; spotted like the leopard, his spots will never change; and active as the cat, he is equally as sly and vicious. He is "a liar from the beginning" even to the end of the circus. Indeed it may be doubted whether he ever told the truth but once, and that was "that he is paid to be a fool, while his delightful audience pay to become fools." The ladies and gentlemen (?!) of the show all have their graces and wonderful feats ventilated in a style calculated to give one elevated notions of their manly qualities and womanly virtues (?) The clown does this, of course, and Bro. X. nearly splits his sides with laughter at the happy thrust at the fashions of the day, while his wife and daughter are suffused with shame. The Baptists all laughed too.

Well, the circus is over and gone, leaving nothing behind but coarse jests, a fog of moral miasma, and hundreds of broken vows. Then to hear those who did these things attempt to excuse themselves! "Covering their sins!" Judas Iscariot repented, but he suffered a miserable death; and how much more these erring souls unless they repent. In just such company as a circus troupe Peter denied his Lord, and just such a crew cried out: "Release Barabbas," but "crucify him." Brethren, no dying man would wish to be there—to go from thence to the flaming bar of Jehovah. Are you not satisfied that a place not fit to die in is not fit to live in or visit? If you are sincere you will never see a clown and a circus-ring again; but if not, you will return as a "dog to his vomit" again. "He that, being often reproved and hardeneth his heart * * * shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy."

PRAIRIE.

KEACHIE, La., Dec. 4, 1872.

Devotion to the Ministry.

MR. EDITOR: Devotion to any cause is the ground and reason of success. This is especially true in the work of the ministry. The principle thus announced finds its highest illustration and sanction in the life and labors of the blessed Jesus. He "came from the excellent glory" into this world of error and shame for the purpose of "teaching and preaching," that he might enlighten and elevate the people into the regions of sanctified humanity; and he who feels that the work of the ministry is committed to his charge is bound by the pattern set him by the great Head of the Church. Then how dare any minister shrink from the work which may carry him into the midst of poverty and shame, while he hears the voice of command as it falls in accents of sweetest love from the lips of Jesus: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." It was under this broad and comprehensive authority that the Wesleys acted when they sought the outcast and down-trodden, and brought light and love to their sad and disconsolate hearts. Thus the wilderness and solitary places were made glad for them, and the deserts to rejoice and blossom as the rose, and to rejoice with joy and singing.

But is this work binding alike upon all ministers, or are there specified exceptions constituting a privileged class? The word of God shows that all stand equally related to Christ so far as work is concerned; and that if there be an intensification of obligation, it is found where there is superiority of talent. This obligation is always commensurate with ability. If this consideration could become operative throughout any one large ecclesiastical organization, what mighty and glorious results would follow? But while some ministers confer with "flesh-and-blood" considerations—ample pay, position, advantage, ease and comfort—and at the same time know that their brethren are struggling with misfortune, hardship and want, can we expect perfect harmony and delightful fellowship? Brethren in Christ ought to "bear one another's burdens" if they expect to "fulfill the law of Christ."

If I were called upon to select an illustration of devotion to the ministry I would find some earnest, faithful, efficient preacher of the gospel, who possibly might be surrounded by embarrassing circumstances, and yet in obedience to vested, organic authority takes up the line of march for his distant field of labor, on a cold, cold December day, and patiently and perseveringly presses his way till at length he reaches the field of action; and, notwithstanding he receives little or no encouragement, yet erects the standard of truth, unfurls the banner of love, and lifts his voice in trumpet clearness, and bids the lost and ruined to come and live, now and hereafter. In response to such demonstrations of earnestness and fidelity the Head of the Church makes the gospel thus preached the power of God unto the salvation of the people. Conversions are numbered by scores and hundreds.

As we follow this faithful man of God, he evinces the same devotion, month after month and year after year, till perhaps he has numbered thirty or forty years in the great work of preaching the gospel to dying men. At last the "work and labor of love" is drawing to a close, and this blessed servant of the most High hears the command of release, and exaltation to position, honor and emolument. He shakes hands with the burdens of time, and ascends to his home in the skies amid the ever-increasing splendors of heaven, and the thousands of voices that peal from temples and groves, saying: "Welcome, thrice welcome, thou servant of God." Jesus closes the reception by saying: "Come up higher. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Search the Scriptures.

They who desire to obtain pearls must dive for them. The collier must dig if he wishes to obtain coal. The miner in search of gold must also dig for it. Without this labor they can get neither.

We have a book known as the Holy Bible, for which many thousands suffered the pains of the rack and burning at the stake. It is full of precious truths; yea, more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto them. But, unfortunately for some, we cannot obtain without searching for them. None ever searched in this great mine of blessings, with sincerity, without obtaining a large reward of happiness. But there are some, however, who profess to be in search of happiness; they are, in fact, in the "church," but they wear a very sanctimonious countenance, look the picture of misery, call themselves always by the same name—"miserable sinners"—and are continually singing two hymns. One commences,

"And am I born to die?"

and the other,

"Oh! how gives me anxious thought,
Am I saved or am I not?"

Why, then, do they not obtain these blessings? Where is the fault? Does it lie in the Bible? O no; it contains as many now as ever. But the secret is, they do not dig. How, then, can they expect to reap the blessings which are therein while they let it lie upon the shelf, with the dust of many weeks, perhaps months, upon it? "Search the Scriptures," says Christ. How, then, can they expect to be blessed by him when they disobey his commandments?

But happy are those who make God's law their study and delight. "No," says that young man, "I can no longer trifle away the time which God has given me in the giddy dance, nor even in reading those 'books of fashion' which I once so foolishly indulged in. I have one, however, now known as 'Peter's First-Class Fashion-Book.' The style of dress which he recommends is very becoming to all ladies. A person may wear it from January to December, and will always be admired by all good Christians, but especially by the blessed Lord. Those, however, who do not dress according to the manner prescribed therein are only men-pleasers and are hateful in the sight of God. I have professed to the church and world that 'I am the Lord's,' and I must act consistently as his child. I must put aside all unnecessary dress, commonly called finery, such as fancy ribbons, rings, buckles, etc. I must no longer dress like a doll, but as a Christian "whose adorning (says Peter,) let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible; even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price.'"

I am certain that the reason why we do not enjoy religion as we should is because we do not "search the Scriptures" as we ought. How can we know God's commands if we do not search for them in his word? and how can we expect to be happy if, after we find them, we do not treasure and obey them?

"For these inestimable gains
That so enrich the mind,
Oh! may we search with eager pains
Assured that we shall find."

OBITUARIES.

DIED, in Smith county, Mississippi, on the third of December, 1872, of pneumonia, Mr. GEORGE W. HAWKINS, son of Pleasent and Mary Hawkins, in the twentieth year of his age. May God console the bereft parents.

R. A. SIMLEY.

DIED, in Perry county, Alabama, November 16, 1872, ABRAM LOUIS POPE, aged sixty-four years, seven months and seventeen days. The deceased was born in Georgia, made a profession of religion in early life and joined the Methodist Church, of which he continued an active, efficient and consistent member till his death. He was active in good works and usefulness, efficient in the faithfulness with which at all times he discharged the varied responsibilities and duties connected with the temporal economy and prosperity of the church, and consistent in the godliness of mind which was ever manifest in his life and conversation, maintaining throughout life the confidence and respect of all who knew him. "For whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

MARY E. BENNET was born in the State of South Carolina, and from there moved to Alabama, and in that State she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. Afterward she moved to Louisiana, and died in her eighty-sixth year. She joined the church when she was twenty years of age, and remained a devoted Christian until she died, without a stain on her character from the time she attached herself to the church. I had the privilege of visiting Sister Bennet during her last moments. I never knew a lady more fully resigned to the will of God than she was. She conversed freely about death. She said she had no dread of it. She was patient in her affliction. She called her children and friends around her, and requested them to meet her in heaven. Her place is vacant in the community and in the church, but her home is heaven. She died in the full triumphs of a living faith on the twenty-third of November, 1872.

It Got Agoing.

One bright Fourth of July morning I was driving to town. As I came to the top of the hill just above the bridge, on the outskirts of the place, a little boy from a cottage on the north side of the road fired off a small cannon. He was so near the road, the cannon made so big a noise, and the whole thing came so unexpectedly, that my little bay pony took fright and shied, with a spring, to the other side of the road. He not only nearly overturned the carriage in doing so, but was with great difficulty reined in and prevented from running away.

"You should not fire your cannon so near the road," said I to the little boy, after I had got the pony somewhat quiet; "you frightened my horse badly, and nearly made him run away."

"I didn't mean to," said the little boy; "but it got agoing before I saw the horse, and then I couldn't stop it."

I said no more, but drove on, thinking of the boy's answer, as I have often thought of it since, though all this happened years ago.

What I have thought is this: I wish I could make every boy think of it and feel it. It would do him ever so much good, especially if he would try to apply it to all his actions. That little boy's cannon was just like his habits—just like everybody's habits. Habits, like the cannon, are not easy to stop when once they get started. They are pretty sure to keep going until, if they are bad habits, they do mischief, in spite of all we can do to stop them. If you get in a habit of telling wrong stories, you can't so easily stop it. If you get a habit of meddling dishonestly with what don't belong to you, it is apt to go on until it does some terrible mischief. If you get into the habit of being idle, and wasting your time and opportunities, be sure it will not stop and change to a good habit, just when you see how bad it is, and wish to get out of it.

Look out, then, for the beginning of a bad habit. Remember they are things that, like the cannon, you can't easily stop when you once set them agoing.—Observer.

CHARLES D. WARNER writes in regard to the moral uses of baked beans: Not to have baked beans on Sunday is still, in some parts of New England, a fracture of the twelfth commandment. The bean figures largely in the economy of the old Bay State. It has its moral as well as its official uses. It is given to the inmates of the State prison at Charlestown, and is made a moral test of character. In the kitchen there I have seen rows of convicts seated at the long table, sorting over the beans for next day's dinner—throwing away the black and imperfect ones. This is the first step toward awakening in these degraded beings the distinction between good and bad. When they have learned to sort out the bad beans they have taken one step in the formation of a moral character. So solicitous is this State of the morals of all her children.

A SOFT-TONED BELL.—Rev. Azel Backus, D. D., was a graduate of Yale, and became president of Hamilton College. It was in the good old days when they had prayers and recitations before breakfast, so that early rising was in order. The chapel bell was moderate in size and feeble in utterance, and it became a standing excuse for "sleeping over:" "I didn't hear the bell!" At last, one morning, the president himself was late at morning prayers, and as he opened the Bible to commence the service he delighted the boys by indorsing their own threadbare excuse: "The fact is, young gentlemen, I didn't hear the bell. And no wonder, for it scarcely makes more noise than would the shaking of a fur cap with a sheep's tail for a clapper."

THE POPULAR VOTE FOR PRESIDENT.—It appears that Mr. Greeley made a pretty good run for President, after all. While General Grant received most of the electoral votes, his popular vote was not so very far ahead of his opponent. We copy the following statement from a reliable source:

Mr. Greeley, if he had not died, would have received sixty-six electoral votes, against three hundred cast for General Grant. Nothing like this difference exists in the popular vote, General Grant's vote being 3,592,984, against 2,833,817 for Greeley, giving the former a majority of 759,137.

A GENTLEMAN gave a letter of introduction to a student of music about to visit Leipsic, who wished to put himself under the instruction of Prof. ——, a famous teacher of music in that city. Upon the student's return home the gentleman asked:

"How did you like Prof. ——?"

"Oh! wonderfully. He gave me fine lessons; but he is a very singular man. He kept praying all the time he was teaching me."

"Praying! Why, what do you mean?"

"Well, while I was playing he clasped his hands, lifted his eyes to the ceiling, and kept saying: 'Good Lord! what sin have I committed to deserve this punishment?'"

AN INVALID FOR LIFE.

Destined for life to pain,
I suffering lie and see the years go by;
No voice of sympathy, no loved ones nigh,
To bring me hope again.

It was not always so;
There was a time when friends were ever near;
I felt through sorrow that with love so dear
My lot was blest below.

But on one dreadful day
There came the shadow of a grief so near;
So great, so terrible, in deadly fear,
I trembling shrank away.

For tortured nerves could bear
No more the sound of even Love's tender tone,
Although through suffering's hour each friend had grown
To me more doubly dear.

In anguish then I cried;
"Not this, my Father. Take all else below;
Spare but one friend to cheer me as I go."
Aloud no voice replied.

But earth had darker grown;
And one by one I saw my friends depart,
Each taking portions of my bleeding heart,
Till I was left alone.

My prayer had been in vain;
And nights I wet my pillow with my tears,
And mourned for friends who through the coming years
I ne'er might see again;

Until one blessed night
There came a form so fair, so sad to see;
Reproachfully it raised its hand to me:
"Hast thou forgotten quite

When this I did for thee?
Behold my hands, behold my bleeding feet;
Thou ask'st one friend—was ever love replete
With such a sympathy?"

Blest thought! my prayer was heard;
I gazed entranced and saw the clouds depart
Till every nerve was thrilled, and in my heart
The fountain-depths were stirred.

No longer now alone;
Bright visions come to cheer me on the way,
And Love's ecstatic bliss turns night to day—
My Friend, my only one.

Chaldean Account of the Deluge.

Mr. George Smith, says the Christian Intelligencer, an oriental scholar of the highest rank, has recently given to the world the results of his studies, prosecuted for many years, in deciphering the cuneiform inscriptions upon the tablets, slabs, broken crockery and tiles dug up by Mr. Layard and other explorers in Asia. Some of these, as it has transpired, recounted the events that occurred in the reign of King Assurbanipal, some four thousand years ago, and have been buried out of sight of man, with Nineveh, since its destruction. The principal of these inscriptions are upon bits of broken crockery, and pantile, some black, some white or cream-colored, and others red or pink, every piece bearing on one side a neat, close inscription in the cuneiform (or wedge or arrow-form) character. The precision of the script is remarkable, its lines being packed together nearly as closely as the types in a modern newspaper, and each character is impressed with a delicacy and exactness of touch almost equal to type. It was evidently traced on fresh slabs of clay, after which it was baked in a potter's kiln, and was thus (to use a modern word) stereotyped, to be preserved for a thousand years in all its perfection.

These inscriptions have been deciphered by Mr. George Smith, counseled and assisted by Sir H. Rawlinson, the latter of whom constructed a vocabulary for arrow-headed script, which gives the exact signification of the cuneiform characters, though their sounds are and will ever remain unrevealed. For fourteen years Mr. Smith and his coadjutors have prosecutgel this difficult research; and, as one of its results, he is able to give to the world a translation of the Chaldean account of the deluge and the ark, derived from reunited broken tiles and slabs exhumed at Nineveh. This translation possesses peculiar interest to scholars and lovers of the Bible, and is as follows:

"I caused to go up into the ship all my male and female servants, the beasts of the field, the animals of the field and the sons of the army—all of them, I caused to go up. A flood Shamas made, and he spake saying in the night: 'I will cause it to rain from heaven heavily;' enter to the midst of the ship, and shut thy door. A flood he raised, and he spake saying in the night: 'I will cause it to rain from heaven heavily.' In the day that I celebrate his festival, the day which he had appointed; fear I had, I entered to the midst of the ship, and shut my door; to guide the ship to Buzursadirabi the pilot, the palace I gave to his hand. The raging of a storm in the morning arose from the horizon of heaven, extending and wide Vul in the midst of it thundered, and Nebo and Sarn went in front; the throne-bearers went over mountains and plains; the destroyer Nergal overturned; Ninip went in front, and cast down; the spirits carried destruction; in their glory they swept the earth; of Vul the flood reached to heaven; the bright earth to a waste was turned; the surface of the earth, like * * * it swept; it destroyed all life, from the face of the earth * * * the strong tempest over the people reached to heaven. Brother saw not his brother, it did not spare the people. In heaven the gods feared the tempest, and sought refuge; they ascended to the heaven of Anu. The gods like dogs with tails hidden couched down. Spake Ishtar a discourse, uttered the great goddess her speech. The world to sin has turned, and then I in the presence of the gods prophesied evil; when I prophesied in the presence of the gods evil, to evil were devoted all my people, and I prophesied thus: 'I have begotten man and let him not like the sons of the fisher fill the sea.' The gods concerning the spirits were weeping with her; the gods in seats, seated in lamentation; covered were their lips for the coming evil. Six days and nights passed, the wind, tempest and storm overwhelmed, on the seventh day in its course was calmed the storm, and all the tempest, which had destroyed like an earthquake, quieted. The sea he caused to dry, and the wind and tempest ended. I was carried through the sea. The doer of evil, and the whole of mankind who turned to sin, like reeds their corpses floated. I opened the window, and the light broke in, over my refuge it passed; I sat still and over my refuge came pence. I was carried over the shore, at the boundary of the sea, for twelve measures it ascended over the land. To the country of Nizir went the ship; the mountain of Nizir stopped the ship, and to pass over it it was not able. The first day and the second day, the mountain of Nizir the same. The third day and the fourth day, the mountain of Nizir the same. The fifth and sixth, the mountain of Nizir the same. On the seventh day in the course of it I sent forth a dove, and it left. The dove went and searched and a resting-place it did not find, and it returned. I sent forth a swallow, and it left. The swallow went and searched and a resting-place it did not find, and it returned. I sent a raven, and it left. The raven went, and the corpses on the water it saw and it did eat, it swam, and it wandered away, and did not return.

"I sent the animals forth to the four winds, I poured out a libation, I built an altar on the peak of the mountain, by seven herbs I cut, at the bottom of them I placed reeds, pines and simgar. The gods collected at its burning, the gods collected at its good burning, the gods like sumbe over the sacrifice gathered. From of old also the great God in his course, the great brightness of Anu had created; when the glory of these gods, as of Lkai stone, on my countenance I could not endure; in those days I prayed that forever I might not endure. May the gods come to my altar; may Bel not come to my altar, for he did not consider and had made a tempest and my people he had consigned to the deep from of old, also Bel in his course saw the ship, and went Bel with anger filled to the gods and spirits; let not any one come out alive, let not a man be saved from the deep. Ninip his mouth opened and spake, and said to the warrior Bel: 'Who, then, will be saved?' Hea the words understood, and Hea knew all things, Hea his mouth opened and spake, and said to the warrior Bel: 'Thou prince of the gods, the warrior, when thou wast angry a tempest thou makest, the doer of sin did his sin, the doer of evil did his evil, may the exalted be not broken, may the captive not be delivered; instead of thee making a tempest may lions increase and men be reduced; instead of thee making a tempest, may leopards increase and men be reduced; instead of thee making a tempest may a famine happen and the country be destroyed; instead of thee making a tempest, may pestilence increase and men be destroyed. I did not peer into the wisdom of the gods, reverent and attentive, a dream they sent, and the wisdom of the gods he heard. When this judgment was accomplished, Bel went up to the midst of the ship; he took my hand and brought me out, me he brought out, he caused me to bring my wife to my side, he purified the country, he established in a covenant and took the people near the presence of Sisit, and the people when Sisit and his wife and the people to be like the gods were carried away, then dwelt Sisit in a remote place at the mouth of the rivers; they took me in a remote place at the mouth of the rivers, they seated me, when to thee whom the gods had chosen, thee and the life which thou hast sought, after thou shalt gain this do for six days and seven nights like I say also, in bonds bind him the way like a storm shall be laid upon him. Sisit after this manner said to his wife, I announced that the chief who grasps at life the way like a storm shall be laid upon him. His wife after this manner said to Sisit afar off: Purify him and let the man be sent away the road that he came, may he return in peace, the great gate open, and may he return to his country. Sisit after this manner, said to his wife, the cry of a man alarms thee, this do, his scarlet cloth place on his head, and the day when he ascended the side of the ship, she did, his scarlet cloth she placed on his head, and the day when he ascended on the side of the ship."

Preparation for Family Worship.

When we began housekeeping, said Mr. Lyman, we fell into the routine style of family worship—a chapter each day, in inexorable course, with a book-mark to keep the place, lest we should forget which chapter we read the previous morning, and a prayer which went the usual round of stereotyped petition. We were not heartless in it by any means, though it seems almost heartless now as I look back on it and think how much more heart we might have put in it. But as the children grew up to an age when they ought to take some interest in it, I woke with a sort of start, one day, to the fact of what a listless, unnutritious exercise it was to them. I saw that Johnny's thoughts were generally somewhere else, and that my amen brought a welcome release to the body that had not been able to wander with them. One night we talked it over, my wife and I, after we went to bed. It seemed to us that family worship ought to be made more interesting to little folks than it was to us when we were children; than it had been to our children. And, little by little, we have felt our way into our present method. First, I determined to see what I could do to make our Scripture reading more interesting. I decided that it was just as well worth while to "prepare" for the chapter I read at family prayers as for the lesson I taught at Sunday school. At first it seemed impossible to do this seven times a week; and for awhile I made floundering work of it, until I hit upon my present practice. I keep my Bible on my desk at the bank, and I find enough snatches of leisure in the busiest day, by looking out for them, even if none of them are more than two minutes long, to familiarize myself with the portion to be read the next morning. Then, as I go to and from my meals, I turn it over in my mind. If there are points that I am not clear upon, I take down my commentary for a few moments after supper or before breakfast, and post myself. I keep an eye out during the day for any incident that may illustrate any part of it for the children, or try to recall some fact from my reading or past experience that may serve the same purpose. I am busier than most men, but I have no difficulty, by watching my opportunities, in finding time for all this. And the difference in the relish with which I take up the Bible at family worship, after such preparation, is more than any one can imagine who has not tried it. To have the word near me as the reserve topic of thought in the intervals of business I find a great gain also. It keeps me in just the spiritual atmosphere that I need; and time and again has it happened that the truth in the chapter for the day has come to me in some exigency of temptation, or some opportunity for Christian service, as if God had spoken it for that very hour. I feel as if I could not afford to get along in the old way at all. Besides, if it were not for some such plan as this, I should be apt to let the months slip by with almost no systematic study of the Bible whatever. Mrs. Lyman does much the same thing during the day, as she has opportunity, and she selects beforehand the hymn that we shall sing. Sometimes we sing the tunes the children have learned in Sunday school; but more often the good old church tunes that wear so well, and that the children quickly learn to love full as much as the galloping Sunday school music. I find it quickens their interest greatly to question them briefly on what we read the day before, especially to let them put the story into their own words. It is twice as much their own then as it was before.

I have concluded, too, that it is little short of irreverence to rush into the presence of God in prayer without some consideration beforehand of what I am to say to him. While I am dressing in the morning, or hoeing in the garden, or filling the furnace, as the case may be, I run over in my mind the appropriate subjects for thanksgiving and supplication that day. I often say to myself, as I kneel down: "Now do not let me utter a word that I do not feel." I dread to get into a rut of phrases, where a prayer may run smoothly with so little heart in it.—J. B. T. Marsh, in Christian Union.

American Religious Journals.

The Herald and Presbyter gives, from Evans & Co.'s Advertising Hand-Book, the circulation of leading denominational papers in the United States, especially those of its own church. They are as follows:

|---|---|
| Evangelist, New York | 15,000 |
| Presbyterian, Philadelphia | 20,000 |
| Presbyterian Banner, Pittsburg | 10,000 |
| Herald and Presbyter, Cincinnati | 15,000 |
| Interior, Chicago | 12,000 |
| Total | 76,000 |

It adds that "the Occident, of San Francisco, is not in the list. Its circulation is probably 3,000, which makes the whole 79,000. This amounts to one paper for every five and eighty-five-hundreths of our 468,164 communicants. The New York Observer, which claims to be undenominational, is reported as having 24,000 subscribers, at least one-half of whom we presume are Presbyterians. Counting this with the Presbyterian papers, we have about one paper for every five communicants, which is, perhaps, one for each family in our church. Inasmuch, however, as many families take more than one paper, it may be supposed that about one-fifth of our families take no Presbyterian paper."

The editor thinks that, according to these facts, the families of the Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal Church are about equally supplied with papers. We doubt the statement; for while all the Presbyterian papers named are "independent," or unofficial, all the Methodist ones, or nearly all, with which the comparison is made, are "official;" whereas the "independent" or unofficial journals of the Methodist Episcopal Church are nearly as numerous as the official ones, though with less circulation. The Methodist has a larger circulation than any one of the Presbyterian papers in the above table. It will soon, according to present prospects, be up to the New York Observer. It is now next to the two "officials," issued respectively at the Eastern and Western Book Concerns. This ranks it third in our numerous journalism.

The circulation of Baptist papers, as cited in the Herald and Presbyter, is as follows:

|---|---|
| Zion's Advocate, Maine | 3,500 |
| Watchman and Reflector, Boston | 19,000 |
| Christian Era, Massachusetts | 7,000 |
| Baptist Union, New York | 6,000 |
| Baptist Weekly, New York | 7,000 |
| Examiner and Chronicle, New York | 30,000 |
| National Baptist, Philadelphia | 8,000 |
| Religious Herald, Richmond | 10,500 |
| Western Recorder, Louisville | 6,000 |
| Journal and Messenger, Cincinnati | 6,000 |
| Central Baptist, St. Louis | 7,500 |
| Standard, Chicago | 25,000 |
| Total | 130,500 |

We cannot say how accurate this table is, but if correct it does not show well for our Baptist brethren in comparison with the Methodists. It includes Southern as well as Northern Baptists; but it is not more than about two-thirds the circulation of Northern Methodist papers alone, to say nothing of all the periodicals of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.—Methodist.

THERE is nothing more characteristic, said Sydney Smith, than shakes of the hand. I have classified them. There is the high official—the body erect, and a rapid-shot shake, near the chin. There is the mortmain—the flat hand introduced into your palm, and hardly conscious of its contiguity. The digital—one finger held out, much used by the high clergy. There is the shakus rusticus—when your hand is seized in an iron grasp, betokening rude health, warm heart, and distance from the metropolis, but producing a strong sense of relief on your part when you find your fingers unbroken. The next to this is the retentive shake—one which, beginning with vigor, pauses, as it were, to take breath, but without relinquishing its prey, and, before you are aware, begins again, till you feel anxious as to the result, and have no shake left in you.

IN ALL temptations be not discouraged. Those surges may be not to break thee, but to heave thee off thyself on the Rock Christ.—Thomas Wilcoks.

Adorn the Doctrine.

BY REV. WENDELL PRIME.

To make a beautiful thing is not the same as to make a thing beautiful. We do the first, that we may do the last. An artist makes a beautiful statue, but the statue makes the palace or the city beautiful. We use beauty to adorn. This is beauty's work. Foliage is beautiful, but it adorns the hills. The hills are beautiful, but they adorn the landscape. All this beauty is a ministering spirit, sent forth to make something else more beautiful, desirable and illustrious.

In writing to Titus, Paul speaks of disciples in the humblest class, so living that they adorn the doctrine of God, our Savior. We do not know of a similar expression in Scripture. There are many passages where Christian graces are called ornaments, and where persons are spoken of as jewels. But this idea of believers adorning the teaching of Christ is as peculiar as it is striking. If it is "wasteful and ridiculous excess" to gild refined gold, to paint the lily, to add another hue unto the rainbow, what must it be to make more beautiful the doctrine of God, our Savior? But it is not impossible, as we may see, when we look at the matter in the most practical way. Even the humblest believer may adorn the doctrine by holding it in its purity. In this way chiefly are very rare and beautiful things adorned, as diamonds and other gems. Their best setting is that which preserves from injury and keeps unsullied. We must preserve the doctrine in its simplicity if we would make it appear beautiful. Addition is more fatal to beauty than subtraction. Some of the most valued marbles in the Vatican are fragments. Remove an arm or a portion of the body from a statue, and the rest may be still a wonder of beauty; but add a superfluous limb to a work of art, or prolong an important feature, and the whole is ruined. How many seem to forget all this in their treatment of the doctrine. They are very strenuous about not giving up one jot or tittle, but have no conscience whatever about adding according to the most lawless fancy. Churches and sects have treated the doctrine like a captive princess, putting an unseemly robe about her person, hanging ugly gew-gaws around her neck, fastening clumsy trinkets about her limbs, and then, after disguising as far as possible her beauty, they lift up the voice of lamentation because their doctrine is not admired. Inspiration, that gives the doctrine, closes with a curse as great for him who adds as for him who takes away.

Another way to adorn the doctrine is to give it a good position. Painters are very particular as to where and how their pictures hang, for they know how much a beautiful thing is adorned by having a good position. Sculptors are equally careful about the height and surroundings of the pedestal that is to sustain their work. When we bring out the doctrine of Christ in the clear light of a faithful testimony, and make it appear to be what it truly is—a strong tower, a sure defense, a shining bulwark—we adorn the doctrine of God, our Savior. In doing this we do not exalt ourselves or make our own virtues conspicuous; but, on the contrary, all our effort secures the exaltation of something else, even the truth of God. Much of our prayer and almsgiving ought to be in secret, but there is no humility nor grace of any kind in keeping our faith secret, and hiding the candle of the word under a bed or a bushel.

But there is no adornment for the doctrine like a holy life. A ray of light is pure and beautiful, but intercept it with a prism, and behold what an unknown wealth of varied color the gorgeous apparel with which God clothes the lilies of the field. So a holy life receives and transmits the gospel ray, revealing powers and beauties in the letter, through the Spirit, that gives it life. It is often remarked that a large portion of the Scripture is historical, and concerns the lives and experiences of mortals like ourselves. We are taught as much by incidents and facts as by didactic statements. Thus God has adorned the doctrine that he makes known. The names, achievements and faith of those of whom the world was not worthy, are unfading gems upon the brow of heavenly wisdom.

George Herbert says:

"The Sundays of man's life,
Threaded together on Time's string,
Make bracelets to adorn the wife
Of the eternal, glorious King."

But all the days of a holy life are jewels, and Sundays are but golden links that bind together the circle of adornment for the doctrine of God, our Savior.—New York Observer.

IN THE Bulletin Mensuel, of the French Academy of Inscriptions, M. Joseph Halevy presents arguments to prove that the Lybic and Touarek alphabets were derived through the New Punic of Carthage from the Phœnician. Such excellent authorities as M. Renan and Derenbourg express their dissent from him, however, when he proceeds to argue that the Nubathean and Ethiopic alphabets are also derived from the Phœnician. In treating of that very interesting problem, the source of the old Phœnician, M. Halevy agrees with M. de Rouge, that it comes from the Egyptian, though he does not, with M. de Rouge, derive it from the hieratic character, such as is found of great antiquity in the papyrus Prisse, but directly from the hieroglyphic system. In a note, M. de Rouge combats the position of M. Halevy.

THE FOLLOWING TOAST was pronounced at a firemen's dinner, and was received with great applause: "The ladies—their eyes kindle the only flame against which there is no insurance."

IN MAKING our arrangements to live we should never forget that we have also to die.

JESUS will never tarry in a divided heart. He must be all or nothing.

Religious Intelligence.

THE new Protestant chapel in Madrid, Spain, continues to be well attended, the audience numbering from 250 to 300 persons.

THE Moravians, though only numbering 6,000 in this country and 15,000 in Europe, have sixteen missionary provinces, embracing 100 stations and out-stations.

THE Lutheran Church in America numbers 2,309 pastors, 4,115 congregations and 485,000 communicants. Last year were reported 2,175 pastors, 3,826 congregations and 458,000 communicants. There has been an increase during the year of 134 pastors, 289 congregations, and 27,000 communicants.

THE admissions to Henry Ward Beecher's church this year have been 197. The whole present membership of the church is 2,184. The number that have belonged to the church in the past, as well as the present, is 3,339. In the twenty-five years of its existence as Plymouth church, the average of admissions to the church every year has been 133 members.

THE Nassau Literary Magazine says that for the past five weeks there has been a deep feeling in the college (Princeton,) especially in the junior class. Six members of that class have lately made a public profession of religion, and the good work seems not to rest here. The class prayer meetings and those of the Philadelphia society are well attended, and the greatest interest is manifested.

THE Baptists of Mexico are making an effort to raise a church-building fund, the first church to be built in Monterey, where the call for a place of worship is at present most urgent. The pastors and members of the churches at Santa Rosa, Monterey and Pontreros all favor the project and will contribute as they are able; but they must depend in great measure upon contributions from American churches.

THE Congregationalist prints a clerical table of the denomination, which "will prove suggestive to many clergymen in reviewing the past year. We publish a list of sixty-two ministers deceased. The average age, so far as given, will be found to exceed sixty-two, a fact showing that ministers as a class are not short-lived men. The number of new churches organized during the year is 124, and we record 191 ordinations and installations."

REV. BISHOP ROBERTS writes from Liberia: "At several points the spiritual interests of the work are on the advance. At Monrovia, Cape Palmas, Careysburg and Caldwell protracted meetings are now in progress. Our rainy season, just closing, has been one of unusual scarcity of breadstuffs. Our preacher brother on the Queah mission station (among the natives) informs me that for several weeks he was reduced to the necessity of having but one meal per day for himself and family."

THE staff of Wesleyan missionaries in the West Indies numbers ninety, of whom one-third are natives, many of them very efficient and self-sacrificing men. One of their number, who has recently died, Edward Fraser, of Jamaica, a man of rare mental and spiritual gifts, being anxious to build a chapel and mission house, obtained with great difficulty the stone and wood requisite, and then sold his library, the accumulation of forty years, that he might have means to complete the building.

THE English Independent says there was a time when Mormonism flourished fairly in England. In 1851 there were in Great Britain 230 places of Mormon worship, with an attendance of about 17,000. Within the circle of the London Conference there were forty branches, with a gross total of 2,450 adherents. There are now only 1,693 members within the London Conference. In the course of last year there were only seventy-five baptized, and the emigrations numbered only seven.

COPENHAGEN, DENMARK.—We have received good news from our people in Copenhagen and vicinity. Their Sunday school in the city numbers 326; in Christianshevn, across the river, 116; in Skoshoved, 50; making in all 492. If they had a larger hall in the latter place they could easily have double the number of children. In Copenhagen our church is nearly filled every Sunday night; many souls have been converted, and twenty have united on probation within the past few weeks. Eight have been taken into connection.—Methodist.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SCHOLARS FROM BULGARIA.—Two young men from Tulteba, who were formerly and for several years members of the day and Sunday school of Rev. Mr. Flocken, are visiting our country to acquaint themselves with our manners and customs. They at first struck for the country, and took hold of the first thing which offered them any remuneration—one as a broom-maker—and they now both return to the city with money enough to cover the expenses of a term or two at one of our academies. They purpose on early return to their native country.

ANNUAL SALE OF PEWS IN PLYMOUTH CHURCH.—The annual auction sale of the pews in Plymouth church, in Brooklyn, took place last week. The nominal rental of the pews amounts to $12,800 a year, and never varies, and that sum was all that was received many years ago; but now every seat sells at a high premium, and the total amount of pew-rent now reaches nearly five times that sum annually. At the last sale $46,580.50 was realized, in excess of the rent, in premiums alone. With the sum realized from the sale of the chairs in the aisles, and the rent of $12,800, the total will be $60,230.50, against $50,875 last year.

MR. DEMING, of the Church Missionary Society, during a visit of some weeks at Antananarivo with the laborers of the London Missionary Society, notes some of the same evils among the Malagasy that tried the first missionary to the heathen in Corinth and Ephesus. He specifies a universal lack of reverence, which manifests itself in laughs and jokes during the most orderly religious services, as well as in their light and trifling manner of celebrating the Lord's Supper when no European is present, and the easily-besetting sins of ignorance, falsehood and theft. On the other hand, Mr. Deming observes, as hopeful signs in Imerina, a general reverence for the Bible, classes for its study being very popular; great zeal in preaching the gospel and a large attendance upon Sunday services, congregations of from 500 to 1,500 being found everywhere, and some even ranging as high as 2,000.

THE PROTESTANT SISTERHOOD.—The Times mentions the arrival at this port of three "Sisters of the Poor," lately attached to the Sisterhood of All Saints, in Margaret street, London. The work done by these sisters of the Episcopal Church, in the way of hospital and workhouse nursing, having attracted attention in this country, a leading Episcopal minister of Baltimore wrote to the lady superior, requesting that three well-trained sisters might be sent to that city for the purpose of establishing a similar home. Rev. Joseph Richey, of Mount Calvary church, Baltimore, met them on their arrival. The chief of the three, Sister Helen, is the daughter of the late Captain Bowden, of the English royal navy, and has an eventful history during the cholera season and the Franco-Prussian war. She has received several times the thanks of royalty. The sisters are attired in the costume of the order, which is similar to that worn by the Sisters of Mercy.—New York Observer.

MEXICO.—The Christian World contains a comprehensive statement of the inauguration and progress of Mexican evangelization, as presented by the American and Foreign Christian Union, which is of great interest. It gives the following extent and population of the country: "According to the latest authorities the Mexican republic has twenty-six States besides territories, an area of 778,281 square miles—between one-fourth and one-fifth of that of the United States—and a population of 9,173,452 souls. The northern portion is only sparsely inhabited; for the seven States and one territory which constitute this part of Mexico cover more than half the area of the republic, although possessing but about 1,000,000 inhabitants, or less than one-ninth of the entire population. Few countries are less homogeneous. The most trustworthy estimates set down the native or Indian element at about four-fifteenths of the whole population; the European at three-fifteenths, while the remainder, or a little more than one-half, is composed of the mixed descendants of Indians and Europeans." The following are some of the results of mission labors there under the direction of the American and Foreign Christian Union: "A deep and truly religious awakening is in progress. The American and Foreign Christian Union, though not long in the field (i. e., at the Mexican capital—Ed.) have already set up a printing-press, established a weekly religious paper, gathered forty (now nearly sixty—Ed.) congregations, employed twenty-six laborers, and circulated 100,000 pamphlets. Four converted Catholic priests are laboring with great zeal and success among their countrymen in the City of Mexico. The people hear them with great eagerness, and converts are rapidly increasing. Disinterested and impartial American residents in the City of Mexico give assurance that the readiness of the people to receive evangelical truth is so remarkable as to render this one of the most promising fields of usefulness in the world. * * * In no country have as great results followed so small an outlay of effort."

MISSIONS TO THE HEATHEN.—The year has been one of encouraging prosperity for missions in heathen countries. With but few small exceptions, all the well-established missions have held their own, and have advanced in proportion to their pecuniary resources and the strength of their working forces. Of the new fields, the most encouraging is Japan. A native church was organized at Yokohama on the tenth of March, with nine members. A house of worship has been built for it, which was dedicated on the third of September. The Japanese government seems undecided with regard to the toleration of Christianity, and is pursuing a neutral or temporizing course on the subject. The edicts against Christianity remain unrepealed, but the penalties which had been imposed upon a number of converts have been relaxed, and those who have more recently embraced Christianity have not been disturbed. A mission has been established on the Island of Formosa. The natives of this Island have hitherto been hostile to Christianity and to Europeans. In Thibet the Moravians relate the conversion of a Lamah, the son of the prime minister. This is the most important result which has been as yet obtained from missionary work in that country. In Egypt a large congregation of Armenians at Alexandria has bodily joined the church of the United Presbyterian mission. This mission has been invited by the rulers of Abyssinia to send a force of missionaries to that country. The success of Mr. Stanley's expedition in search of Dr. Livingstone and the letters of Dr. Livingstone have drawn attention to the east coast of Africa as a mission field. Preparations are already nearly matured by one of the Episcopal missionary societies to open a mission there. The success of the woman's missionary movement remains to be noticed. The women's societies, which are now in operation in nearly all the principal churches of the United States, have labored with exemplary zeal, and have achieved a success which is remarkable, in carrying the gospel to those classes who could not be reached by the ordinary agencies before existing. Their success is general in all the mission fields where they have planted themselves, alike in Mohammedan, in Buddhist and in Hindoo countries. They have proved themselves an agency of the greatest value.—Methodist.

Delay and Denial.

Not to confess Christ before men is substantially to deny him. We gather or scatter abroad. The purpose to become a Christian at some future time carries in itself the condemnation of him who entertains it. So far from being a claim to salvation, it is in itself a ground of forfeiture. It pre-supposes religious knowledge, conviction of sin, and an acknowledgment of the truth of the gospel, while action is postponed. We admit the danger growing out of the uncertainty of life, and many may concede that there are peculiar perils arising from the hardening influences of sin, and from a more unfavorable turn in the circumstances which surround us. Few, however, permit themselves to see in religious delay the aggravated guilt which it entails. Questions of right and of duty cannot be put aside for any consideration, especially to meet the convenience and temporal interests of those who are called to deny themselves and to follow him who died for them.

The sum and essence of all sin is committed at the point where the obligations and the necessity of religion are admitted, and the acceptance of salvation is deliberately put off to some future day. All the grounds of condemnation are present—the light which has come into the world, the special gracious influences which work conviction, the offer of pardon through Christ, and the persuasion that God is ready to receive and bless the returning penitent. To turn away from Jesus when thus importuned, and thus persuaded, is a most serious offense against his authority and his love. It is trifling with the Holy Spirit and an insult to the majesty of God. In the ordinary relations of life we do not propose to be honest to-morrow, or to be dutiful to our parents hereafter, while we are now violating every principle of integrity and filial affection. To propose to obey the laws of society at some distant day, while for the present we live in total disregard of them, would by no means satisfy the ends of good government, nor preserve the character from the stain of crime. Such a course would impart to wrong-doing a deliberation and a malice aforethought which makes iniquity more hideous and diabolical.

Why is it that we do not regard the matter in this light in our relations to God? To deliberately look forward to a season of sinning before repenting, and to fix in the mind some future point for obeying the gospel, is a common thing. Strange that men do not see the monstrous incongruity that there is between a present willful disobedience and the avowed intention of subsequent reformation! doing what we know to be wrong now, and deluding ourselves with the notion that all this will be reversed in a month or several months hence. And then, with this flat rejection of Christ, there is a feeling of complacency and satisfaction at the thought that the promised reformation stays the judgment and condemnation which our present sins would otherwise incur. Real repentance is never reached by working up to the point which we have long before set as the beginning of a new life. We doubt whether any man, deliberately sinning for the present, ever reformed at the appointed time. If it does take place then, it is through a mightier awakening than he ever knew before, and by the exposure of the guilt and self-deception of his past course of life. Until he sees and feels that delay and the denial of Christ are one and the same thing, and that his guilt has been intensified by projecting into the future the immediate duties of the hour, he will continue in his chosen path of unbelief and self-indulgence.

No amount of promises looking to future repentance, no plans or well-contrived expedients which shut Christ out of the heart to-day, can satisfy the demand of immediate obedience. To avoid the issue for a single hour is to place ourselves among the enemies of the Savior. Instead of conciliating we deny the Lord that bought us, and range ourselves with those who have rejected him as their Redeemer. We tremble for those whose denial of Christ takes this form of delay. They are much further from the kingdom than they suppose—worse every way than they imagine themselves to be. They are equally blinded to the dangers which surround them and to the character of their sin. They stand in slippery places. They are bound by a fatal spell while swiftly drifting to ruin. How shall the terrible sophistry be unmasked to the conscience so as to defeat the devil's wiles, and save these precious but deluded souls?

A Timely Caution.

The character of the church is affected by the material added to it by the labors of the ministry. The reward is to them that turn many to righteousness—to them that win souls and save souls from death. Getting people to join the church is not the main thing, though a very important object when they are prepared for it. There is danger that the church may become leavened with worldliness, and the standard of spirituality lowered by the extensive introduction of those who know nothing of real repentance, and who are strangers to the converting and sanctifying power of the Holy Spirit.

The door of admission should always be wide open for the sincere and contrite, but it should be at the same time carefully guarded against the entrance of those who have no penitential experience, and who do not fully feel and comprehend the obligations assumed. There is a strong temptation to unduly press this step upon the hearers of the gospel from motives of sectarian competition, or, from a desire to make a show of success and prosperity. Then, again, we may overestimate the value of church membership in securing the conversion of those who come in without a thorough religious awakening. This gathering of unripe fruit and the harvesting of immature grain may have the appearance of progress, while in fact the quality and soundness of the whole church are affected unfavorably. The purity and spirituality of the church must be guarded and preserved by careful discipline with reference to its actual members, and by watchfulness and discretion with reference to those who apply for admission. Where the repentance and conversion of souls is made the primary object, and church fellowship a duty and privilege following upon this experience, few mistakes are likely to occur. Then the numerical increase will indicate a positive accession of life and power, and will fairly represent what has been done in saving souls.

There are two sorts of material which may be gathered, or rather built upon the foundation, which is Jesus Christ. "Gold, silver, precious stones" are the elements of the spiritual temple, the materials out of which the walls of Zion should be constructed. "Wood, hay, stubble" are the things which may be permitted to enter into the sacred edifice. Whoever are the builders, it behooves them to take care. The souls saved will be the measure of reward. Only the "gold, silver, precious stones" will count in the time when "the day shall declare it," while the builder with perishable material shall suffer loss. In this connection we quote from Bishop Yeakel, in the Evangelical Messenger:

"The minister of the gospel, as the builder, is held responsible for the sort of materials he puts into God's building; hence God tries every man's (builder's) work with fire—something that constitutes such a searching test that nothing but the grace of God in the soul and its fruits in life can stand.

God wants only that which is real and true in his temple. Even a man who builds a house is very careful to use good and durable materials. If one would build a house consisting of wood, hay and stubble, especially when it was certain to be put to a fiery test, he would be regarded as "foolish," just as much as if he would build a house "upon the sand." And if a man would engage builders, to whom he would confide the work of building, and they did use such stuff, he would regard them as defrauders, and perhaps sue them for damages. And shall not God, whose spiritual temple the ministers of the gospel are engaged to build, be jealous of their work and bring it to trial and due reward? Yea, surely.

From these considerations it follows very clearly that it is a matter of the utmost importance to the preacher of the gospel, as well as to the respective souls, what kind of members he leads into the church of God—what kind of material he puts into God's building. God will put it and him to a fiery test.

Those who have builded with "gold, silver and precious stones"—"lively stones," as Peter calls them—representing men, women and children that have true repentance, faith and godliness, will not suffer loss, but have a great reward, even the "joy of the Lord." But not so the other class. They shall "suffer loss," and if saved themselves at all, they are saved only "as by fire." The fire will burn them considerably.

It is evident from the context that Paul has here reference to the condition of the church at Corinth, which he addresses. A selfish party spirit had introduced "envying, strife and division," and, instead of laboring for the glory of God and the salvation of souls, a number of the Corinthian leaders worked for parties. One said: "I am of Paul;" another: "And I am of Apollos; and I of Cephas; and I of Christ." The latter looked upon Christ, too, as a party leader. Each tried to gather around him some followers, and to bring such persons into the church as would strengthen his party and further his own objects and interests. Hence "divisions" resulted, and a carnal, selfish spirit caused "envyings and strife," which prevailed to a considerable extent.

From this it is evident that adding members to the church from any self-seeking motives—be it for personal interests, for a certain party, for popularity, to please men rather than God—instead of leading them through the straight gate to Christ, is putting into God's building, "wood, hay and stubble." It brings men into the church who lack the quality of "gold, silver and precious stones," who remain unchanged at heart, however they may have been affected in their uppermost feelings by a sentimental, evasive and fluttering method of bringing them into the church. They retain spiritually their old flimsy and combustible qualities of temporary good desires, a false hope, and superficial affections for the outward prosperity of the church until some fiery test burns them up, and they fall away even from an outward connection.

Bishop Marvin in Georgia.

The Bishop writes to the Southern Christian Advocate, January 1:

I have been greatly gratified, in the main, by my observations of the church in Georgia. It is a healthy, vigorous, growing body. The preachers generally are consecrated men, ready both to labor and suffer for the cause of the Master. There may be a few self-seeking men. It would be strange if there were not, in so large a body of men, some who should not measure up to the standard of devotion required by the Lord.

In one respect I am convinced that there is improvement in our ministry. I refer to the pastoral work proper. As pastoral charges become more limited in their area, it becomes at once practicable and necessary to give more minute attention to the flock, and our brethren are adjusting themselves with conscientious and faithful industry to the situation.

A very intelligent member of the North Georgia Conference remarked to me that "star preaching," so called, was in less favor in Georgia than ever heretofore; that the men who have the ear of the people are the solid men of the church—men of sound sense and deep piety. If this is true—and I do not question it—it is a healthy sign of the times.

I made especial inquiry at the Conferences on two points: family worship and the maintenance of wholesome discipline in the church. The information elicited was encouraging. Yet it was admitted in all cases that great numbers of families connected with the church have no home altar, no morning nor evening sacrifice. I cannot believe that there is any high state of personal religion maintained where this is the case. Nor can children be brought up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" where God is not habitually worshiped in the household. We must seek by all means to bring the members of the church to the practice of this great duty. There is a sad blank in that house where parents and children do not assemble in the morning and in the evening to read the Holy Scriptures and worship God together. A powerful check on evil tendencies is wanting in such a house.

The other point—the maintenance of godly discipline—is not less vital. No fidelity in the pulpit can prevent the influx of popular vices into the church, unless discipline be also administered with a firm and steady hand. Fashionable and worldly amusements will come in like a flood under a feeble and time-serving pastorate. And where the dance and its kindred follies are tolerated in the church, the feeling of consecration and all the elements of a godly life perish. The line between the church and the world must be sharply drawn and constantly maintained, or else the church will come to be merely a section of the world, with a pretense of religious forms. It is to be feared that especially in cities, and the more wealthy communities, discipline may be relaxed, and all self-denial come to be at a discount. Where there is no self-denial there is no spiritual life. In that case membership in the church tends but to deceive a man, and allay the fears that might otherwise lead him to repentance. The worldly man who affects to be religious is in a more dangerous condition than those who live in sin without any self-deception or pretense of piety.

Several presiding elders reported improvement in this respect. Let me exhort and conjure the preachers to fidelity. Let there be no relaxation. Let those who cannot be cured of those follies be excluded from the church. Leniency on the part of the church will but encourage a false hope of salvation on the part of those who are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." The church must not become a party to any such delusion. The church must not be allowed to be a mere way-station for the vain and foolish on their way to hell.

Flippant, pleasure-loving men and women will not be saved. If the church does not give them to understand this, she has herself become corrupt, and is allied with the powers of darkness to deceive men and lead them on to ruin. We must keep our garments unspotted from the world. We must be both sober and vigilant, for our adversary, the devil, goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. He is hungry for souls, and in his voracious urgency he will not fail to take advantage of the indifference and sluggishness of pastors to destroy the heedless and unintended lambs of the flock. We must all understand that self-denial is a vital condition of salvation. We must allow no fatal self-deception on this point to get abroad among our people. "The love of the world is enmity to God." "If any man love the world he is the enemy of God." These are solemn truths, and if we ignore them, or allow them to be ignored in the church, the result will be fatal. Souls will be bred for death at the very altars of religion, and the ordinances of the church will serve but to conceal from men their lost condition.

But I trust the true spirit of the pastoral office—the care of souls—is still alive among us, and that for the ages to come our sons and successors will faithfully feed and guard the flock of Christ. God is my witness that I desire the perpetuation of the Methodist Church no longer than she shall be the means of saving men from this present evil world and leading them to God. I should take no pleasure in our growing census if it should appear that the increase of numbers was made up of unregenerate men, who were no better for their connection with the church.

The financial report in both Conferences was encouraging. Many of the preachers, indeed, are on short rations, but by far the greater part of them have a comfortable support. In a few of the larger towns the contributions to the missionary work are very respectable; but, taking the State over, there ought to be a large increase. I regard it essential to the prosperity of the church that our missionary operations should be enlarged. We must become more aggressive. It is essential to our very life.

Dr. Pierce to Young Preachers.

We quote some paragraphs from Dr. Pierce's article No. I, in the Southern Christian Advocate. The experience and advice of this peerless and vetegan preacher are of inestimable value, and should be treasured up.

I am perhaps one by myself. In early life I was betrayed into the use of Simeon's skeletons—a series long enough to carry one of these retailers of other men's mental bones through life. But, fortunately for me, I soon discovered that my mind must work by the forces of its own genius, or quit. For while it worked smoothly and with but little friction along a pathway of its own engineering, it worked most unsatisfactorily upon every other man's. This suggested the corner-stone of the characteristic building which I projected for myself. I determined to be the architect of my own sermonizing; and simply because I found that my mind worked best when it used its own materials. I went so far as to determine never to stereotype any of my forms. I made no notes, but left my mind free, if I ever used that text again, to draw on it for such thoughts as the existing state of mind and feeling might work up to the best advantage. I was never tied down to say things just as I had said them before.

Out of those seemingly small things grew up a reputation—which I never claimed, but which was freely and constantly awarded me—for freedom from sameness, and readiness to preach anywhere; and as readily with five minutes' as with five days' notice, provided I was a visiting minister. Of course for a congregation to which I was preaching statedly from Sabbath to Sabbath, I should like more time.

My variety grew out of my never garnering up forms of sermons for future use, as if I felt assured that my mind had culminated. This I never allowed myself to believe for a moment. I always believed that my mind might take a loftier flight from some summit of its own creation; a broader, brighter view of the grand net-work of moral and spiritual principles as they combine into one beautiful web of heavenly warp and woof. Hence I left it entirely unfettered as to programme and manner of prosecution.

My constant readiness to preach so as never to parley, put off, and virtually prevaricate, in order to hide my emptiness, arose from the fact that I early conceived the opinion that for a man to study every text from which he might preach, as a student in his academic course would study the lessons of grammar, was an unnecessary waste of time. I therefore resolved to study theology as a grand whole, comprising all its several parts. This I did until I ascertained that all the time I needed to prepare for a good sermon for me, was time enough to settle my mind on a text, and determine what doctrines, duties and principles of salvation were contained in it. As soon as this was settled, having studied these doctrines, duties and principles thoroughly, and over and over again, I was prepared to go right on, leaving to the occasion the mere manner in which they should be presented. The truth is, I am continually turning my mind through those new tracts of territory in the vast field of revealed religion which close study discloses as only partially explored, if indeed any successful exploration at all has been made.

Now it seems perfectly plain to me that every preacher who would make any orderly and intelligent survey of the system of salvation as revealed in the Scriptures, must enter upon his theological studies with the determination to maintain original, self-reliant mind, so far at least as his mental endowments permit the exercise of the high prerogative; or he should retire from his assumed vocation. I have no idea that God ever called any man to preach by retailing the thoughts and words of others. Every one called of God to preach is called to constant study, and the ultimate design of this study is the proper division of the word of truth. When that is accomplished there will be no further necessity for study, and our high vocation will terminate in merely rehearsing what others have elaborated. But until that time comes—if it ever does—I am satisfied that the plan suggested is the only proper one for preachers to pursue.

I escaped the evil of merely rehearsing the results of other men's study by determining, early in life, never to commit to memory the utterances of others, to be quoted by me in my own pulpit efforts. My plan was to glean their great thoughts, their grand ideas, and then analyze and elaborate them in the crucible of my own mind; so that while the root idea might be from another mind, the development of it was from my own, and gave to it the semblance of entire originality. By this method I continually cultivated my mind; while by the other it would only have cultivated the faculty of memory. And just in proportion as I made myself dependent upon other minds for something to say, would I have diminished the power of my own to say that was original or inventive. I hold this therefore to be true: if a man cannot construct a sensible sermon from the laboratory of his own mind, he cannot preach, and it is a misnomer to call such a man a preacher. I can have no respect for any man's pulpit character who comes before his congregation with borrowed formularies.

As I have already said, I resolved early in my ministerial life, in the fear of God, never to refuse to preach when physically able to do it, or when properly invited, or when appointed in the natural working of our economy. I determined upon this course for myself, because I early saw in others what led me to believe that, as between themselves and God, they sometimes pressed heavily against the line which divides truth from falsehood. Now in vindication of the wisdom and safety of my method, I beg to say that in obeying the injunction, "Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season," I have preached scores of sermons, some of them the most successful of my life, upon what might be regarded, as no previous notice. On steamboats, in cities and villages, in long journeys to and from General Conferences in company with a half dozen other delegates, in the days of saddle and sulky travel, a sermon to the people being suddenly called for, in every instance, save one, the duty was devolved upon me. Not because I was the greatest preacher, but because I was the only impromptu preacher, the only one who never used notes, and therefore did not have to have my crutches with me in order to stand in the place to which God had called me. How any man can fill this office properly, and yet cripple himself by cultivating dependence upon artificial props, instead of natural promptings and inspirations, surpasses my comprehension.

What They Think of Us.

MR. EDITOR: You may not know what strange views the Chinese have in regard to the religion we profess to teach them. I will give you a short notice which appeared in a Chinese newspaper a few days since, and this paper is conducted by a foreigner. It reads thus:

I had a talk with a European about Protestant and Catholic religions, from which I understand that, although in Europe few people are acquainted with the Christian religion, but few, however, believe in it after they have grown up to think for themselves. Formerly, when science had as yet made little progress in European empires, there was not one man that did not believe in it; for had one unbeliever been found out he would have been forthwith doomed to death. Therefore people dared not speak aloud, although they had some doubts. In later years science has been progressing every day, and religion has gradually decayed. Why so? Because the doctrines of the Western religion are for the most part opposed to reason. Their falsehood can be proved by astronomy, philosophy and science. This is the reason why, the more science advances, the more religion falls off. Such is now-a-days the state of things; after a few hundred years there shall be no more either Protestant or Catholic religion in Europe. But why do people not yet give up this religion altogether? There are, of course, some causes for it. Perhaps some stick stubbornly to old institutions. Besides, the teachings of this religion are not openly adverse to human feelings, and they are not very dangerous to governments. All this reasoning is gathered from conversation with my European friend. As for me, I cannot understand why Europeans came to China to propagate a religion that is decaying in their own country. As they have been enlightened only of late, do they imagine that Chinese shall not be enlightened also? Is it possible to teach Chinese a religion contrary to reason? How mistaken they are! I know all about it. The Chinese that are taken up with their religion are only ignorant people, without literary instruction. Never did I hear that a learned man persevered in their religion; and I know for certain that all Europeans shall not for millions of years seduce one man of letters. In China there is but one religion; and although philosophy and other sciences are progressing, still the great religion of Confucius shall stand forever. I think Europeans are well aware of this.

Hoping this may amuse some of your readers, I remain yours, etc.,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Death of an Ex-President of the British Conference.

Rev. William Shaw, founder of the British Wesleyan mission in South Africa, and one of the ex-presidents of the British Wesleyan Conference, died in great peace at his late residence, Brixton-Rise, London, December 4. His life was one of great usefulness, as it was one of much prominence. He was the chaplain of the first English colony, chiefly Wesleyans, which settled in South Africa. In 1860, after spending thirty-seven years in that country, loved and honored by natives and foreigners, he returned to England. In 1865 he was elected president of the British Conference.

A writer in the London Methodist Recorder says no sign of breaking up gave notice of his approaching end. At the last Conference, in the educational debate he moved the amendment on Mr. Arthur's motion in a speech of great vigor. The closing act of his public life was linked with missions everywhere, but especially in Africa, and strikingly showed the man. Mr. and Mrs. Calvert were sailing for the cape, and Mr. Shaw went to Southampton to see them off. As they stood on deck it rained and blew, and the officer was receiving the mail and noting down each bag. Mr. Shaw stood to windward of him holding his umbrella over him, and when Mrs. Shaw, afraid of the consequences, remonstrated, he said: "Courage and courtesy required me to shelter the officer." And so by courage and courtesy he exposed himself to the chill from which he never recovered.

On Sunday, December 1, Mr. Arthur saw him. His countenance was sweet, his voice sound, his mind clear, his manner full of love and gentleness. Said the dying minister: "Though in my present circumstances I deeply feel my nothingness and less than nothingness, the Lord is exceeding good, and whatever he is about to do with me it is well." Then followed some words of personal affection, and the two missionaries, who had lately stood on opposite sides of the education question, felt, in united prayer and mutual smiles and tears, the blessing of that true love which twines together the servants of God, and, above all men, Methodist preachers.—Methodist Recorder.

WE SEE from a statement in one of our papers that the irrepressible Father Burke has been ordered to Rome. Judging from his utterances here and elsewhere, he needs to be taken care of. His loose rendering of history, and palpable errors and misstatements about the facts and influences of Catholicism are damaging popery more than Kirwan or Froude. The blessings which Romanism has conferred upon Italy, Spain, Mexico, and especially upon Ireland, are too conspicuous. His oratorical effusions on this subject savor more of the blarney-stone than of historical verity. The holy father will do well to house this champion of the faith for a time in the Vatican, that he may be put through a course of tactics, if not of history. Seriously, Father Burke may be most sincere and eloquent, but if he has been fairly reported by the press, his lectures and sermons have been of a character to scarcely command the respect of the Catholics themselves.

WE WERE not able last week to procure a copy of the report on the Bible cause adopted by the Louisiana Conference at its recent session. Neither are we able now to find it, as the records are not at hand. The Conference, however, passed resolutions expressing their co-operation with the Southwestern Bible Society, and recommending that collections be taken up annually in our congregations for the benefit of the society. The Conference was hearty and unanimous in its indorsement of this important cause, and we trust that our preachers will not forget to take the collections.

REV. R. J. BALDWIN, M. D., transferred from the South Georgia to the Louisiana Conference, gave us a call on Wednesday, the twenty-ninth instant. He expected to leave for his appointment, Opelousas, on Thursday evening. The doctor is looking well, and we welcome him to our ranks. We have no doubt his new flock will receive him cordially, and make him feel at once that he is at home, and surrounded by a praying and generous people.

WE WERE not able to attend the anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society, which took place at the First Presbyterian church of this city. We learn that the occasion was one of great interest, and that the most of the Protestant churches were well represented. The address of Dr. Taylor we have heard highly commended.

BRO. DAVID AYERS, the veteran church-builder of Galveston, sends us a photograph of the St. James church as it is to be. If completed according to this plan and model, it will be a most beautiful structure, an ornament to Galveston and a lasting monument to the memory of him who has projected the enterprise.

REV. DR. ROBERT M. TARRANT, a local preacher, but for many years a member of the Memphis Conference, died at his residence, Obion county, Tennessee, January 12, 1873.

REV. W. A. COBB, of the White River Conference, died January 20.

Where Would You Expect to Find Them?

NOT A "POLITICAL CHURCH!"

MR. EDITOR: The nation has been alarmed, and stirred by the information, that the public men elected and claiming to be elected to office in Louisiana are divided into two parties—the one elected by a clear and indisputable majority of thousands, the other resorting to violence, fraud and even perjury to sustain itself. Each claims to be the rightful Legislature of the State. While this struggle for place and power is pending, two Northern Methodist Bishops, entire strangers in the South, make their appearance in New Orleans, and, feeling called upon by the duties of their office to take sides in this State conflict and mingle in this strife, they proceed, one to the House of Representatives and the other to the Senate of one of these contesting parties, appear in public and pray for these respective bodies, and then retire into the private room of the leader of that party, and are closeted with him for a season to afford aid and comfort. Now which of these two parties does the reader suppose these worthy successors of Asbury selected? We leave him to guess.

Qnery: If the committee appointed by Congress to inquire into the condition of things in Louisiana shall decide that fraud and violence alone sustain the party with which these self-denying, cross-bearing sons of Wesley, affiliated, what then?

These are the men who long for Methodist unity. ALABAMA.

Mississippi Conference Minutes.

MR. EDITOR: Let me say, through your paper, to the members of the Mississippi Conference that the money paid in to publish their Minutes proved to be only about one-third of the amount needed. Rev. R. J. Harp has undertaken to procure the sum necessary by advertisements, and thinks he will succeed. I forwarded the manuscripts to him soon after Conference, and have also given him the funds and the names and addresses of persons paying them. Parties interested, and those desiring to obtain copies of Minutes can address him. C. G. ANDREWS.

JACKSON, LA., Jan. 18, 1873.

THE Texas Christian Advocate of January 1 says: "The Rev. A. G. Stacy, A. M., formerly of the South Carolina Conference, and late president of the Mecklenburg Female College, of North Carolina, and at present pastor of Palestine station, East Texas Conference, has assumed the presidency of the female college at Palestine. Bro. Stacy is well known as the author of 'Service of Song,' a work which has been perhaps more highly commended than any issued by the Southern Methodist press. He brings ample testimonials respecting his experience as an educator, and will no doubt render efficient service in this important field."

"MOTHER, this book tells about the angry waves of the ocean. Now what makes the ocean get angry?", "Because it has been crossed so often, my son."

MARRIED.

NEW ORLEANS MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.—We take pleasure in calling attention to the thirteenth annual statement of the above-named popular and deserving company in another column. We have ever found the officers clever and obliging, and prompt in their attention to business. The statement to which we refer speaks for itself, and which, with the names of the officers and directors, is an ample guarantee to those availing themselves of the protection offered by the company.

CHEAP CHANDELIERS.—The Septoline Oil Company have now on exhibition, at No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, a new style of metal chandeliers that is certainly a very neat, substantial, and at the same time cheap illuminator. They use from two to eight branches, are made here, and must be largely patronized.

BETHESDA MINERAL WATER.—For those afflicted with Bright's disease, diabetes, liver and billious affections, kidney and urinary diseases, we are assured the water of these celebrated springs is of the greatest benefit. The water can be obtained in any quantity through the agent here, Mr. H. D. Hoff, No. 38 Magazine street.

NEW ORLEANS STENCIL WORKS AND MAGIC BATTERY MANUFACTORY.—We call attention to the advertisement of Messrs. George E. Teetzel & Co., No. 145 Gravier street, who are manufacturers of all kinds of cotton brands, stencil plates, stamps, seal presses, etc.

BECKWITH SEWING MACHINE.—Our friends in want of a sewing machine would do well, we think, to investigate the merits of this machine before buying. They must recollect that this is an age of improvement.

CRESCENT MACHINE SHOP.—This establishment, at the corner of St. Joseph and Constance streets, is prepared to do all kinds of blacksmithing, repairing, etc. See advertisement elsewhere.

JAPAN bedroom sets, worth $6.50, are now selling, at the Septoline Oil Company's rooms, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, at the irresistible prices of from $2.50 to $3.50 a set.

THE NEW WILSON UNDERFEED SEWING MACHINE.—Messrs. William Gregg & Co., No. 189 Canal street, are the general Southern agents for this excellent sewing machine.

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of persons in search of a commercial education to Bolbear College, 201 and 203 Chna street. de12 3m

BUSINESS NOTICES.

A WARNING.—Dr. Abernethy once affirmed that his mistakes would fill a grave-yard; and if this confession sprang from so eminent an authority as this distinguished English Esculapius, how many grave-yards could be filled by those of less repute, who recommend noxious nostrums for tonics, and administer ineffective compositions for stimulants? It almost seems like a blind infatuation in persons afflicted with indigestion, dyspepsia, nervous debility or similar functional derangements to swallow the wretched admixtures that glut the market, when Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters are so accessible. Prepared from vegetables that embody the purest and most valuable medecinal virtues, Price's Bitters are at once a grateful cordial and most invigorating adjuvant. Imparting a healthy tone to all the organs, regulating the system of circulation, sending an exhilarating glow through all the "natural gates and alleys of the body," they not only repair the shattered nerves, but simultaneously regenerate the wasted energies. In short, wherever there exists any gastric disorder, Price's Celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters will infallibly ferret out the disease, and by their active principles apply the remedy.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER.

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Washday. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast, and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Paper makers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as no machine or hand rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and the same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in larger-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand cotton gins.

JIM'S JOURNEY.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Unhappy Jim cried for the Moon—
Such a tune!
He stretched out his wee rosy hand,
To make all the folks understand
That he'd have it, whether or no—
That's so.

A Fairy was passing that way.
Peoplessay,
She heard the spoilt baby's "boo-hoo,"
And took him, without more ado,
On a very long journey, indeed,
With speed.

Up, up, 'mid the stars, like a flash,
But they dash.
The "Little Bear" wonder-struck growled,
The "Big Bear" protested (but howled);
They stopped at the "Dipper" to drink,
I think.

Bright stars swarmed around them like bees.
"One of these
I think I'd prefer, Fairy good,
Instead of the Moon, if you would.
Do stop. I'll take home to Mamma
That star."

Away! for the good Fairy heard
Not a word.
Then, 'mid the bright, blinding glare,
While the Man in the Moon gave a stare,
They stepped on the keen silver rim.
Poor Jim!

They wandered o'er valley and hill,
Fair and still;
But all was so lonely, in spite
Of mountains and rivers of light,
"I think I'd choose dull Earth instead,"
Jim said.

"There's no home, there's no mother here,
Dear, oh! dear.
Oh! please take me back, Fairy sweet;
And, if on the Earth we should meet,
I'll pay you when I am a man
And can."

"I'll just wish you there in a wink
And a blink,"
The Fairy said, spreading her wings.
"Don't cry for impossible things—
This piece of advice I give you.
Adieu!"

The Newspaper Questions.

BY JACOB ABBOTT.

The boys never liked to have bed-time come. Going to bed and going to sleep seemed to them like a kind of termination of existence, and their mother was not perhaps as decided as she ought to have been in insisting upon their going promptly when the time came.

So their brother, when at home in one of his vacations, adopted the plan of having a talk with them, when the time arrived, on some entertaining subject, with the understanding that they were to put their books and playthings away when the time came, and then go directly to bed as soon as the talk was ended. The oldest boy, Luther, was to think of some question or subject during the day—such as something that he had heard about or had read about in a newspaper—and that was to be the subject of the conversation in the evening; and, as Luther was a very intelligent boy, and was much interested in learning everything that was curious or new, and as he most frequently found something which he needed to have explained to him in the newspaper, the questions which were asked came to be called the newspaper questions.

One night recently the question was about nitro-glycerine explosions.

"I read in a paper to-day," said Luther, "that some boys threw a stone at some jars filled with nitro-glycerine, and the nitro-glycerine exploded and blew them all to pieces."

"What!" exclaimed Johnny, the youngest brother, who was, as usual, sitting in his brother's lap, starting up at the same time, "really to pieces?"

"Yes," said Luther, "so that they never could be put together again. The boys had heard that nitro-glycerine was very curious stuff, and that it would go off like gunpowder; and they thought they would try it."

"What is nitro-glycerine, any way?" asked Luther, "and what makes it explode so?"

"There is a great deal of mystery about it," said Ernest—for that was the older brother's name; "but there is something that everybody can understand."

Ernest's mother and his sister, Maria, were sitting at their work at a table in the room; and when they heard that Ernest was going to explain the philosophy of nitro-glycerine explosions, they looked up from their work and began to listen.

"An explosion," said Ernest, "is generally nothing more nor less than a very rapid burning—a burning so extremely rapid that all the heat is developed instantaneously, as it were, and the air around is suddenly and enormously expanded. The way, therefore, to make any combustible explosive is to make it all burn at once."

"How can you do it?" asked Johnny.

"You can make anything burn faster," said Ernest, "by dividing it up into small portions and mixing the air with the portions. A boy in kindling a fire, if he has a large stick, cuts and splits it with his knife into slivers and splinters and shavings, so that the air can get at each portion of the substance of the wood on every side, and thus it burns a great deal faster."

"But it does not explode," said Luther.

"No," rejoined Ernest, "it does not explode, because it is not divided so finely as to allow it to burn actually all at once."

"Then we must cut it up finer," said Johnny.

"Yes," said Ernest, "if you could rasp the wood, so as to turn it all into a kind of sawdust, and then if the sawdust could be made to lie very loosely in a heap, without the particles touching each other, but with a layer of air around each one, it would burn very quickly, indeed—almost like a flash of gunpowder."

"I mean to try it," said Luther.

"You can't make the grains lie up loosely enough to have air around each one," replied Ernest. "The only way to try it is to sprinkle some dry sawdust into the flame of a lamp or candle, and see how the particles will flash.

"But now," continued Ernest, "if air, or the substance of air, could be obtained in the form of a solid, like salt, for example, and could be ground up fine, and then mixed with the sawdust, and then the sawdust could be laid in a heap, with this pulverized air all around it, it would flash up and burn almost like gunpowder. This is, indeed, substantially what is done in making gunpowder. Air itself, it is true, cannot be obtained in a solid form; but saltpeter, which contains the most important constituent of air, the only one which is concerned in combustion, is a solid, and can be ground up fine; and charcoal, which is wood partially burned, can be ground up too. With these elements, and a little sulphur added to make the fire kindle more easily, gunpowder is formed. So you see gunpowder is only a combustible very finely pulverized and mingled with a substance which contains the burning principle of air, which is very finely pulverized too, so that every particle to be burned may have something to burn it close at hand. Thus the burning of the whole mass is almost instantaneous, and the heat that is produced is all produced at once, and the air in and around it is instantaneously heated and expanded with great force. And this is what forms the explosion. You see it all depends upon the charcoal being ground up so very fine and being so completely intermingled with the air—or, rather, with the substance which contains the vital principle of air in a solid form—that every particle capable of being burnt has something to burn it close at hand.

"And it is just so substantially with gun-cotton," continued Ernest, "only the combustible substance is there made much finer by nature than men can make the charcoal, with all their grinding. The cotton, you know, consists of fibers, and every visible fiber—that is, every one that you can see—consists of a bundle of other fibers, with pores and interstices between them, too minute, I suppose, to be seen by any microscope; and they soak the cotton in acids that contain the vital principle of air in a liquid form. This liquid insinuates itself into all the pores and interstices, so that every combustible particle, inconceivably minute, has something to make it burn all around it. Thus the whole mass burns a great deal quicker than even gunpowder, and makes a still more sudden and violent explosion."

"That's curious," said Ernest's sister, who had been listening attentively to the explanation. "And is it the same with nitro-glycerine?"

"Substantially the same," said Ernest. "Glycerine is a combustible—or, rather, it is composed of combustibles; and to convert it into nitro-glycerine it is impregnated with a substance which contains a large quantity of that element of the air by which combustion is carried on."

"Oh! dear me," said Johnny, with a sigh. "I don't understand that very well."

"Why, it is mixed with something which does as well as air to make it burn," said Ernest. "Being a liquid, I suppose the molecules can be mixed together finer."

"Molecules!" repeated Johnny. "What are molecules?"

"Little particles," said Ernest. "In a liquid the particles roll about over each other like so many marbles in a big basket, or bullets. Only they are a great deal smaller."

"As small as shot?" asked Johnny.

"Oh! yes; a great deal smaller," said Ernest—"infinitely smaller. So small that you could not see them with the best microscope in the world."

"Then how do they know there are any?" asked Johnny.

Ernest laughed. Indeed, he was somewhat puzzled by this question, which illustrated well the old proverb that a child can ask a question which the greatest philosopher cannot answer. All he could say was that people supposed there were these small particles, and that they were supposed to be so small and to move so freely, among each other that the fire-sustaining particles in the substances that are mixed in can be much more intimately intermingled with them, and can come into much more close contact with them than even in the case of the fibers of cotton; and that thus the combustion or burning will go on more rapidly, and the violence of the effect produced will be much increased.

"So you see," continued Ernest, "when the boys threw a stone at the cans of nitro-glycerine the heat of the blow set a little of it on fire, and the whole burnt in an instant—that is to say, exploded—and the boys were killed."

"And did their father have to pay for the stuff?" asked Johnny.

Ernest smiled, and said he did not know about that; and then told the boys it was time for them now to go to bed.

Ernest's explanation of the philosophy of such explosions as those of nitro-glycerine was substantially correct, and it gave the boys a very good general idea of the true nature of such a phenomenon. The effect, however, though in the main produced in the way that Ernest explained, is complicated with a great many curious details, which it requires an intimate knowledge of chemistry fully to understand.

The boys, when the conversation was concluded, went up stairs; and, after allowing a suitable time for them to undress themselves and get into bed, Ernest went up too, to hear them say their prayers and "put them to sleep," as he called it, which he did in the following somewhat military manner:

After they had said their prayers, and Ernest had talked with them a few minutes in a very quiet way, he took up the lamp and set it upon a table out in the entry; and then, coming back, he took a seat in a chair near the door, and said, speaking in the tone of a commander addressing his troops:

"All ready?"

The boys answered: "All ready."

"Good-night," said Ernest.

"Good-night," answered the boys.

"Mouths shut!" said Ernest.

The boys shut their mouths with a snap, as if they were two steel traps.

"Eyes shut!" said Ernest.

The boys shut their eyes.

"Sleep!" said Ernest.

Everything then remained perfectly silent and motionless in the room for about five minutes, by which time the boys were sound asleep; and then Ernest, rising and walking out quietly, went down stairs.—Independent.

Farm, Garden and Household.

White Grapes.

No grape would meet with a more favorable reception than a large, magnificent, delicious, white American grape. Among our native white grapes there are those of hardiness, but the qualities of flavor and size are sadly wanting. Let me kindly yet plainly review a few of the American white grapes now before the public.

One of the oldest is the Maxatawny. This has been steadily improving ever since it was introduced to the attention of grape-growers. When I first saw it on my own vines it scarcely was edible, October 25, and was insipid and inferior at that. These vines, grown from buds of the original vine, now ripen their fruit by the middle of September. Grafted on Isabella, Concord or Catawba old stocks, this grape becomes here as large as Isabellas, and load themselves fully, so as to appear well on the trellis. Yet I apprehend that, until reseeded and long cultivated, it will not be fully popular.

Cuyahoga.—This is a small grape in a beautiful, compact bunch, as usually grown. It also enlarges and improves in size the longer it is cultivated. On certain very dry and yet rich sites I have seen it quite sweet and in passable flavor. Yet, if I am correct for the majority of situations, where other grapes are in sweetness and flavor, this beautiful grape is as insipid and flavorless as any grape well can be. Certain am I that it makes no progress in public esteem, compared with the length of time it has been on sale and in cultivation, because of these undesirable qualities.

Lydia.—This is as hardy as the Concord, its parent. At this place it bears well, and I cannot condemn it; yet it is small and often fails to ripen well, or is liable to the accidents of every season, to a degree that its parent vine is not. Some years I feel like praising it highly; such years as this it needs to be dispraised severely.

Croton.—Scores of letter-writers write to me of late: "Is the croton what it pretends to be?" I can but reply that, as far as I have seen it, it appears to be a very desirable grape. It is medium in size, in a fair, not largest bunch, and desirable in appearance. Its flavor is, as far as I have seen it, quite agreeable, but I cannot say that I have seen enough to form an ultimate opinion. The wood has, with me, a large pith, and was injured by the unexampled severity of last winter. I wish I knew more of it, and could tell exactly what it is.

And, let me say, there are several of David Thompson's seedlings which are white. Could they be grown as, in exceptionably favorable years, I have seen them at Green Island, near Troy, a mile off, then no one would want better white grapes than many of these. And while I do not condemn them, yet, I say, try them carefully. At Ithaca, so far, they do not mildew or rot, but are late.

I now name Rebecca. This is an old grape. The best vineyard of this grape I ever saw was that of the late Dr. Kellogg, of this place. It was on a dry knoll, and proved that if this vine is planted on wire trellis, six feet apart and rows eight feet from each other, it will cover a trellis three feet high, and near the ground bear beautiful yellowish white grapes, in small, irregular bunches, and can be sold at a profit. It is no use to attempt to grow it on a large trellis. It is never sweet or high in flavor. On damp, rich soil here it is insipid, and never fully ripe.—S. J. Peck, M. D., in Horticulturist.

KILLING CUT WORMS.—St. Joseph, Michigan, is again the theater of another wonderful discovery in the way of destruction to insect enemies. It will be remembered that last year Mr. Ransom discovered the chip trap for catching curculios. Now Mr. Boynton has discovered a method of trapping cut worms by the thousand. It comes about in this wise: In a field of tomatoes he was much troubled with the worms destroying the plants. Thinking they might be baited, he cut some green clover, wadded it up into small balls, and distributed among the hills of tomatoes, and found that the worms would collect about them, eat and go into the ground near them. In this way he took from the locality of these balls the numbers of thirty-seven, sixty-eight, seventy and eighty-two. He has experimented with various poisons mixed with the clover to destroy them, and at last took boiling water, pouring it over and about these wads, in this way destroying fifteen thousand in a single day.—Prairie Farmer.

PETROLEUM LAMPS.—The easiest way to clean off petroleum is to wash with thin milk of lime, which forms an emulsion with the petroleum and removes every trace of it; and by washing a second time with milk of lime and a small quantity of chloride of lime, even the smell may be so completely removed as to render the vessel thus cleansed fit for keeping beverages in. If the milk of lime be used warm, instead of cold, the operation is rendered much shorter. The best time for cleaning them is in the morning, for reason of safety, if not convenience.

A STANDING ANTIDOTE for poison by ivy, etc., is to take a handful of quick-lime, dissolve in water, let it stand half an hour, then paint the poisoned parts with it. Three or four applications will never fail to cure the most aggravated cases. Poison from bees, hornets, spider-bites, etc., is instantly arrested by an application of common salt and carbonate of soda, well rubbed in on the place bitten or stung.

SWEET PICKLES.—Twelve pounds of fruit, six pounds of sugar, and a quart of cider vinegar, cloves and cinnamon. Let the fruit boil in the above until soft; take out, put carefully on a dish, let the sirup boil down, then put on the fruit again and boil a few minutes; fill the jars and seal with tissue paper dipped in the white of an egg.

HAMILTON'S

BUCHU AND DANDELION,

which acts on the KIDNEYS, LIVER and BOWELS, and removes impurities of the system by opening its outlets.

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Kress Fever Tonic.

Ask your druggist for this itself. A box of Pills with each bottle, and is sold; NO CURE NO PAY. ☞ Take no other Ague Cure. Ask for KRESS FEVER TONIC. It is the safest. Don't forget the Warrant. If it fails to cure you, get your money back.

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

PILES CURED.

HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION promotes digestion of the food by its influence on the Stomach. It promotes the healthy action of the Kidneys. It secures activity of the Liver and regularity of the Bowels, and Prevents Constipation, which causes Piles. Try it.

W. C. HAMILTON & CO., Cincinnati, Ohio.

NINETY-NINE PER CENT.

L. W. Faulkner, of Channahon, Illinois, says "I have been selling KRESS FEVER TONIC two years under a warrant, and have had but one bottle returned as failing to cure. From what I see of its action I believe that it will cure Ninety-nine cases of Ague in every One Hundred."

W. C. Hamilton & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, warrant this remedy to cure Ague in all its forms. A box of Pills FREE with each bottle.

Rational Treatment of all Kidney, Urinary and Liver Diseases

IS EFFECTED BY

HAMILTON'S BUCHU AND DANDELION.

It acts directly on these organs, enabling them to remove those wastes in the blood which cause Gravel, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Scrofula, etc.

THE GREAT HOUSEHOLD REMEDY.

AS AN INVIGORATOR, LIVER CORRECTOR

AND BLOOD RENOVATOR

Is superior to all the Bitters, Elixirs, Cordials and Sarsaparillas in use.

It is so adapted to the whole system that every organ and function in the body is brought under its exhilarating influence. It gives tone and strength to the digestive apparatus, dispels languor and debility, invigorates the Liver, regulates the Kidneys and Bowels, removes the effect of excess or over-taxation of any kind, and gives vitality and richness to the blood.

Its curative powers alter and, completely reorganize the entire mass of fluids, and even the solids of the human system, thereby preventing and cur

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops. There seems to be a general disposition to put crop estimates at fully 3,500,000 bales.

The river is 12 feet 3 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the twenty-fourth instant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 19,795 |
| Lake | | 8 |
| Mobile | | 3,101 |
| Florida | | 19 |
| Texas | | 591 |
| Total | | 23,514 |

On Saturday the demand was active throughout the day, and, although operations were restricted by light supplies, buyers came forward with unabated spirit and took in all 10,300 bales, at figures showing a partial advance of ¼c. Prices were strengthened by the competition among buyers and a further advance in foreign exchange, while the Liverpool and New York markets were steady at previous rates. On Monday operations were restricted during the morning by light supplies, but, the demand being active and additional samples having been opened, the movement subsequently became more animated, and the sales embraced 9,000 bales at an irregular improvement of ⅛@¼c., requiring an advance in quotations of ⅛@¼c. In good ordinary, ⅛c. in low middling, and ¼c. in the higher grades. The demand ran mainly on low middling, which was in moderate supply and consequently sold proportionably higher than other grades. On Tuesday, notwithstanding rainy and extremely inclement weather, the demand continued active, and 8,350 bales changed hands at still fuller prices, showing a partial improvement of ⅛c., except in low middling, which, advancing disproportionately on Monday, was strong at the previous improvement without any quotable variation. Strict ordinary to good ordinary sold at 18c., good ordinary at 18⅛@18⅛c., strict good ordinary at 18¾c., strict good ordinary to low middling at 19c., low middling at 19, 19⅛@19¼c., strict low middling at 19⅜@19⅝c., strict low middling to middling at 20c., and middling at 20, 20⅛@20⅛c.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September (exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas) are 657,870 bales, against 608,778 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 306,107 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 59,977 to Great Britain, of 34,383 to France, and of 119,432 to other foreign ports.

SUGAR.—The supplies appear to have reached their highest point and have now commenced to fall off. The receipts on Saturday and Monday embraced 2,300 hhds., which were mostly sold at 5@6½c. for inferior, 6¾@7¼c. for common, 7⅞@8c. for fair, 8⅛@8¼c. for good fair, 8⅜@9c. for fully fair, 9⅛@9½c. for prime, 9⅝@10¼c. for choice, 10½@11c. for yellow clarified, and 11¼@12c. for white clarified.

MOLASSES.—The supplies have commenced to fall off for the season. The receipts on Saturday and Monday embraced 2,000 bbls., which were mostly sold, as landed, at 32@56c. for centrifugal, 45@50c. for common, 60c. for cistern bottom, 60@61c. for fair, 62@64c. for prime, 65@67c. for strictly prime, and 70c. for choice.

CORN.—On Monday 6,300 sacks sold at 65, 67@68c. ₮ bushel for yellow and white. On Tuesday the supply was light and the demand fair, and 1,800 sacks sold at the advanced prices of 68@70c. ₮ bushel for white and yellow.

OATS.—On Tuesday 3,900 sacks sold, in lots, at 49@50c. for prime, and 50, 52@53c. for choice on the landing and in warehouse.

BRAN.—On Saturday 750 bags were sold, in lots, at $1.15 for ordinary, and $1.20@1.25 for choice, and on Monday 150 bags sold at $1.20@1.25 ₮ 100 lbs.

PORK.—On Tuesday the market was bare, or nearly so, of new, and the demand was on old in consequence. 50 and 25 bbls. new mess sold at $14.25, 50 do. at $14.50. Old is now held under limit at $14 ₮ bbl. New mess is retailing at $14.75, and old at $14 ₮ bbl.

BACON.—On Tuesday there was very little on hand and prices were firm. Clear sides were held at 9c., and shoulders at 5¾c. ₮ lb. A lot of 25 casks clear sides sold at 8⅞c. ₮ lb.

HAMS.—The market has been in good supply, and dull at 14@15c. ₮ lb. for sugar-cured. The demand is only in a job way. On Monday 8 tierces sold at 14c., and on Tuesday 5 tierces sold, in lots, at 14½@15c. ₮ lb.

LARD.—On Tuesday 25 tierces packers' sold at 8c., and 25 do. at 8⅛c. ₮ lb.

DRY SALT MEAT.—On Tuesday 78 casks shoulders sold, in four lots, at 5c., and 40,000 lbs. loose shoulders, in two lots, at 5c. ₮ lb.

BREAKFAST BACON.—The stock is small, but better supplies are expected, and the market is dull in consequence. Western is quoted at 10½@11c., Northern 11@11½c. ₮ lb.

CORN MEAL.—On Tuesday, owing to scarcity and a good demand, the market was firm, with a good demand for round lots at $3.75 ₮ bbl.

CASTOR OIL.—The last sale was at 15c. ₮ lb. for New York.

MONETARY.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113½@113⅝ (against 113⅜ at New York,) and closed at the opening rates (against 114 at New York.)

The sales of silver have been confined to limited retail transactions. American half dollars are quoted at 109½@110½, and Mexican dollars at ½ ₮ cent. premium in gold for new, and 2 ₮ cent. for old.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 30, 1873.

The Israelite Population of the Earth.

A German official statement, published in Berlin during the month of February, 1872, supplies some interesting particulars as to the present dispersion of the Jews over the world. In Palestine they have long been reduced to a very small proportion of their former numbers. They are now most numerous in the northern part of Africa, between Morocco and Egypt (where, especially in the Barbary States, they form the chief element of the population,) and in that strip of Europe which extends from Lower Danube to the Baltic. In the latter region there are about four million Jews, most of whom are of the middle class, among the Slavonic nationalities, while in the whole of western Europe there are not one hundred thousand of them. In consequence of European migrations, descendants of these Jews have settled in America and Australia, where they "are already multiplying in the large commercial towns in the same manner as in Europe, and much more rapidly than the Christian population." The Jewish settlers in northern Africa are also increasing so much that they constantly spread further to the south. Timbuctoo has, since 1858, been inhabited by a Jewish colony of traders. The other Jews in Africa are the Falaschas or Abyssinian black Jews, and a few European Jews at the Cape of Good Hope. There are numerous Jewish colonies in Yemen and Nedschran, in western Arabia. It has long been known that there are Jews in Persia and the countries on the Euphrates; in the Turcoman countries they inhabit the four fortresses of Scherisebs, Kitah, Schamatan and Urta Kurgan, and thirty small villages, residing in a separate quarter, but treated on an equal footing with the other inhabitants, though they have to pay higher taxes. There are also Jews in China, and in Cochin China there are both white and black Jews. The white Jews have a tradition, according to which, in the year 70, A. D., their ancestors were ten thousand Jews who settled at Cranganore, on the coast of Malabar, after the destruction of the Temple of Jerusalem. The Jews remained at Cranganore until 1565, when they were driven into the interior by the Portuguese. The black settlers are supposed to be native proselytes, and have a special synagogue of their own.

A Novel Device for Making Buildings Fireproof.

Can a totally fireproof building be made? To believe that this is impossible would be greatly to depreciate the mechanical and scientific resources of the age. Nothing can burn until heated to the temperature at which it combines with oxygen. The problem of fireproofing will then be solved when we discover the means by which the temperature of combustibles can be kept from reaching the temperature of combustion. We can apply the most intense heat to steam boilers without burning them. Why? Because each atom of water they contain is a swift vehicle to seize upon and carry away heat. Let us make up the partitions of walls of buildings in a manner analogous to sectional steam boilers, and no fire would be communicated from one building to another. A thing so evident should have attracted the attention of architects long before this. In this way iron, which by itself is not a fireproofing material, can, by the most economical use of water, be made to withstand the severest ordeal.

The iron-inclosed water-spaces need not be more than one inch in thickness, and need never be subjected to a hydraulic pressure of more than three or four feet head. These walls can, therefore, be made of thin metal. They can be supplied with water from the common water service, or from tanks placed on the tops of buildings. In case of fire the turning of a single cock would supply them with water, and the temperature of the partitions could never rise above two hundred and twelve degrees Fahrenheit till the water had all boiled away. In this way not a tithe of the water now vainly used to extinguish such fires as those of Chicago and Boston would be needed to preserve a whole city.

We feel certain that no solid material known to the arts is capable of withstanding the heat generated in these great fires. We must find something that heat will not melt or warp or crack, and otherwise so impervious to air that fire cannot communicate with combustibles stored in buildings, or we must expend the force of the heat on something we can afford to waste economically. This something is water, and we think we have pointed out the way to use it.—American Artisan.

A STAMP you can't buy—The stamp of a gentleman.

RAILWAY BRAKES.

In a recent collision upon the Pennsylvania railroad, it is said, the air-brake was applied by the engineer, but something gave way, and the catastrophe could not be prevented. This is the first instance of failure in the efficiency of these brakes of which we have heard. In numerous cases they have prevented disaster. The Westinghouse air-brake has been applied in this country, it is said, to over twelve hundred locomotives and four thousand cars, and is in use on some twenty thousand miles of American railroads. It consists of an air-compressing pump, fixed to the side of the fire-box of the locomotive, by means of which the air is compressed into a reservoir under the foot-plate, containing about twelve cubic feet. When it is necessary to stop the train, the compressed air is admitted, through duplicate pipes running through the whole train, into piston cylinders beneath the cars; and the movement of the pistons is communicated by lever to the brake-gear. The instantaneous and uniform action of this arrangement causes the train to behave like a single solid body, which cannot be the case when ordinary brakes are applied by hand.

The Creamor brake, which has also been found extremely useful, is a contrivance for storing power by means of a spiral spring, and setting it free suddenly in a moment of emergency. These brakes are wound up separately, before the train starts; but it is in the power of the engineer to spring them all at once. This, and their instantaneous application of power, are their chief advantages. As to the amount of power they apply, this, of course, is no greater than that of the men who wind them up; and in this particular the air-brakes surpass them. Both kinds may be, and ought always to be, so arranged that, if anything about the mechanism is disabled, the brakes can be applied by hand in the usual manner.—American Artisan.

THE DISCOVERY OF COFFEE.—Toward the middle of the fifteenth century a poor Arab was traveling through Abyssinia, and, finding himself weak and weary from fatigue, he stopped near a grove. Then, being in want of fuel to cook his rice, he cut a tree which happened to be covered with dead berries. His meal being cooked and eaten, the traveler discovered that the half-burned berries were fragrant. He collected a number of these, and on crushing them with a stone he found their aroma increased to a great extent. While wondering at this he accidentally let fall the substance in a can which contained his scanty supply of water. Lo, what a miracle! The almost putrid liquid was instantly purified. He brought it to his lips; it was fresh and agreeable. In a moment after the traveler had so far recovered strength and energy as to be able to resume his journey. The lucky Arab gathered as many berries as he could, and, having arrived at Ardue, in Arabia, he informed the mufti of his discovery. That worthy divine was an inveterate opium smoker, who had been suffering for years from the influence of that poisonous drug. He tried an infusion of the roasted berries, and was so delighted with the recovery of his own vigor that to the tree he called it cahuah, which, in Arabic, signifies force.

KILLING ANIMALS WITH CHLOROFORM.—Many persons would be glad to know how to kill an animal without suffering, and we venture to give the benefit of our experience. We are constantly called upon to destroy horses, dogs and cats, and have little difficulty in doing it. For horses we use a large sponge, say six inches in diameter, thoroughly saturated with chloroform, which is dropped into a bag large enough to be drawn over the horse's nose. It is not desirable to have the bag "air-tight;" for, if so, suffocation is likely to ensue. In two or three minutes the horse is unconscious, and in eight to ten minutes dead, without suffering.

For dogs and cats a similar process, using a small sponge and bag; or these animals, with the saturated sponge, may be put in a box admitting some air, when they soon "go to sleep." Seventy-five cents' worth of chloroform will kill a horse, and twenty-five cents' worth a dog or cat. If one saturation of the sponge does not complete the work, repeat it.—Our Dumb Animals.

THE true motives of our actions, like the reed pipes of an organ, are usually concealed; but the gilded and hollow pretext is pompously placed in front for show.—Colton.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and unpolitical, and in their teaching thought and feeling of the Southern people—which should present only the facts of history and science—should not be offensive to the people—which should present only are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces.

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the words of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a high degree of arrangement and simple freshness of style which must ever render them attractive to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, as something to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. A series of Readers unequalled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

CENTENARY COLLEGE,

JACKSON, LOUISIANA.

THE NEXT TERM OF THIS VENERABLE INSTITUTION OPENS ON THE FIRST MONDAY IN OCTOBER, 1872.

FACULTY.

Rev. C. G. ANDREWS, A. M., President, and Professor of Mental and Moral Science, Political Economy and International Law.

Rev. A. R. HOLCOMBE, A. M., Professor of Mathematics and Adjunct Professor of Natural Science.

G. H. WILEY, A. M., Professor of Ancient and Modern Languages.

T. S. JONES, M. D., Professor of Natural Science.

Rev. R. D. NORSWORTHY, A. M., Principal of the Preparatory Department.

CHARGES.

|---|---|
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in College | $60 00 |
| Tuition, per session of forty weeks, in Preparatory Department | 40 00 |
| Contingent expenses | 5 00 |

A matriculation fee of $5 must be paid on entering any regular college class. One-half the charges must be paid when the student enters; the other half on the beginning of the second term, March 1.

BOARD.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

CHARITY'S REWARD.

BY GEORGE H. FULLERTON.

If in our sleep, angelic choirs
In tuneful numbers sweetly sing,
And gently strike their heavenly lyres,
That from the crystal throne they bring,
Then heard I them at midnight's hour,
While wrapt in gentle sleep I lay;
Then knew I once sweet music's power
To charm the grief of dreams away.

I dreamed of wreck by flood and fire,
Of dire distress brought on our land;
I saw fair maids with want expire,
Because too proud to make demand;
I dreamed I saw a man of wealth
Have pity for the suffering poor;
He gave them food, and wished them health,
He drove gaunt hunger from their door.

Scarce was the Christian deed begun,
Ere came the angel choir in light,
As if the rays of noonday sun
Descended softly in the night.
They sang his praise in purest tones,
While harps gave out their sweetest sound,
And one, his name on whitest stones
Made haste to write, his memory crowned.

"Reward," they sang, "shall bless for aye
This deed of kindness he hath done;
The meed in store, from day to day,
Shall greater grow, till heaven is won:
Then his reward shall more increase,
And never less his prize shall be,
Though he enjoy, and shall not cease
To take therefrom eternally."

Then passed, me thought, the hours away,
And came the morrow's middle night,
When angels sang again their lay,
And harps resounded in delight.
The man of wealth before us stood,
And others, listening, stood beside,
While he betrayed his doing good,
And swelled his heart with selfish pride.

Then straightway mute the angels bowed,
And sang no more delightful songs,
While every harp, with grief endowed,
Made discord which to grief belongs.
An angel broke the tablet-stones
Whereon was writ the hero's name,
And spake in sadly plaintive tones:
"His sole reward is worldly fame."

SERIOUS ODDITIES.

The danger of extempore prayer is that it may degenerate into the ludicrous. Take, for example, the case of the elder who was invited to pray on the day after a battle, and who said: "O Lord, I never see sneh a day as it was yesterday, and I don't believe you ever did!" Or take the case of the minister giving praise at the harvest-time. "We thank thee, O Lord, for thy great bounty," said he; "we thank thee for the fine weather; we thank thee for the bountiful harvest, and that thou hast enabled us to gather the wheat throughout all this district—with the exception of farmer Mill's little three-cornered patch down in the hollow, not worth mentioning." Dean Ramsey—if I remember rightly—tells a better story of the same kind. A Highland minister, having been requested by his flock to pray for better weather, and being at the same time warned to be cautious in presenting his petition, because the last time he had prayed for better weather it had become worse, thus expressed himself: "An' noo, Lord, I hae a petition to present, but I maun be unco wary o' the wordin' o't. Ye ken, Lord, the kittle state the craps are in. Just send us a songhin', southerin', dreezin' breeze, as'll save the strae, and winna harm the heed; for if ye send a tearin', reevin', thunderin' storm, as ye did the last time I prayed for gude weather, ye'll play the very mischief wi' the aits, and fairly spoil a'." A singular example of the effect of devotional habits over an ignorant mind was recorded in the newspapers some years ago. A domestic servant at Canterbury was charged with stealing £5 from her master's till. This sum was missed immediately after she had made off from her master's house; and when taken into custody a piece of paper was found in her possession on which she had recently written a prayer suited to her circumstances. Here is a copy of the strange document: "O Lord, I pray thee look down on me, one who is now bowed down with grief; in pity, Lord, send me all things that I may require. Heal, I pray you, the broken-hearted woman. Things that I require: One sack of flour, one score of salt pork, one-half ditto salt beef, six pounds of sugar, one ditto tea, one ditto butter, six ditto cheese, four ditto candles, one-quarter ditto coffee, two sacks pattatus, one ton of coles, one hundred of wood, and two sovereigns to pay Mrs. Vinall for her kindness." Mrs. Vinall was the woman to whose house she had gone when running away from her situation. I may add that this pious young person, who apparently made sure of a favorable answer to her petition by helping herself to the means of purchasing what she needed, escaped scot free, because it could not be shown that the money she was known to have expended on herself after running away was actually the same money that her master had lost. In nothing, perhaps, is the humorous side of the religious feeling exhibited more strongly than in the cathedrals and other religious structures of past ages. That the builders of these were influenced by a great deal of earnest sincerity, admits of little question. Yet what quaint details their works present, what comicalities in stone, what absolute obscenities even in connection with all that is most sacred! What prompted these eccentricities? Not irreligion, certainly; probably mere grossness, or the absence of that color which in these days draws a hard and fast line between the fanciful and the licentious, between the legitimate artistic and the offensively suggestive. But, in truth, we are little able to realize the Middle-Age religious life. It was something quite distinct from anything of which we have experience. It is hard even to understand the spirit animating men of later days; of Wilde, the poet, for example, Vicar of Ayline, and one of the ejected ministers of 1662, who is remembered for doing a good thing in an incredibly bad manner. He left six Bibles to one of the churches of his native town, St. Ives, for which twelve persons, six male and six female, were to throw dice in church on Whit-Tuesday, while the minister knelt and prayed God to "direct the lots to his glory!" That is surely one of the most remarkable prayers on record.—Belgravia.

On the Distribution of the Ruby and Sapphire in the United States.

The recent diamond swindle having attracted much attention throughout the world, the following abstract of a paper read by J. Lawrence Smith, at the last meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, will be read with interest:

"The writer exhibited some specimens which he received from Montana. In referring to the density of rubies, he remarked that a pint of these stones would make two pints with their constituents. The finest rubies and sapphires came from Asia and South America. Many of these gems were to be found in our own country, the God of nature having blessed us with everything needful and useful. The speaker had bestowed much attention upon the subject of which he was speaking, having explored Asia Minor, the Grecian archipelago and the East Indies for specimens of the gems. Four months ago he received a package from Trout river, Montana, and discovered that the contents of the package were true sapphires and oriental emeralds. They were small, did not possess the right color, but nevertheless were gems. Montana is rich with them. The gems from there were perfectly transparent. The Arizona diamonds were the colorless sapphire or ruby. If these were cut and polished it would puzzle a jeweler to tell the difference between them and the real diamond. The Arizona gems were hard, and would cut any stone but diamond. The fact that they were so hard often led to the error of confounding them with diamonds. The professor had hoped to receive a package of gems from San Francisco, from the newly-discovered fields, in time for this meeting, but had failed to do so. The new discoveries were similar to the gems which he submitted for the inspection of the association. The Montana gems lacked value in the particular that they lacked color. They would have half the value of diamonds if the green color was more intense. Rubies and sapphires, beyond a certain size, exceeded the diamond in value, for the reason that diamonds never got beyond that size. Valuable corundum had been found in North Carolina, but most of it had been only half gems. Some few were very pure, and are now being cut in Boston and set in jewelry. The gems from New Jersey lack transparency. The ruby most prized was that in which there was the faintest tint of blue intermingled with the red. In sapphires the intense blue color was most appreciated. In concluding his remarks, Mr. Smith remarked that America had all the metals of the globe.

"Prof. Kerr, in alluding to the location in which rubies had been discovered in North Carolina, said they were found principally in Cherokee and Macon counties. Several mines were being worked in these counties, and had already yielded several tons. A man in Philadelphia owned a ruby which came from North Carolina, and which weighed a pound. Another Philadelphia gentleman had in his possession a crystal of corundum which weighed three hundred and fifteen pounds. The North Carolina gems were only found in connection with the unique beds of tryselito. These beds extended from the Old North State into Virginia, a distance of one hundred and ninety miles."

SELLING STUMPS.—Walnut stumps are getting valuable as articles of merchandise at the East. Some one has discovered that the curly grain of the roots can be used for veneering purposes with great success, and the result is that they are in demand, and are worth $150 per stump. Some of the backwoodsmen of the forests of Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin are getting out the stumps rapidly, and are creating a new and valuable trade. The veneering made of these roots is said to be most beautiful, and can be used in the finest work, and is particularly adapted to use in the manufacture of musical instruments.

A CIVIL GUEST will no more talk all than eat all the feast.—Herbert.

SCIENTIFIC.

THE GREENLAND METEORITES.—A recent paper by Prof. Nordenskjold describes the remarkable masses of meteoric iron discovered in 1870 at Ovifak, and brought home last year from Greenland by the Swedish polar expedition under Baron von Otter. They are the chief masses of an enormous meteoric fall, which probably occurred during the Miocene period, and extended over an area of two hundred English miles, embracing not only that region occupied by the Greenland basalt, but also a country composed of granite gneiss.

The theory having been advanced by some geologists that these masses of metal are erupted and not meteoric, Prof. Nordenskjold maintains his view of their meteoric origin on the following grounds: The iron, when heated, evolves gases amounting in volume to one hundred times that of the iron itself; it contains isolated grains of iron-sulphide embedded in the iron, which contains scarcely any sulphur, while the external forms of the masses exhibit no trace of their having been poured, while in a molten condition, into cavities or fissures. The character of the masses is extremely variable. They are composed of meteoric nickeliferous cast iron, or of nickeliferous wrought iron, or a mixture of both; and in the last case they exhibit most clearly the peculiar figures brought out by etching.

The native iron occurs in the basalt in several forms. It is met with as inclosed, and but slightly altered meteorites. It is found filling cracks one or two lines in width, forming probably fragments of meteorites that have been flattened out under the influence of time, or wedged into these cracks in the act of falling, or which have fallen into cracks in the tuff which has been subsequently consolidated. Brecciaform stones also occur, which are composed of fragments of iron cemented together with hydrated oxide of iron and newly-formed silicate of iron. Close beside the iron masses in the basalt are found fragments of rock differing from the basalt itself, and remarkable for being rounded at the edges, and having what appears to be a meteoric crust on the exterior—a curious association, the cause of which is yet unascertained. Besides all these forms, the native iron is disseminated through the basalt in grains sometimes as large as a pea or bean, but oftener as fine scales.

Within an area of at most fifty square meters sixteen meteorites were found, the weights of which, in Swedish pounds, are as follows: 50,000, 20,000, 9,000, 336, 230, 200, 191, 150, 150, 150, 100, 56, 42, 15, 8 and 6. The largest three have the following diameters respectively: 2 by 1.7 meters, 1 3 by 1.27 meters, and 1 15 by 0.85 meters. Nearly one hundred pounds of lenticular-shaped fragments of iron, from three to four inches in thickness, were also taken out of the basaltic dyke close to them. All the masses contain nickel and carbon. We are indebted for these particulars to the Scientific American.

A CURIOUS DISCOVERY resulting from the Boston fire is that what paper-makers call poor paper—that which is considerably "clayed"—stood the best test. The Boston Advertiser says: Parchment-paper, used for bond and legal documents, shriveled up exceedingly, and the print blistered so that it could be read when writing was illegible. So it was with the engraved work on notes. The gilding on the account-books burned and charred showed out as bright and clear as when the books were new, which brings up the question if to introduce gilt-edged account-books would not be well, on the ground that the gilt would stay the passage by fire of the pages within. Books crammed into a safe, so that it was difficult to get them out, suffered considerably less than those that were set in loosely, and in some cases came out from safes, in which everything else was worthless, so far preserved that the figures on their pages could be deciphered. With charred papers which could not be made transparent by any light whatever used, it was found, after the employment of vitriol, oxalic acid, chalk, glycerine and other things, that anything that moistened them to a certain stage—which it was delicate work to get and not pass—made the words, lines and figures legible through a magnifying glass. It has been the almost universal experience that lead-pencil marks show out all right where ink marks cannot be distinguished. The success of the use of photography has already been noted.

CONTRARY to what is generally supposed, there is but very little copal found upon the Island of Zanzibar itself, and the little which is found is very inferior in quality, and does not enter into trade. Moreover, there are copal-producing trees still growing on the island, and in various parts of west Africa, particularly in the interior, whence the raw copal is brought by the natives, but the fresh and unfossilized gum obtained from these is nearly valueless, and when mixed with the fossil gum, as is often done by the natives for the purpose of adulteration, it is always rejected by experienced buyers. The great bulk of the fossil copal, which alone is merchantable, comes from the adjacent shores of Africa, where it is found principally in a long strip of coast land, having an extent of two or three hundred miles in length, and extending inland to a distance of about twenty-five miles. This section of the east Africa coast land is called the Mrima, and it is in the sand of this low and desolate tract, in which there are no inhabitants and but little vegetation, that the Zanzibar copal is found.—The Hub.

DR. F. C. CALVERT describes, in a paper read before the Manchester Literary and Philosophical Society, a series of experiments for the purpose of ascertaining the conditions under which iron is most rapidly oxidized. One of the important points arrived at is that carbonic acid promotes oxidation of iron. He also substantiated the curious fact, first announced by Berzelius, and now well known to soap and alkali manufacturers, that caustic alkalies prevent the oxidation of iron. Calvert's researches prove that the carbonates and bicarbonates of the alkalies possess the same property as their hydrates; and that if an iron blade is half immersed in a solution of these carbonates they exert such a preservative influence on that portion which is exposed to common air that it does not oxidize even after a period of two years. Similar results were obtained with sea-water, to which carbonates of potash and soda had been added.

IN DRIVING SCREWS into hard wood it is advisable first to grease the threads. If the wood is soft, or the screws are likely to work loose, warm them, dip them into dissolved glue, and put a few drops of glue in the hole. If you wish to put a new screw into an old place, first insert a wooden plug with glue and make a new hole.

HAILSTONES have been known to fall on Mount St. Gotthard consisting of rounded pieces of salt, similar to those which are found in north Africa.

THREE new asteroids must be added to the list, discovered within as many months, one by a German astronomer and two by American observers.

PARLOR AND CHURCH ORGANS

—ARE—

NOT EQUALED FOR PURITY AND BRILLIANCY OF TONE.

Their peculiar construction and arrangement gives them extraordinary power.

Their Solo Stops are most remarkable for beauty and variety of effect.

They are constructed in the most thorough and perfect manner.

They invite special attention to their

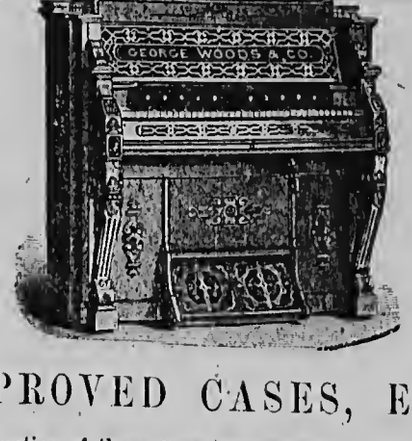
SOLO STOPS

THE VOX HUMANA.

PATENTED SEPTEMBER 13, 1870, AND JANUARY 23, 1872,

producing a beautiful and sympathetic quality of tone, capable of the most exquisite modulation, and when used with the "Tremolo," which accompanies it, resembles more than any other organ stop the peculiar trill of the human voice.

THE VOX CELESTE,



possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects in combination with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encominms from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

In addition to the above improvements, attention is called to

The Power of our Manual Sub-Bass,

AND THE MERITS OF OUR

PERFECT VALVES and WOODS' OCTAVE COUPLER.

The Factories of GEORGE WOODS & Co. are among the largest, and probably without exception the best-arranged in the country. Their machinery is of the latest and most improved pattern, and all the labor is performed under the eyes of the employers, who are mechanics with reputations second to none for knowledge of the business, ingenuity, faithfulness and ability. With every advantage that extensive capital can command, they are determined that the Organs of their manufacture

SHALL BE IN EVERY RESPECT THE FINEST AND BEST.

They endeavor to obtain and secure the confidence of their agents, and to assist and encourage them in every possible way.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 28.—Captain Jack attacked Colonel Barnard's camp, but was repulsed. One Indian killed and two wounded. One Indian horse captured. The women and children in the vicinity of Captain Jack's camp have been placed on boats for safety. The men are building block houses.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29.—Prince William C. Lunalilo has been elected King of the Sandwich Islands.

Advices from Honolulu state that the legitimacy of Prince Lunalilo's election by popular vote rests finally on an official election by the legislative assembly, which was to have taken place January 8, and on his prescribed oath of office. There is no doubt the assembly will accede to the popular decision.

American shipmasters at a meeting accepted the result of the election, and afterward in a body visited Prince Lunalilo and exchanged congratulations. The prince said in an address that his policy would be to discriminate fairly between natives and foreigners. The prince's claims were first publicly indorsed by a mass meeting at Honolulu, December 26, but have received no formal indorsement from the legislative assembly; yet in the islands heard from only one vote was cast against the prince.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 30.—Snowdrifts on the road sixteen feet deep. Weather the coldest known. The several railroad employes reported perished are safe. There is ten feet level snow in Cottonwood mining district.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—The President signed the bill repealing the franking privilege.

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—Counsel in the Stokes case, in the event of failure to obtain an order for a new trial from the new judge, Boardman, will apply for a stay of proceedings and thereby secure a review of the case by a full bench of the Supreme Court, and on failure there will go to the Court of Appeals.

The Cuban Anti-Slavery Committee here, of which S. R. Scottron is chairman and Rev. H. H. Garnet secretary, have issued an address to the President and people of the United States, asking support in the movement for the abolition of slavery in Cuba.

RICHMOND, Feb. 1.—Commodore Mathew Fontaine Maury, American hydrographer and naval officer, died at Lexington, Virginia, at one o'clock to-day, aged sixty-seven years. He was the author of letters on the Amazon, and on Atlantic slopes of South America, the relation between navigation and the circulation of the atmosphere, astronomical observations, physical geography of the sea, etc. During the late war he was an officer of the Confederate navy, and at the time of his death was a professor of physics in the Virginia Military Institute.

NEW YORK, Feb. 3.—At White Plains, to-day, at the opening of the Greeley will case, Judge Hartt stated he had received a note from Miss Ida Greeley, and which had been approved by her sister, in which they begged to withdraw from the contest which their opponents were determined to wage over their father's grave. The contestants then proceeded to prove the will made by Mr. Greeley in 1871, without further opposition. It was stated that Mr. Greeley left property estimated to be worth $206,000, which, with the estate of Mrs. Greeley, would amount to $225,000.

The Evangelical Alliance have issued a circular calling for a conference next October in this city, to unite all Christians against the errors of infidelity and rationalism, which have been transported here from Europe.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3.—The Vice President laid before the Senate a joint resolution, signed by J. C. Monroe and D. B. Penn, the presiding officers of a body claiming to be the Legislature of Louisiana, expressing its gratification at the interest manifested by Congress in the solution of the political question in that State, and thanking the Republican Senators and Representatives in Congress for their efforts in behalf of the people of Louisiana.

Mr. West objected to the reception of the paper. It went over.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4.—Louisiana affairs are discussed constantly at all places of resort. As a sensation it paramounts the Credit Mobilier and the Modoc war. The best opinion is that Congress will remit the matter to the people and order a new election as the only possible solution of the problem.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 4.—The bark D. C. Murray, from Honolulu, brings news of the ratification by the legislative assembly of the election of Prince Lunalilo as King of the Hawaiian Islands, and of his coronation on the eighth of January.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—It is rumored this morning that the differences between Great Britain and Russia, on the Khivan question, instead of being in a fair way for mutually satisfactory adjustment, are increasing, and that the governments of France, Austria, Italy, Turkey, Denmark and Sweden have determined to support the British government in the position it has assumed.

HAVANA, Jan. 29.—The Voz de Cuba concludes a laudatory article of King Amadeus and his scheme of reform, including the abolition of slavery, thus: "But we believe that unfortunately, with or without reforms, submission of the rebels will have to be obtained with soldiers and arms."

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 30.—Public opinion is in an excited state over the accounts of atrocities and cruelties perpetrated by Khivans on Russians who have fallen into their hands. The people are heartily in favor of an expedition against Khiva, and demand exemplary punishment of the Khan.

The military preparations for the campaign are on a grand scale, and are being pushed forward with vigor. The total force will probably number fifty thousand men. Princes and others of high rank are volunteering to accompany the expedition.

BERLIN, Jan. 30.—Carlotta is dead.

LONDON, Jan. 30.—It is reported an American banking house of London advanced Napoleon £200,000 for a meditated coup, and the money was returned upon the Emperor's death.

PARIS, Feb. 1.—Communication between San Sebastian and the interior of Spain has been entirely interrupted by the Carlists, and no mails have been received in Paris for three days past. There is no communication with Bilboa except by sea, and an attack on that town by the Carlists is apprehended. The railway between Ahasun and Beasin has been cut by the insurgents, and the running of trains between these places suspended.

The Carlist band entrenched at Sturriez was attacked by a force of royal troops, and maintained their position after a conflict of three hours' duration. The insurgents claim a victory.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The British Isles were visited last night by one of the most violent storms ever experienced, even at this season of the year. Snow fell to an extraordinary depth in the city and country. This morning it was six inches deep in the streets of London. Travel was almost wholly suspended. Omnibuses and cabs ceased running, and scarcely a vehicle of any description has been seen in the streets all day. In the provinces the snow fell much heavier, and in the extreme north drifts are several feet deep. The gale raged with great fury all around the English and Irish coast, and many wrecks have already been reported, and there has been fearful loss of life, especially off Torquay and around the Sicily Islands.

Marianna District, Ala. Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Since the session of the Alabama Conference we have had variety and extremes of weather, and some variety in human events.—Finances generally are said to be "hard up." But this has been the uniform cry, with some change of tone, ever since Shinners began. However, the mighty wheels of Time roll on, and men must be up and doing, as "time and tide wait for no man."

From several pastoral charges within the Marianna district I learn that the preachers are at their posts and at work, in good earnest, to achieve wondrous things in the name of Jesus. But other charges are yet without a preacher. Three of the ten appointments in this district were left to be supplied—enough, to be sure. But two others have been added to this peculiar catalogue since Conference, thus increasing the labor and trouble of the presiding elder. These two are Greenwood and Columbia. At Conference Rev. W. A. Sampey was appointed to Greenwood, and Rev. W. G. Perry to Columbia. These brethren, however, since Conference, found themselves in such "circumstances" as they believe justify giving up these works, and have gone to that most charming country—Texas.

The presiding elder, doubtless, will change Rev. P. W. Solomon from Holmes' valley to Greenwood, and employ a local preacher on Holmes' valley, and local preachers on four other charges. So, the way the matter now stands, this district has to be cared for in half its territory from its own local ranks. At this rate we shall soon have to reverse the call from the west to the east.

Bro. Elisha Phillips, presiding elder of the Marianna district, arrived with his family on his work on the third day of January, and has rented a house at Ozark; and, by the help of the whole district, he will gather a sufficiency to furnish, as it should be, a parsonage for the district. At present he is quartered by his own supplies and the help obtained on the Ozark circuit. Now will not every charge in this district show a liberal and strong hand in this most important matter? Help all around will make the work go easily. By such generous aid we can encourage our presiding elder, and strengthen his heart and hands for the arduous work before him. Will all do this? It remains to be seen.

A CHILD'S FAITH.—A child thus beautifully expresses his faith: "Jesus has promised to carry the lambs in his arms, and as I am only a little boy it will be easier for Jesus to carry me."

THE historian, Merle D'Aubigne, has left, it is said, two nearly complete volumes on his favorite theme of the reformation, carrying down the record to the death of Luther.

"OH, for all sorrows, all sins, all failing, for all, all, all, Jesus is enough. Seek no longer anything but Jesus himself. Be ever looking straight to Jesus."

A HEN-PECKED HUSBAND, who had married his wife because she was handsome, declared that "a thing of beauty is a jaw forever."

Southwestern Bible Society.

The following account of the twenty-third anniversary of the Southwestern Bible Society is taken from the Times of this city:

This society celebrated their anniversary at the church opposite Lafayette square last night, and a goodly number of people were gathered together in honor of the occasion. The ceremonies were opened with an anthem sung by the splendid choir of this church. The Rev. John Mathews, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Felicity street, read appropriate selections from the Scriptures, among them the nineteenth Psalm and part of Paul's address to Timothy. The same reverend gentleman then offered up a prayer, invoking God's blessing on the society and its efforts.

After the choir had sung a hymn, the Rev. J. E. C. Doremus, general agent of the Southwestern Bible Society, read the annual report. This contained statistics of Bibles furnished during the past year, the amount of money expended, the number of colporteurs employed, funds on hand; in fine, everything pertaining to the working, strength, etc., of the Southwestern Bible Society.

The address was delivered by the Rev. E. G. Taylor, D. D.

The following is a synopsis of his remarks:

I shall scarce attempt, upon this occasion, any formal defense of the Bible as the word of God, or any elaborate eulogy upon it, and yet I cannot speak of it without being moved to praise.

I assume certain facts:

1. That this book, called the Bible, is the written revelation of God's will to men. That holy men of God, whose sayings by tongue and pen are here worded, spoke as if they were moved by the Holy Ghost, and that all scripture is given by the inspiration of God; that this book is the completed scripture rounded into full proportions by the same Hand that made the worlds; from which nothing can be taken away, and to which we can add nothing.

Even the enemies of the Bible confess the purity of its code of morals, while they deny the power which can renew the heart, and make the revealed law of God a delight. The book shows its divinity by its perfect adaptation to our needs.

Another fact. This book has borne the brunt of more battles than all books besides. It has been subjected to the severest tests that man's malignity, aided by the arch fiend himself, could devise. It has been the butt of ridicule in fashionable and royal circles, it has been riddled by the wit of all ages, it has been melted away to nothingness in the crucible of hate, it has been utterly consumed by the fire of men's reasonings, but it comes to us, as if unconscious of and unaffected by the trials through which it has passed, pure and unadulterated, strong and triumphant, having won its way through every opposing force.

Voltaire boasted that with one hand he would overthrow the edifices which required the hands of twelve apostles to build up. And Paine said: "I have gone up and down through the Garden of Eden, and I have cut down one after another of its trees, till I have scarce left a single sapling standing."

Vain boasts, these, for the polished wit and caustic satire directed at God's word was as a boy's pistol fired at Gibraltar—a flash, a sound, and nothing more.

A poor heathen, with a guilty and burdened heart, was raised to ecstasy because he found his name in God's word; it was the name of Sinner, and that is the address of us all, even to the street and number on the house. God's postman makes no mistake when he brings Heaven's letter to us, and thus it reaches all and enlightens all, and brings God's message and mercy to all.

We can cherish this Southwestern Bible Society, and make it a great power in the land—make it strong enough, by our assistance, to crush out this vile literature that is inundating the land and poisoning the minds of thousands.

It is the intention of the Southwestern Bible Society to go over its fields of labor with the purpose of placing in the possession of every family resident therein a copy of the word of God. Such a bugle-blast I love to hear. There is not a faltering note in it—not a quiver. It is like the summons of the Prince of Diabolus to vacate the town of Mansoul.

The society has a purpose, not simply a wish. Let us thank God for that. Since to accomplish this, says the society, there seems to be no more efficient agency than colportage, we desire, during the present year, to commission at least six colporteurs. To do this some four or five thousand dollars will be required, for which we can only look to the public of New Orleans. Here the trumpet gives the certain sound, and it is for us to prepare for the battle. Shall they look to us in vain? Times may be hard, but the work of God must go on.

The cheapest system of doing good in the world seems to be the colportage system.

For $3,300 twenty-five thousand families have been visited and the destitute of them supplied with the Bible.

And these Bible-bearers go everywhere—into asylums and prisons and hospitals, and among all classes and conditions, blessing wherever they go.

Dr. Merle D'Aubigne, so lately deceased, relates that one of them gave a New Testament to a French soldier in 1855, at Toulon, just as he was embarking for the Crimean war. The soldier asked what book it might be. "The word of God," was the answer. "Let me have it, then." But when he had received it he added, laughing: "Now it will do very well to light my pipe." The colporteur was very sorry that he had so bestowed a treasure. But God had a purpose of grace in it. In March, 1856, the colporteur found himself in the center of France, in a small village, and sought lodging at an inn, where the parents were in great distress over the death of their son, just returned from the army. "But," said the mother, "I have such consolation. He was so peaceful and happy." How is this! "He found all his comfort in one little book which he always had with him." The colporteur begged to see the book, and they brought him a copy of the New Testament, of which the first fifteen or twenty pages had been torn out, and on the inside of the cover was written: "Received at Toulon"—giving date—"despised, neglected—read—believed and found salvation." It was the book which this colporteur had given him a year before.

Somebody's money paid for that copy that sent a soul home to glory. Somebody's money paid for the hire of that colporteur that bore the message. Suppose it had been yours. Could you ever make so magnificent investment? Yes, we may now. Why may not some one here have, as his share, one of these six colporteurs scattering for him the bread of life? Why may not the poorest here give at least one copy of God's word to the perishing?

After this address Mr. Booth, chairman of the district committee, called upon different gentlemen to take up a collection, preluding this call with a few easy yet felicitous remarks on the subject of charity, characteristic of the man.

Religious Liberty in France.

In the early part of December last, says Church and State, the Abbe Junqua was cited before the Court of Correctional Police at Bordeaux, to answer for the crime of illegally wearing ecclesiastical robes. A short time before he had been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for articles published in a newspaper objecting to the dogma of infallibility. After a short examination by the court the abbe spoke as follows:

"The question which brings me here is purely one of dogma and religion. My only crime is that of not having been able to believe in the new dogma of infallibility. And am I so very culpable? Am I the only one who has not admitted this curious dogma? I am a Gallican gentleman, and so was Bossuet, who did not believe in the infallibility of the Pope. In our days the Abbe Michaud and Father Hyacinthe and many others are Gallicans, like Bossuet and myself. They do not believe in the infallibility, they have broken with the Ultramontane Church, and yet they have been neither disturbed nor prosecuted for their faith. I alone am the victim of my religious convictions and theological opinions. Alone in all France, alone in all Europe, I am prosecuted for my faith and dragged before a tribunal of Correctional Police. * * * I have done nothing but follow the teaching of my professors, and adhere to the teaching of the Gallican Church. I am a conservative of the true Catholic worship. I am an Old Catholic. It is not I who am an innovator. The innovators are revolutionists who have arbitrarily introduced new dogmas into religion, which have sown discord in the bosom of the church. It is because I would not submit to these new doctrines, and wish to remain what I was, that they wished to deprive me of my soutane. I am a doctor of la sapience; I have consulted the canon law; I have consulted my authors and masters, and, above all, the remarkable work of Pere Andre, and everywhere I found that they had no right to strip me of my gown; the only motives which can authorize such a course are dissolute habits, bigamy and adultery—none of which crimes can be laid to my charge. Oh, I swear to you that I have known no one but my poor, and have never been the lover of anything but the truth! I am a student, and have passed my life with my books. I wrote in a journal, and I was blamed for my pride, and told that I wished to set myself on a piedestal. Me proud! The poor Abbe Junqua on a piedestal! Can you believe it? In all my conduct I have been guided by the dictates of my conscience. If I have resisted the orders of my Bishop, it was that I considered myself in the right. * * Can you condemn me for having done what I, a priest and theologian, considered as my duty?"

Notwithstanding this appeal the court condemned the unfortunate abbe to six months' imprisonment, taking care to order that this additional sentence was "not to be confounded with the two years' imprisonment previously inflicted by the Court of Assize," as a punishment for his attacks upon the dogma of the Pope's infallibility. When the abbe heard this sentence he merely exclaimed: "And yet it was only a question of dogma." It seems almost impossible to credit that an outrage upon religious freedom, like the above, could have occurred with the sanction of law, in a civilized community, in the nineteenth century.

WHY dost thou refuse to listen to the sweet instructions of Christ, who day and night offers thee strength against all tribulation?

Birds of a Feather.

Bishop Haven passed through New Orleans and, of course, went to his own company." As a Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church the fact is somewhat significant. This indorsement of one of the foulest conspiracies in political history, and one of the greatest outrages upon constitutional government, by a representative of the Church North, is an item of more than mere personal interest. This advocate of miscegenation is still a prey to heritable prejudice and hate. He visits the Pinchback Legislature and discourses as follows:

This body is as fine a looking body as ever sat in Washington. The acting president of Straight University, a college doing excellent work among this people, told me that the other Senate was far inferior in composition and looks. It was composed of the vilest members of society—the gentlemen that went to Washington not being willing to run for office, and leaving their party to be manned by blacklegs and worse. Perhaps this is as bad morally; but in manners it is gentlemanly.

This polished man, slim, not large, with smooth face, small features, light tuft on the chin, choicely dressed in the best of linen, broad collar and open bosom, is Governor Pinchback. He is as graceful a gentleman as you ever meet. He is not dark, and could hardly pass for a "nigger" but for that instinct of hate which magnifies a prejudice beyond ordinary wisdom. His character is as much debated as were Websters and Clay's and the politicians of their generation, as in some who rule in high places to-day. We fear it is as justly debated. But his ability is equally unquestioned. He keeps his boat afloat in all these storms and rides these yeasty waves like a lusty swimmer, that he is.

The reason of this cry of the New Orleans old regime is not at corruption. That is, doubtless, bad enough. But there was as bad. It is because "the nigger" in this political wrestle is atop. They have the population. They have the votes. They have, what is natural, the offices. They do some swindling, we fear. But they had been swindled out of all their wages, their wives, their children, themselves, for all their lives, and from the inherited wealth which they would have had but for a like swindling of their fathers and fathers' fathers. They know that the men that robbed them would rerob them to-day, had they the power. If their former masters would unite with them they would now co-operate; but they will not. They oppose them at every turn. They will not grant them an ounce more than the law compels. They will not allow them all that, if they can help it. They refuse to let their children enter the high school, though required to do so by law. They grant them no seats in their churches, no entrance into halls and hotels and restaurants, when they can yet keep them out. They still persist in the old feeling, without any of the old power that accompanied it. They abuse the government of the nation and fill the leading papers of the city with their cries. The New Orleans Picayune of to-day commends the old South, and the old nation under the rule of that South, as a condition of "justice, political liberty and peace." It is blind still to the dreadful evil the nation then protected and the South approved. It says of the North to-day: "Free speech and a free press are extinguished." "A despotism now reigns in the United States the most odious and oppressive in Christendom. It is a despotism of numbers, without wisdom and without remorse."

Such are the words of R. Barnwell Rhett, Jr., who speaks as his father spoke twenty years ago, who seems forgetful that God has been abroad in this land the last decade, who makes the people sigh for the good old times and sit sullen at the advent of the new. Such is the newspaper influence of the most widely-circulated journal of the South. It is just the same in all the chief centers. The old journals are alike unwilling to accept the situation.

Is it any wonder the ruler of the nation, who won these liberties, should be slow to respond to committees whose very organs ceaselessly abuse him and the cause and the country he represents? Is it any wonder that he supports the government that keeps this State in unity with the administration and the country, especially when that government is undoubtedly the most legal of any existing or professing existence in this territory?

Bishop Wiley happened along at the same time. He is less gushing and somewhat more moderate than his colleague, but he is for the President. The very devout and resigned sentiment which closes the paragraph is exceedingly felicitous—"Perhaps God has something to do with it." Bishop Wiley says:

Here we had the good pleasure of meeting with Bishop Haven on his way to Mexico. In company with him we visited the Mechanics' Institute, where the so-called "Pinchback" Legislature was in session. We were introduced to the acting Governor, and were invited to open the two houses with prayer. I do not pretend to fathom the depths of the "Louisiana imbroglio." I am fearful that it is merely a contest between the unscrupulous leaders of the two parties. Nor is it possible now to say how it is to be ended. It has worked itself into a terrible knot of complication that nobody can untie, and that nobody seems to have authority to cut. Accepting the President's statement of his own motives and actions, I do not see how he could have done less, nor do I now see what authority he has to do more. It is a little remarkable that this Legislature is now assembling in that very hall where, in 1866, the Radical convention was assailed by the mob, and whose floor and walls were crimsoned with martyr's blood. Perhaps God has something to do with it.

We give these extracts that they may be enjoyed in connection with the disclosures of the Congressional investigating committee, and that the record of our Northern brethren may stand fairly before the country. The Independent and some other Northern journals have come out manfully against the usurpations and wrongs of the Louisiana conspirators, but no journal of the Methodist Episcopal Church has intimated that the Burrell-Pinchback party could be in the wrong.

Proceedings of the Board of Trust of the Central University.

The Board of Trust of the Central University met in Brownsville, Tennessee, January 16, and, in the absence of the president and secretary, the Rev. Philip Tuggle was called to the chair, and the Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., was appointed secretary. Religious services were conducted by the Rev. A. R. Winfield, D. D.

The board proceeded to the election of new members nominated by the several Annual Conferences which have united in behalf of the Central University, and the nominees were all elected.

The Board of Trust now comprises the following members, viz.:

Tennessee Conference.—Rev. A. L. P. Green, D. D., Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D., Hon. E. H. East, Colonel D. T. Reynolds.

Memphis Conference.—Rev. W. C. Johnson, Rev. S. W. Moore, D. D., Hon. Milton Brown, Hon. R. J. Morgan.

North Mississippi Conference.—Rev. P. Tuggle, Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, Dr. L. C. Garland, Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar.

Arkansas Conference.—Rev. H. R. Withers, Rev. S. H. Babcock, Hon. W. W. Floyd, S. K. Stone, Esq.

White River Conference.—Rev. J. M. Steel, Rev. G. A. Dannelly, J. H. McFerrin, Esq., J. W. Stayton, Esq.

Little Rock Conference.—Rev. A. Hunter, D. D., Rev. W. C. Hearn, Colonel J. L. DeYampert, Dr. S. E. Cole.

The members present were: A. L. P. Green, W. C. Johnson, S. W. Moore, Milton Brown, P. Tuggle, T. Y. Ramsey, J. M. Steel, W. C. Hearn. Bishop McTyeire was also in attendance.

The Rev. A. R. Winfield, D. D., the Rev. W. M. Patterson and the Rev. J. J. Comer, agents of the Central University, were invited to seats with the board, and to participate in the discussions.

The board elected the following officers, viz.:

President—Hon. Milton Brown.

Vice Presidents—Hon. E. H. East, Rev. A. Hunter, D. D., Rev. J. M. Steel, Rev. H. R. Withers, Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, Rev. S. W. Moore, D. D.

Secretary—Rev. D. C. Kelley, D. D.

Treasurer—Rev. A. L. P. Green D. D.

Executive Committee—Rev. W. C. Johnson, Colonel D. T. Reynolds, Rev. P. Tuggle, J. H. McFerrin, Esq., Rev. W. C. Hearn, Rev. S. D. Babcock; together with the president, secretary and treasurer of the board.

After the election of president the Hon. Milton Brown took the chair, and, in the absence of the secretary elect, the Rev. W. C. Hearn performed the duties of that office.

Various questions of importance were discussed and settled. A series of by-laws was adopted. The agents appointed by the Bishops for the several Annual Conferences were duly recognized and their support provided for, it being distinctly specified that not a dollar of donations to the Central University should be consumed in payment of salaries, as the principal of all funds given to it is to be invested and preserved, and never to be alienated from the objects of the Central University; except that in the event of ultimate failure, which is viewed only as a possibility, the principal of every contribution, great or small, is to be returned to the donor. The interest on notes given was fixed at six per cent. per annum. The Rev. Dr. Hearn and Judge East were appointed a committee to prepare suitable notes, bonds, deeds, etc., in blank, for the use of agents. The following resolution was adopted, viz.:

Resolved, That the several agents of this board be and are hereby authorized to visit any and all of the Conferences co-operating, in furtherance of the interests committed to them.—Western Methodist.

A WOMAN in Ohio recently obtained a verdict of $1,000 from the counseller who had helped to ruin her husband. That is a good law. We wish it were enforced everywhere.

ONE REASON why the Pope thinks so much of American Catholics is said to be that he never takes up an American paper without seeing something about Boston Miss.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1873.

WHOSE I AM.

Jesus, Master, whose I am,
Purchased thine alone to be,
By thy blood, O spotless Lamb!
Shed so willingly for me:
Let my heart be all thine own,
Let me live to thee alone.

Other lords have long held sway;
Now thy name alone to bear,
Thy dear voice alone obey,
Is my daily, hourly prayer.
Whom have I in heaven but thee?
Nothing else my joy can be.

Jesus, Master, I am thine!
Keep me faithful, keep me near;
Let thy presence in me shine,
All my homeward way to cheer.
Jesus, at thy feet I fall!
Oh! be thou my all-in-all.

Ministry of Song.

Sanctification.

Sanctification is a progressive work. It has its degrees of grace and glory, both in time and in eternity. In time the sanctified man is the temple of God, in which a double trinity in unity dwells. First. He is the temple in which the Father, Son and Holy Ghost dwell in unity, and shine forth to the visible eye in resplendent and magnificent glory—just as the face of Moses shone when he came down from the mount, though not perhaps in so great a degree. This shining forth of the glory of God we have often seen with our own eyes on the countenance of the sanctified man or woman. And while it makes Christians rejoice, it strikes the sinner with wonder and amazement; yet there is a tenderness and sweetness in it that reverences the sinner into awe, melts his hard heart into tears, and oftimes causes him to cry out: "What shall I do to be saved?"

Second. The graces of the Spirit of God unite in the soul of the sanctified man, and form a trinity in unity there, while his soul is in the body. This trinity in unity is faith, hope and love, and these graces live and sing together in the soul of the sanctified man, and he goes on rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, and in all things giving thanks from one degree of grace and glory to another, until he arrives at the fullness of the stature of a man, strong in the Lord and the glory of his might—until filled with all the fullness of God. He walks in the light, as God is in the light, and they have fellowship one with the other in all they do and say. If he is a preacher, God is with him and in him in all his sermons, exhortations and prayers, and he preaches, exhorts and prays in demonstration of the Spirit and with power. God gives him souls for his hire and seals to his ministry. If he is a member, his light shines wherever he goes most gloriously, so that others see his good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven.

In death the sanctified man or woman falls at his or her post all covered with glory. When I was but a boy I remember well standing by the bedside of a dying saint. He was a Methodist preacher. When they all thought he would soon die they called in his physician, who lived near by. The physician came, and I was very much excited and anxious to know what the doctor thought of his case. The doctor walked to his bedside and examined him closely, and retired to the fire and took his seat. The dying saint asked the doctor what he thought of his case. The doctor said to him: "As I believe you are prepared for death, I will tell you what I believe, as you have asked me to do so. I believe you will be a dead man in twelve hours." I was very much troubled and excited to hear the doctor say that, but I kept my eyes on the face of the dying man, for I believed that he was a Christian, and I desired to know how a Christian died. After the doctor told him he believed he would be a dead man in twelve hours, he closed his eyes and commenced working his lips. I thought he was praying. He continued working his lips for some time, and suddenly a bright smile covered his face, and it became brighter and brighter, until he said with a loud voice: "Glory to God. I will be in heaven in twelve hours." He called his wife to him and bid her farewell, and told her to meet him in heaven. He called all his children, one by one, and reached out his hand and bid them farewell, and exhorted them to meet him in heaven. He then called all that were in the house, one by one, and bid them farewell, and exhorted them to meet him in heaven. I do not believe there was a dry eye in the house. Last of all, he called me—for I was named after him—and said: "Give me your hand." I gave him one of my hands and held the candle in the other, and he said: "My son, I want you to promise me to try to meet me in heaven. Will you do it?" I was so affected that I could not speak, but I promised him I would by nodding my head. After he bid all farewell he continued praising God and slapping his hands as long as he could raise them, and when he could not speak nor raise his hands he worked his fingers in the direction of slapping his hands. I saw him breathe his last breath, with his face shining with supernatural light, and this brightness did not finally leave him after he was dead. I have given this case to show you how the sanctified man dies. Lord grant that our last end may be like his. The immortal soul of the dying saint is now gone to the paradise of God, and is with the blessed Jesus, and will remain with him for evermore. The battle is now fought and the victory won, and he is happy forever.

How the idea of the soul's losing any part of its identity, after the death of the body, entered the mind of any man on earth I am not able to say. But I suppose this idea was inferred from the thirteenth chapter of Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, thirteenth verse: "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." This doctrine has been preached and sung and believed and taught by our people from the beginning down to the present time. But I cannot believe it, because it seems to me to be unphilosophical; and if unreasonable, it must be untrue. To prove it unreasonable and untrue we will found an argument on the word of God. The same apostle says, Philippians i, 21: "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Now the idea we here oppose holds: to die is loss to the soul, instead of gain. It supposes that when the body of the saint dies the soul loses two of the attributes that it possessed when in the body, namely, faith and hope; and therefore the unity of the graces of the Spirit are dissolved and destroyed by the death of the body. Hence it is very clear that the death of the body is great loss to the soul, instead of gain. Now, we hold that the soul loses nothing at all by being separated from the body in the article of death, but that the death of the body is great gain to the soul. It releases it from its prison-house of clay, and translates it to a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens above, where Jesus reigns, and saints and angels dwell.

Again, by depriving the soul of its attributes—faith and hope—at the death of the body, we not only make the death of the body great loss to the soul, but we also destroy its identity; because it takes all the attributes of the human soul to constitute its identity. Deprive it of one attribute and it is no longer a perfect human soul. For instance, deprive the human soul of its immortality and it becomes mortal, and dies with the body; deprive it of reason and it is no longer intelligent; deprive it of faith and it is an infidel; deprive it of hope and you plunge it into despair; deprive it of love and it is a demon. We therefore conclude that the old theory that deprives the soul, at the death of the body, of faith and hope, deprives it of two of its attributes, and annihilates its existence as a necessary consequence. Therefore it must be untrue. But here it may be said that the soul has no need of faith and hope when heaven is gained and God is seen with human eyes. We have already shown that these attributes are necessary to constitute and preserve the identity of the human soul; and, in addition to this, we say they are just as necessary in eternity as they were in time in order to go on to perfection.

We have said that sanctification is a progressive work, not only in time, but also in eternity. The perfection of the saints and angels is a comparative perfection, not absolute perfection. None but God himself is absolutely perfect. Hence the saints in glory are progressing nearer and yet nearer to the absolute perfection of God. They go on from glory to glory, become brighter and brighter by the reflection of the light and glory of God's absolute perfection on their immortal souls. Faith believes this, hope expects and desires it, and love enjoys it. Therefore faith, hope and charity are all as necessary in order to this progression in Christian perfection in eternity as they were in time. To prove clearly to our minds that this perfection goes on in eternity by the reflection of God's absolute perfection of light and glory on the saints and angels in glory, and that the longer they remain there the brighter they are, we only have to refer to the cases of Moses and the angels at the sepulcher of our Lord. Moses was only forty days and nights with the Lord on the mount, and when he came down from the mount his face shone so bright that the children of Israel could not bear the light. When the angel appeared at our Lord's sepulcher his countenance was like lightning, and the soldiers fell as dead men. If Moses had been as long in the presence of God as the angel had been, the Israelites also would have fallen before him as dead men. Therefore we conclude that the longer the soul is in glory the brighter it will be.

But the Scriptures not only teach the progressive perfection of the soul, but also the perfection of the body. St. Paul says, in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians, that this corruptible body shall put on incorruption, and that this natural body will be raised a spiritual body, and then these perfect, incorruptible, spiritual bodies will be caught up to meet the Lord in glory, and be forever with the Lord. And Christ says: "Where I am, there shall ye be also," both soul and body. And as the human nature of Jesus Christ is exalted above the angels of God, and is seated on the right hand of the Majesty on high, so will the human nature of all his saints be exalted above the angels of God on the right hand of the Majesty on high, and be forever with the Lord. This is the sanctification taught in the word of God, both in time and in eternity, and is offered to all men on the terms of the gospel. God help us all to embrace it.

Both Water and Blood.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to call your attention and that of your readers to one expression in our baptismal services. I wish to remark first, however, that I am no ritualist, and think it contrary to the genius of Methodism. I am aware of the fact that the Discipline directs that the ritual shall be used on all occasions for which it is prescribed; but does this imply that there is no choice left to the minister to adapt it to suit circumstances? I had ever thought that Methodism was not like an iron-bound vessel, one bar of which being removed, it became vulnerable; rather, it was similar to the beautiful symmetry of the heavens—adapted to every place and time. These thoughts were suggested at a late session of an Annual Conference, one brother objecting to the passage of the character of an old and esteemed minister because he would not read the passage in the baptismal services where it is said that Christ shed from his side both water and blood for the remission of sins. If such an objection had been made in an Episcopal convention we would not have been surprised. Should such a rigid ritualism ever prevail in our communion, there would be found more than one who, like Cheney, prefers truth to even church favor. St. John, in relating that Christ shed from his side both water and blood, does not say it was "for the forgiveness of sin." If he did we would accept and believe it. The apostle only stated, by divine direction, what he saw. Physiology has explained in the nineteenth century what was unknown before, and this phrase has become an internal corroborative evidence of the inspiration of the Scriptures. Nowhere is it said that Christ shed this water for the forgiveness of sin; we are informed, though, that "without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin;" that "the blood of Jesus Christ our Lord cleanseth from all sin"—no need, then, of a little water; that "we are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ," and that the glorified hosts that the same apostle saw had "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the lamb." Such texts show the design of the blood being poured out, but no inkling is given of the design of the water. If the following arguments are correct, in the proper sense of the word Christ never shed water from his side.

The various circumstances connected with the death of Christ prove it to have resulted from a rupture of the heart.

Christ suffered for the sins of the whole world. Something is known of the agony produced by a consciousness of the guilt of sin from what the penitent experiences when burdened with the wrath of God, or the dying sinner when he realizes that he is lost. We may conceive from this the agony Christ endured when God laid on him the iniquity of us all. The accumulated wrath of God due a guilty world was visited on his sinless soul. Let us illustrate it by the rays of the sun scattered over all the earth. Gather a few beams of them in a sun-glass and they burn; imagine, then, that all the rays of the sun were concentrated on the Rocky mountains. If they were of solid steel they would, "like an insubstantial pageant, fade." Likewise, if one sinner suffers under the wrath of God such pain in conviction or death, what would Jesus suffer when bearing the sins of the whole human race in his body on the tree? It is more than the human nature of Jesus can endure. His agony is infinite; his heart bursts under the awful load. Six hours, or at most seven, Christ hung upon the cross. Created out of the substance of the virgin with Adam, he was the most perfect form of humanity that ever existed, capable of enduring more pain, as well as performing more labor. Therefore, if only physical suffering produced his death, it ought to have taken several days, for we read of a Carthagenian general who hung upon the cross several days, and the malefactors were still living when the soldiers came to bury them; and Pilate marveled when he learned that Jesus was dead already. It must, therefore, have been more than physical pain that caused the death of Christ. "He cried with a loud voice and gave up the ghost." This is like the death of one shot through the heart. There is a shriek, a convulsion, and life is extinct. So it was with Jesus.

In the death-gasp he breathed the beautiful truth upon the world: "It is finished." Of course he means the sacrificial part of his work. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin," I believe, is sound doctrine. But when Christ said, "It is finished," the soldier had not then pierced his side, and the blood therefore had not been shed.

There is a sack or bag that incloses the heart, known as the pericardium. When Jesus' heart was ruptured by that great spiritual suffering the blood was "shed" and emptied into this receptacle, and there remained until the soldier's spear revealed the fact; then straightway came there out blood and water. A wound does not bleed at once, especially if internal; there is some time required for the cavities to fill, as well as for the blood to gather; so that implies that it had already accumulated and only wanted egress. While the blood was standing in the pericardium it coagulated, just as it would have done in any other vessel, separating into a thin, watery substance (serum,) and a dark, liver-colored mass (crassamentum.) So on the point of the soldier's spear were these two different parts of the blood—the serum, or water, as it is called by St. John, and the crassamentum, or blood, as he likewise terms it to describe what he saw. Therefore Jesus shed nothing but blood from his side, and it cannot be expected of any one, except a sacramentarian of the most rigid type, to believe that Christ shed from his side water for the forgiveness of sins. ## Presiding Elders and Pastors.

MR. EDITOR: Your correspondent, Inquirer, has certainly been very unfortunate in his experience with "pastors." We presume from his letter that he has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for the last twenty-five years, and he never knew but two "pastors," one of whom is dead and the other is married. So he does not know one "pastor" in the church. This is a lamentable and startling fact to be communicated to the world. But we console ourselves with the thought that there are many things in this little world that no one man knows.

Will the brother tell us why the young man quit so much pastoral work after his marriage? It certainly was not because he was less interested in the salvation of souls. If his wife exerted such an influence over him, he was surely very unfortunate in his selection.

We frequently hear persons say, "O that we had such 'pastors' as used to belong to our Conference;" and the preachers say, "O that the people were as liberal in the support of the ministry as they once were." Bad paymasters will bankrupt any firm; and those people who never pay their preacher, or, if they do, run their hand away down into a hogskin purse to get a bill that is so badly torn that it will not pass in their country store—and the smallest one they have, at that—and as they draw it out you can hear the grunt of the old sow, and then go off and boast about what they have done for the preacher, will break up the pastorate of any church.

I will give your correspondent an instance with which I was personally acquainted, that will perhaps throw some light on the subject. There is a preacher in this Conference, of no small talent, who was sent to a circuit that prided itself on its wealth and influence in the Conference. One day a good steward and his wife called on him, and as he was a good friend and brother the preacher's wife set the best before them for dinner she had—cooked the last dust of flour and slice of meat—and that night the "pastor" and his family ate corn bread and drank coffee for supper. That steward went off and told his church that he did not expect to try to collect any money for that preacher, because he lived better than his people. When the "pastor" heard of it he went to work for his daily bread, just as you would have done, brother.

I never was a presiding elder, but I imagine, from what I have seen of them, that their trials and labors are much greater than those of a "pastor." Inquirer, however, speaks very lightly of what the presiding elder in question has to say about their trials and labors. For the benefit of those who are not posted, I will give an extract from a private letter from this presiding elder, that now lies before me. It was not intended for the press, and I hope he will pardon me for giving it publicity. He says:

"I have just completed the third round of quarterly meetings. I have traveled 3,522 miles, visited 177 families, made 394 visits, preached 106 sermons, baptized 59 persons, and collected $262.25 for Bishops. The sermons would average an hour and a half, making 159 hours. The services would average 30 minutes more, making 200 hours. Held 36 Quarterly Conferences, which would average one hour and a half, making 54 hours."

Now let the "pastor" who can beat that speak for himself.

As for doing away with presiding elders, I had hoped that that idea would stay in the Northern Methodist Church, where so many wanted to be Bishops, and saw no chance but to increase their number. As far as I know, the church wishes to retain presiding elders. We little preachers are always glad when they come, and the people are perfectly elated, for they know that they are going to hear some big sermons. Our presiding elder stays with us sometimes three or four days, preaches all the time, visits all he can, eats such things as are set before him, "asking no questions for conscience' sake." The last time he was with me he preached three sermons, and the time before that he preached five. I hope, when Inquirer reads this, he will be able to say that he has seen two "pastors" and heard of one presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

As for the "Annual Conference selecting the Bishop's Council," too much of that has already been done for the good of the church. I have not the space to give my objections to his proposition, but will refer Inquirer to a book entitled "The Bishop and his Council," and when he has read that, I think, instead of wanting to do away with presiding elders, he will join me in writing, and contend for a presiding elders' conference, to meet once a year, where all the presiding elders can meet and exchange ideas and plans, like we little preachers do in a District Conference. And I think, perhaps, by this means the presiding eldership would become more efficient in the church.

May the good Lord give us more "pastors and presiding elders."

BY H. WALTER FEATHERSTON.

The earth is wrapped with midnight's vail,
The wild wind loudly shrieks,
And on the tempest's wings a wail
Of woe is borne, which speaks
Of frantic grief, which none can know
Save sufferers such as she
Who pours out there her tide of woe,
And cries: "O wretched me!"

It comes between the blasts of wind,
In accents quivering wild,
And mutters o'er a world unkind
To night's poor sad'ning child.
It speaks of what it cannot tell,
Hid where we cannot see—
Within the breast, where a little hell
Pours forth: "O wretched me!"

Why thus this wild and weird wail?
Why thus this frantic cry?
What threw around thee Sorrow's vail?
Has black-winged Death passed by
And plucked an idol from thy breast,
Or rudely whirled thee?
Else whence this wretched, wild unrest),
Which sighs: "O wretched me?"

"Death's angel has no terrors now
To me; the loveless world
Has said I'm fallen; and I bow
Beneath the shame thus hurled
Upon me by that awful word,
Which stamps eternally
A stain upon my name which blurr'd
It so. 'O wretched me!'

"I'm fallen, fallen, oh! so low;
In shame's degraded dust
I lie, and drink the bitterest woe.
My God! O is it just
That I for one misstep must drink
The dregs of ev'lasting?
For one which then (ere) pardoned sink
To hell? 'O wretched me!'

"To hell—a mundane hell which man
Has made for such as I—
In which I lie; nor from it can
I ever, ever fly.
Until my spirit leaves this form,
And flies, O God, to thee,
My God, come quell this raging storm
Which howls: 'O wretched me!'

"My name, so spotless and so fair,
Is stamped with burning shame;
And behaved is printed there—
O refined, fallen name!
My proud young spirit oft rebels
And says: I shall be free!
But, ah! that withering blight compels
Again the 'O wretched me!'"

The wild night-storm still onward sweeps,
Still comes that quivering wail;
That fallen, broken heart still weeps,
Hid there by Night's dark vail.
This life's a night of darkest hue,
O fallen one, to thee!
This world a storm with ends but few;
It howls: "O wretched me!"

ROLLING FORK, Miss., Jan. 11, 1873.

IN SCOTLAND they have very narrow, open ditches, called sheep drains. A man was riding a donkey one day across a sheep pasture, and when the donkey came to a sheep drain he would not go over it. So the man rode him back a short distance, and turned him round and put the whip to him, thinking, of course, that the donkey, going so fast, would jump the drain before he ever knew it. But not so. On they came, and when the donkey got to the drain he stopped all of a sudden, and the man went over Mr. Jack's head. No sooner had he touched the ground than he got up, and, looking the donkey straight in the face, he said: "Very weel pitched; but, then, how are ye going to get over yersel'?"

OBITUARIES.

MRS. ELIZA MARTIN was the daughter of Abner and Delilah Pipes, and was born and raised in Jefferson county, Mississippi. Her early prospects in life were unusually bright and flattering, but, without her fault, they were soon overcast by domestic affliction and heavy pecuniary losses. In her affliction and bereavement she was led to seek her happiness in God and lay up her treasure in heaven. About thirty years ago the writer baptized her and received her into the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which she remained a devoted and consistent member until death. In December she went to Jackson, Mississippi, to visit her only daughter, who is there in deep affliction, where she was attacked with pneumonia, and died on the fifteenth of the month, in great calmness and with the full assurance of a blissful immortality. Nothing more need be said. Her whole Christian course, both in prosperity and adversity, was creditable to herself and the church.

J. G. JONES.

PORT GIBSON, Miss., Jan. 29, 1873.

OBADIAH M. THOMPSON departed this life November 3, 1872, in his sixty-sixth year. He was a native of Virginia. While he was yet a boy his parents moved to Kentucky. In 1838 they moved to Covington, Louisiana, leaving him in Kentucky, but he soon followed them. In course of time he was united in matrimony to Miss Jane Williams, who, with eight of their ten children, survives him.

The earlier part of his life was spent in the service of sin, which he deeply regretted in after-life. In 1852 he was awakened to a consciousness of his guilt and danger, and became a member of the Methodist Church, of which he continued a faithful member till death. For three years before his death he was an efficient steward in the church. He was known among us as a successful planter, a good citizen, an affectionate father and a kind husband. As a neighbor he was esteemed for his integrity and urbanity. His last illness was short but severe. He was not taken by surprise when death came, but was ready to depart and to be with Christ, which he felt was far better than anything that could be enjoyed on earth. We feel confident that for him to die was gain. As a man and as a Christian he has left us an example worthy of imitation.

The assurance that he rests and rejoices in heaven must be a source of strong consolation to his family and friends. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

J. L. FORSYTH.

EAST FELICIANA, La., Jan. 22, 1873.

WILLIAM DAVIS, JR., was born in Mecklenburg county, Virginia, on the seventh of August, 1794, and died in Camden, Madison county, Mississippi, on the nineteenth of November, 1872. He was raised in the county and State of his nativity.

In the year 1814 he enlisted as a soldier in the United States army, and was stationed at Petersburg until the close of the war.

In 1833 he accompanied his brother, Rev. A. Y. Davis, to Mississippi, and settled in Madison county, where he continued to reside until his death. In this county he held the office of magistrate for about thirty years, during which time very few appeals were taken from his decisions to the higher courts; and no case is remembered in which his decision was not sustained. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and stood very high as a Mason for more than fifty years.

For many years of his life, unfortunately for himself, he was skeptical. It was most fortunate, however, for him, and most gratifying to his friends and relatives, that several years ago, after he had passed his threescore years and ten, he was influenced by the Spirit to seek the salvation of his soul. This he did at the altar during a protracted meeting in Camden. He was soundly converted, and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Subsequently to this time he took great delight in reading God's word and attending church.

Last year, although his physical frame was palsied and greatly paralyzed, so much so that he was unable to walk only at an exceedingly slow gait, several times he came to church, one of which was to hear the funeral sermon of the wife whom he dearly loved. Bro. Davis was honest, honorable, generous and fond of entertaining his friends.

More than once last year his pastor asked him if he was prepared for death. He always affirmed that he was. A. B. STEWART.

MRS. MARY DUBOSE LANGLEY, sister of Mrs. William Winans, of sacred memory, died at Forest Home—the residence of her niece, Mrs. Gibson—near St. Louis, Missouri, January 3, 1873, aged eighty-one years.

A strange life has ended! The worn spirit, the tired brain, the tired hands, the weary eyes, the weary heart, still, all still, and at rest at last! Kind hands have laid her in her coffin; the "faithful few" have followed her to the city of the dead. The grave has closed over her, and she has been left to sleep undisturbed her last sleep. How sweet the rest of the grave must be to one who had traveled so long, and over such a rough, rigged way. Truly her life has been varied, sad and adverse. She had noble traits of character; she was generous, sympathizing, honest and true; but her great pride was as a cloud over all, and in every shadow, every blight, every storm that came to sadden her heart and darken her life, you could distinctly trace the hand of a loving Providence striving to crush this enemy of her soul, and lead her to the cross of Christ. And in the closing years of her pilgrimage it was beautiful to see how she loved the Hand that had afflicted her, and turned to her Savior as her only hope and trust. In death she felt she had nothing to fear, and was willing to depart. I am more and more a believer in that covenant-keeping God, promising to be with your children to the third and fourth generation of them that love and fear him. The prayers of the sainted father and mother, though more than a half century dead, God still heard, and, I doubt not, their prayers aided largely in achieving the final safety of their dear departed one.

Mrs. Langley was born in South Carolina in 1791. Her maiden name was Dubose. While young, and full of wild, rapturous dreams of coming years, she moved with her husband, Dr. Langley, to Woodville, Mississippi, where he practiced his profession until his death. They had several children, some of them buds of rich promise; but all died young, except a son who still survives her. I know "there is no love like mother-love"—none so tender and devoted; but it does seem her yearnings, her anxiety, her willingness to do and dare and suffer all things for that son, excelled anything I have ever known. Parental affection in her breast was a passion that could not rest, and only strengthened with her failing years. She was a member of the Methodist Church—the church of her ancestors—and its triumphs and defeats cheered and depressed her spirit as if it was her own household. The "book world" all her long life was her delight and solace, but of late years her Bible was her chief study. It was her regret that in all her extensive reading she had neglected so much this book of books, which was in truth her only unfailing chart to guide her steps in the narrow path that leads from earth to heaven. Mrs. Langley was the last relic of a noble family. We loved her and we shall miss her. Dear aunt, farewell.

"Somewhere beyond the sunset and the night
We hope to meet you."

The Survey of Palestine.

One of the most curious features about the conformation of Palestine is the system of water courses, which is more complex than in any other country. These are laid down "conventionally" in all existing maps—i. e., they are known to run down in a sort of wild disorder, and are so represented. We have them here for the first time correct. Here, too, may be remarked the Roman road along which St. Paul traveled in his memorable journey from Jerusalem. It has never yet been followed up. Country, again, near Nablous (Shechem) supposed to be barren and desolate, is shown to be richly wooded and fertile. We could have wished the tracings to have been all finished, with the hill sketching, etc. The great end to be gained by the survey is, of course, the right understanding of the historical portions of the Bible. To understand history of any kind a map is indispensable—much more when, as with the Bible, most of the events recorded took place in a very small country. But in Palestine there are whole districts where the foot of an explorer has never been set, and it is not too much to say that in spite of all the books on Palestine, it is less understood than any other historical country. It cannot, moreover, be too strongly borne in mind that all the discoveries made by the recent explorations in Palestine and Sinai do undoubtedly bear out and confirm in a most remarkable manner the geographical accuracy of the Bible.

One of the most important points in the work is the identification of the ancient sites. This must be effected, first of all, by the resemblance of the modern names; but, as this cannot always be relied on, attention must always be paid to the surrounding names and the features of the country. Thus it appears from the papers of the Geographical Society that when Captain Warren was in Philistia he was anxious to identify the site of the Cave of Makkedah. He found four villages near each other whose names suggested the four among which the name of Makkedah occurs in the Book of Joshua. Thus Joshua gives Gederoth, Bethdagon, Naamah and Makkedah. In the undoubted neighborhood of these places Captain Warren found Kulrah, Beitdejan, Naamah (called by Mr. Drake Nyaneh) and El Mughar, which last means "the cave." May not this, he asks, be the Cave of Makkedah? The tenacity of the ancient names to the soil is one of the most curious things about Palestine. Thus Mr. Tyrwhitt Drake, in some cases confirming previous travelers, identifies the old town of Hadid, Jehub, Beneberak and Gezer with the modern names of Haditheh, El Yehadiyeh, Ibn Ibrak and Tell Jezar. Ruins are everywhere. Often the only vestiges of an old town left are the tanks and cisterns cut in the rock by its former inhabitants, every scrap of stone being taken away by their successors.

To quote from an interesting paper by Mr. Drake: "Many persons would doubtless smile in pity were I to show them a hill-top now occupied by a rude wall inclosing a few fig trees and a rock-hewn cistern or well, and say: 'Here is the site of a considerable town.' Most of the ruins are at the present day invisible to the unpracticed eye, but may be traced by the wells, tanks and caves hewn in the rock—the latter still inhabited by a race of Troglodytes, half agricultural, half pastoral—by fig trees and an olive grove, or a few patriarchal trees split by ages into two or three distinct trunks, gray and gnarled relics of former prosperity. The eye will detect carefully-squared stones in the loosely-piled wall of the garden or sheepfold, and inquiry will teach the traveler that everywhere beneath the soil, where vegetation assumes a deeper green, covering perhaps two or three acres, squared stones will be found thickly strewn. In another place a few heaps of stones, the universal well, and a few foundations may be traced above ground. Unimportant as these ruins now seem, chance will occasionally throw a gleam of light on one, and analogy leads to a true value being put on others."—London Daily News.

OUTWARD BOUND.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

A grievous day of wrathful winds,
Of low-hung clouds which scud and fly,
And drop cold rains, then lift and show
A sullen realm of upper sky.

The sea is black as night; it roars
From lips afoam with crisp spray,
Like some fierce, many-throated pack
Of wolves, which scent and chase a prey.

Crouched in my little wind-swept nook,
I hear the menacing voices call,
And shudder as above the deck
Topples and swings the wellering wall.

It seems a vast and restless grave,
Insatiate, hungry, beckoning
With dreadful gesture of command
To any free and living thing.

"Oh, Lord!" I cry, "thou makest life
And hope and all sweet things to be;
Behoke this hovering, following Death—
This horror never born of thee."

A sudden gleam, the waves light up
With radiant, momentary lines—
Amber and shadowy pearl and gold,
Opal and green and unknown blues—

And rising on the tossing walls,
Within the foaming valleys swung,
Soft shapes of sea-birds, dimly seen,
Flutter and float and call their young.

A moment; then the lowering clouds
Settle anew above the main,
The colors die, the waves rise higher,
And night and terror rule again.

No more I see the small dim shapes,
So matched of wind and wave,
Nestling beneath the tempest's roar,
Cradled to what I deemed—a grave.

But all night long I lay and smiled
At thought of those soft folded wings,
And trusting, with the trustful birds,
In Him who cares for smallest things.

The Duty of the Church Toward Children.

BY REV. NEWMAN HALL.

Every congregation has a large number of children connected with it. Many of these belong to Christian families. Many more are instructed in the Sunday school. Yet how few of them are recognized as fellow-believers, how few are church-members, how few are found at the Lord's table! May we infer that the many thus unacknowledged as members of the flock are unsaved? If not, should the church leave outside the fold those tender lambs who most need its shelter? But if until to enter, by reason of their being unsaved, is the church doing all it might do to save them? It is acknowledged that children dying in infancy go at once to the Savior's bosom. Those, then, who outlive the season of infancy were at that time Christ's own lambs. Is it a necessity that, on ceasing to be infants, they cease to be Christ's? Are we to take it for granted that, inheriting a depraved nature, they must unavoidably wander away from the fold to which they once belonged, and that the duty of the church is to go after them only when they have wandered far away, and bring them back after years of sin? Must it be that not till their fleece has been torn with thorns and defiled with filth they can be welcomed by the flock and recognized as true members of the fold?

A saying is attributed to the Rev. Thomas Binney which startled his hearers, to the effect that the children of Christians ought never to be converted. Did not their parents pray for them from their very birth and before their birth? Were not those children consecrated to God if not in baptism, yet with believing and earnest entreaty that they might be the Lord's? If the spirit of those prayers has been manifested in patient, loving instruction, by a holy and consistent example; if from the first the children have been made to know that Jesus loves them, and if they have seen Jesus reflected in the daily life of their parents, and the home of childhood has been a church of Christ, might we not expect that from the very dawn of consciousness there might be a constantly growing knowledge and love of Jesus and an increasing desire to please him, so that the child might be unable to refer to a time when he was not dear to its young heart? Thus conversion, as usually understood, would be unnecessary. Beneath the error of the Episcopal catechism is there not a deep truth? There is a mode of teaching which addresses children as if they belonged to the devil and were born for hell, but that they ought to pray to God to pity and love and rescue them. Alas! there are multitudes who have given themselves to the devil, who are on the road to hell, and who may well cry to God to rescue them from their own mad and wicked choice. But, surely, in the case of little children there is a blessed truth in the teaching which says to them: "God loves you, little ones. He sent his dear Son to die for you. Jesus is your kind Shepherd. You belong to him. You are the little lambs of his fold. Do not leave the fold. The roaring lion is outside. He wants to seize you. But you do not belong to the wicked, cruel devil who hates you. You belong to the dear, kind Jesus who loves you. Do not go away from him; but love him and follow him as long as you live." Not by baptism, but by birth into a redeemed world, infants are members of Christ, children of God and inheritors of the kingdom of heaven.

Dying as infants, all admit this would be verified in their salvation. Living to grow up, why should all this of necessity be reversed if there is efficacy in prayer, in patient teaching, in a consistent example, and truth in the promise: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it?" The promise is not that, though he depart from it, he shall return; but that he shall not depart from it.

But let me refer to a conference held in our school-room last night on the subject of special religious services for children. And I cannot do better than simply relate some facts which were given by Mr. Tyler, a devoted young man, who consecrates his life to the good work of feeding Christ's lambs. Mr. Hammond, from America, visited us in 1870; and though there was much in his presentment of Christianity which was objectionable to many, yet his affectionate and earnest manner of urging the claims of Jesus on the young left a deep impression on many minds. After his visit, children who felt so disposed were invited to attend a special religious service every Sunday and Tuesday evening. They came of their own accord, without teachers. The hymns, prayers and addresses were calculated to interest and impress their minds. It was felt that there should be some method by which those who really loved Jesus might be able to confess him, and also enjoy the advantage of the sympathy of each other. So the "Christian Band" was formed. Papers were given to the children on which these four questions were printed: Do you love Jesus? Are you trusting in Jesus as your own precious Savior? Will you try, by the help of Jesus, to give up everything sinful? Will you try to be more and more like Jesus every day? To these was prefixed the inquiry: "Dear little friend, can you answer yes!" Each child was asked to bring back the paper with answers. Some were not returned at all. Others came back with such replies as these: To the first question, "Yes, with joy I can say I love him." "Yes, with all my heart." "Yes, because he died for me." "Yes, because he loves me so." "Yes, but I should like to love him more." "I will try with my whole heart." To the second question: "Yes, I feel he is my precious Savior." "Yes, I will try." "I am afraid not," etc. To the third: "Yes, I will pray to him to help me" (by a little girl of eight years, since gone to him!). "Yes, I will try more and more." To the fourth: "Yes, I wish to be more like him." "Yes, I will," etc. Those who brought back the papers were asked to remain after the rest had gone. Special prayer was offered—and responded to sentence by sentence, a simple prayer of consecration. This Christian band of young disciples meet once a month, when the names of those who have joined during the month are read out. They are specially watched over by the conductors of the services, and at their own desire, from time to time, are recommended to the pastor for church fellowship, still, however, continuing attendance at their own special meetings. During the present year I have had the fullest satisfaction in welcoming to the Lord's table fifteen from these services; six of whom were thirteen years old, one twelve and one eleven. But this does not indicate the total result to the church, for the services are unsectarian. The children come from the district, and are encouraged to unite themselves with any church to which their parents or friends prefer. Some may fear that the impression produced will in most cases prove transitory. To aid in forming a correct judgment, inquiry has been made respecting the first fifty who joined the Christian Band three years ago. Of these ten are church members; twenty are still regular and consistent members of the "Band;" seven belong to the Episcopal Church, and are not visited, lest it should be thought there was a wish to proselytize; two attend a Wesleyan chapel with their parents; nine have left the neighborhood; one sleeps in Jesus; one is unsatisfactory, yet often penitent.

These children often speak to their companions and invite them to the meetings and urge them to love Jesus. They hold prayer meetings, at which the petitions indicate the fullest trust in the efficacy of prayer. A friend overheard the following: "Please, Lord, make me a good girl. Bless my father and bless my mother; and O Lord, do send father some work."

The special methods adopted are open to a variety of opinions as to their wisdom. But is not some special agency rendered necessary to the general arrangements of our public worship? In church, on Sunday, are the hymns and the singing suited for children? Do the prayers express their wants? Are the sermons likely to interest and impress their minds? Do not many preachers seem quite unconscious of the presence in the congregation of any persons except thoughtful adults? Is it not the case that during several months there may not be one word specially addressed to children from the pulpit?

Children are often commended because they sit still at church. It is a satire on the service as adapted to them. Yes! It must be an effort, and it does deserve commendation to be quiet when it is impossible to be interested. But if the necessities of our adult congregation render it impossible to adapt our services to the capacities of childhood, is it not the more necessary that some special means be used to impress on their young hearts the truths of the gospel, and to preserve them, from their earliest years, within the Christian fold? "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."—Independent.

After Christianity, What?

They think to shift us off our ground by saying that as polytheism was an advance on fetichism, and judaism was an advance on polytheism, and Christianity is an advance on judaism, by and by there will come an advance on Christianity. But what advance? What is to be this faith of the future? Some form of absolute religion, or the religion of nature? We venture to say that when Christianity goes, faith goes with it. Not but that many forms of religion might try to take its place, but that none can be conceived of so palpable and sure. Any advance on Christianity must be a going, so far as we can see, from the practical to the speculative, and from the tangible to the vague. After Christ, is disposed of, what comes after him? What but a faith in which we are all at sea?

We might take that matter of the resurrection, and of the life everlasting. In what mists are we involved when we have put away the faith of the gospel. What new faith can throw light on it, or put it beyond conjecture? What does the absolute religion say about it? Or what the religion of science? Shall we take it for granted? and yet, aside from Christianity, it is just the one thing which we have no right to take for granted. The oracles of nature are well-nigh dumb concerning it, and ever and again the old question returns: "If a man die, shall he live again?" We may let our fancy run, and, doing homage to our hopes, speed departing souls to the beautiful country, but what assurance can we have touching their being and destiny? We may seem to see their spirits cleaving the sky, and excelling in their escape and freedom, but when it comes to earth, and silence and darkness, and our dearest friends buried beyond our sight, and that vail to be drawn which no mortal can penetrate, we may well wander among the graves of the departed, wondering where they are, and whether that crisis which stopped pulsation did not also put an end to their very being.

We say with confidence, therefore, that any new religion, so far from throwing greater light on this matter of the future life, would only leave it in a pagan obscurity. There is reason to hope for nothing from prophecies, revelations, intuitions or from disclosures of any kind; and we should only be going from realities to shadows. But the doctrine of immortality is one of the corner-stones of religion. It lies at the basis of obedience, piety, hopes and rewards; and, with doubt on this, doubt rests on all. Without it, the idea of God vanishes, life becomes ignoble, and religion plays no essential part in human affairs. "Give to a man a great idea of himself," says Castellar, "tell him that he bears God in his conscience, and immortality in his life, and you will see him rise by this fortified sentiment of his dignity to reclaim those rights which assure him the noblest independence of his being in society and nature." But where does man get the idea that he bears God in his conscience, and immortality in his life? and what but Christianity assures him that the germs of immortality will develop and bring forth any enduring fruit?

We believe, then, that the doctrine of the resurrection alone assures to Christianity a continuance in the world to the end of time. Not only does no other religion approach it in point of evidence, but no religion of the future can hope to approach it; and the words, "I am the resurrection and the life," coupled with the actual rising from the grave of the Lord Jesus, is the most inspiring triumph which religion can hope to achieve. All beyond this is conjecture, uncertainty, doubt; and but for Christ's rising again had doubtless forever remained so.

The truth is, what we crave in the sphere of religion is not speculation and wistfulness, but evidence and fact. Especially is this the case when it comes to the matter of immortality; and the meaning of Christ's resurrection from the grave is that, as there is a germinating power in seeds which is able to burst their coverings and involutions, and to reproduce the tree, clothing it with foliage and flower; and a power in insect life by which it is able to emerge from the larva state, and become a beautiful butterfly, so, comparing small things with great, there was in Christ an inherent, self-contained, resurgent power by means of which, as a matter of fact, he rose above all destructive forces and perishable things, at the same time bringing life and immortality to light, and becoming the first fruits of them that sleep. Now we put this fact over against all the speculations in the world, and declare it to be a triumph beyond which we can hope for nothing greater nor more inspiring.

We notice that Strauss has written a book on the "Old Faith and the New;" but before they talk of new faiths, let them give us something that is likely to equal the old. The world will never endure to go backward, nor to exchange facts for fancies. If it has gone on from fetichism to Christianity, it wants some evidence that there is a chance for further development, nor will it leave Christianity only to plunge into the void of doubt and despair.

If it is going to put away its Christ it wants a teacher more Christly, and a faith more hopeful and sublime. It believes in such a thing as progress and perfection, but not by going back to chaos, nor by committing itself to the negations of skeptics, or to the vagaries of transcendentalists.—Church and State.

Free Protestant Church in Bordeaux.

Madam Pozzo, the wife of the minister in charge, communicates to the Christian the following interesting particulars of the results of an effort which is making to evangelize a portion of perhaps the darkest portion of southwestern France:

"Through the generosity of our friends in England, and especially in Scotland—for as yet we have collected but little in England, not having visited its various towns—we have been able to secure a site, at a cost of £640. We have still remaining to us a sum of £160 toward the building. There is included in this purchase a room, formerly used as a joiner's shop, which has been adapted as a place of worship. It is, however, low, damp, and altogether unfit for this purpose.

"With regard to the state of our work in Bordeaux, we may say with gratitude to the Giver of every good gift, that during the ten years we have resided in that town we have never felt so much encouraged as at present.

"In addition to our Sabbath services, we have three different centers of evangelization established by lay brethren, though presided over generally by the pasteur. One of these meetings, held in the house of a workingman (both he and his wife Roman Catholics, who are earnestly seeking the truth,) is particularly interesting. It is composed almost entirely of Roman Catholics, who listen attentively and intelligently. I have heard murmurs of 'True, quite true' (vrai, tres vrai,) when any difference between the doctrines of Rome and the teaching of the Scriptures has been exposed. The meeting over, they leave in silence and apparent seriousness. These meetings are held in a village called Bonsent, about five miles out of town, in a room which holds between forty and fifty people. I have seen the room so filled that lamps had to be lit in the gardens, and those outside listened at the doors and windows. This reached the ears of the mayor of the village, who sent some one to see what was going on. The meeting over, he expressed his satisfaction, so that they have been continued without interruption.

"There is also a prayer meeting held weekly in the house of a workingman. Both he and his wife are zealous Christian members of the church, and though originally intended for members, it is attended by several Roman Catholics, which is a very hopeful sign, as it is simply a meeting for prayer. There is also a meeting held at the pasteur's house every fortnight for those engaged actively in the home mission work. I could mention many interesting circumstances connected with it, but I fear to lengthen my letter unduly. I must mention, however, that we have opened a free school for girls. Thirty pounds were generously contributed toward it by Mr. DuPontet's French committee, and £10 by the Ladies' Continental Committee of Glasgow; but we are still in want of funds. This school was opened on November 4, under the direction of a pious and efficient teacher, who has begun her school with thirty Roman Catholic girls. The district is entirely Roman Catholic, and one of the worst quarters in the town. Weekly evangelistic meetings will shortly be held in the school-room, and on my return we purpose opening a mothers' meeting there, so as to be brought into closer contact with the parents of the children.

"We opened, during the fair in October, a Bible stall, where we distributed upward of five thousand French tracts, and a number of English ones; also a few additional ones, illustrated, sent for that purpose by a friend. The tracts were almost always well received; some few refused them; four young men only returned to say they had received good through them, and asked for others. A very fair number of religious publications was sold, and of New Testaments also. One young man bought two versions, one by DeSaci, the Roman Catholic version, and the other the Protestant version, in order to compare them. His conversation was very serious, and he was evidently seeking the truth. A few days after he returned with a friend, whom he persuaded to buy a New Testament of the Protestant version.

"Having cast our bread upon the waters, we pray that it may be to many the Bread of Life; and we shall feel rejoiced if, out of the hundreds, perhaps thousands, who were attracted to our Bible stall, some one soul may have received eternal good. If we have much to try us in our work, we have also much to encourage us, and the day may come when we shall be permitted to see that our labors have not been in vain in the Lord, and he may grant to France a Pentecostal blessing."

WE INFER from articles in several of our Presbyterian, Congregational and Baptist exchanges, says the Western Christian Advocate, that there is entirely too much candidating, and too little of the settled pastorate. A Boston correspondent of the Advance says: "It is amusing how far the pulpit committee of a church in quest of a pastor can scent a candidate. A friend of ours having gone to his old home for Thanksgiving, offered his services to a neighboring church for the following Sabbath, his own pulpit having a supply for that day. The reply received was that, so far from being in need of a candidate, from their ample list they could furnish an indefinite number. The somber joke is that any man who now-a-days has the hardihood to appear in a vacant pulpit is supposed to be famishing for a call, and to regard that particular paradise with painful longings. It must have been from some such impression that a congregation, not far away, lately heard very nearly two hundred different preachers, and then, in their bewilderment, settled down not upon a pastor, but a 'hired man,' for a year." The New York Examiner of January 2 says: "Short settlements seem to be the order of the day. It is said the Methodists are now the longest-settled pastors in New England. One of the strongest churches in the interior of Massachusetts, and one of the most desirable settlements, has been long without a pastor, and has already heard forty-five candidates, and more are on the way. This church had a pastor settled nearly a half century. But since his death change has been the order of the pastorate. Nearly all the old parishes that were famous for keeping a minister twenty-five years have been famous for change ever since. The old church of Dr. Emmons, and that of Dr. Hawes, are cited as cases in point."

A third paper states that formerly a pastorate was like a marriage, for life; now-a-days a settlement is for the convenience of the parties. Some are no sooner settled than they are on the lookout for a better post. One star preacher said he took his pulpit as a lookout for something more congenial. Some committees are in receipt of hundreds of letters asking for a supply. When a vacancy occurs in an eligible pulpit it is marvelous how many men are on their way, providentially, to that place. Notwithstanding what one of our contemporaries is pleased to call the "exactions and hardships" of the itinerancy, it has compensations that are not found in the economy of other denominations.

DURING the past two years twenty-three thousand miles of electric cables have been laid in the waters of England, France, Spain, Holland, Turkey, China, South America and Australia.

IT IS in vain to hope to please all alike. Let a man stand with his face in what direction he will, he must necessarily turn his back on one-half of the world.

A BANK of excellent meerschaum clay has been discovered in southern California, and workmen are to be imported from Europe to manufacture it into pipes.

Religious Intelligence.

PAN PRESBYTERIANISM.—Dr. McCosh estimates that if the Presbyterian churches throughout the world are summed up, they embrace 20,000 congregations and a population of 34,000,000.

THE first Jewish congregation in this country was organized in New York in 1706, and the first synagogue built in 1721. There are now about forty synagogues in New York, and about 220 in the United States.

THE Cumberland Presbyterians are, to a large extent, leaving Tennessee for Texas and the extreme Southwest, some going to Mexico. The number of ministers of this denomination now laboring in Texas is 180.

THE report that the old Japanese edicts against Christianity have been revoked is contradicted by Mr. Knowlton. The laws stand, but the government allows the people to become and continue Christians, and says nothing about it.

THE Church of God (Winnebrennarian) claims to be "a church without sect." Its members must be immersed, must believe in immersion, must accept feet-washing and other peculiar doctrines; but these little matters are not supposed to mark sectarian lines.

THE Lutheran Church in America numbers 2,309 pastors, 1,115 congregations, 185,000 communicants. Last year were reported 2,175 pastors, 3,826 congregations, 158,000 communicants. There has been an increase during the year of 134 pastors, 289 congregations and 27,000 communicants.

REPORTS of the missionary societies of London show that their united incomes for the years 1871-72 amounted to a total of £995,995, or nearly $5,000,000. Of this amount the Church of England societies are estimated to have contributed £444,810; the Nonconformist, £367,918, and all others £183,055.

THE Old South church, Boston, is to be leased to the postoffice department for two years. The pew-holders offer to sell it to the Massachusetts Historical Society at a price to be fixed by arbitrators, in order that it may be preserved as a historical building. The public will be invited to help the Historical Society buy it.

THE English Wesleyans have passed a resolution "that future legislation for primary education at the public cost should provide such education only upon the principle of unsectarian schools under the school boards." This demand of the Nonconformists that there shall be no more State and denominational schools is likely to be heeded.

THE Waldensian Church, at a recent conference, decided to avail itself of the advantages of lay instruction, and the teaching of children in classes, as in the modern Sunday school. For some time this church has practiced the habit of requiring its evangelists, before they are ordained, to conduct a Sunday school in the presence of a committee, who thus judge their fitness for managing this branch of the missionary work.

A NEW PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL BISHOP FOR CHINA.—We understand that the Rev. W. A. Russell, of Ningpo, now in this country on leave, is likely to be shortly consecrated Bishop of North China. The salary of this appointment has for the present been undertaken by the Church Missionary Society. No decision has, we believe, been arrived at in regard to the bishopric of Victoria, Hong Kong, or the chaplaincy of Yokohama.

TRINITY CHURCH, New York city, gives all her assistant ministers $8,000 and a house, besides perquisites that will swell the amount to $10,000. But the work is quite hard. Daily service is held in the parent church twice each day, and once in the chapels. Besides this, the clergy, or some of them, have to be on duty all the time at the down-town vestry. No one calls for baptismal, funeral or other service, night or day, without some one to respond.

A NEW RELIGIOUS WONDER.—The Interior says: "The last new religious wonder in New York is the new Church of St. Bartholomew. It puts all the fine churches of the city into the shade. It is radiant with gold and crimson. The leading pews were knocked off at auction last week, $4,500 being the leading figure. It would be a burlesque to put over the door of that church: 'To the poor the gospel is preached.' 'Why don't you bid off one of our high pews?' said an earnest vestryman to a New York merchant. 'I bought a farm the other day for less than what you ask for one of those little pews,' was the answer."

AN INTERESTING church case, which has been agitating Bridgeport, Connecticut, involving the ownership of a valuable property, has just been decided by the Superior Court. It seems that a Matthew Gregory bequeathed to the trustees of a Methodist church some property, which was taken possession of by the society. Some years after a majority of the church resolved to convey it over to the Congregational fold, and accordingly organized a Congregational society. The minority, however, who still adhered to the old faith, disputed their right to appropriate property given to the Methodist society, and accordingly brought suit for the possession of the property and $4,000 damages, which have just been awarded them by the Superior Court.

FROM the Tsomo Mission House, Graham's Town district, in Kaffirland, Rev. C. Palma, a native missionary (Wesleyan,) writes of work among the heathen in their kraals, and of the conversion of more than one hundred adults among them, besides eighty young people of a day school he had recently established, and of a revival among the European Christians of his circuit. It is interesting to note the fact that Mr. Palma, a native teacher, has held English services for the benefit of the latter, and acts as class-leader for a class of eight Europeans, which looks a little as if some of the bread cast upon the waters of South Africa was returning into the English hands that scattered it. The missionary meeting held at Mount Coke in September reports that in the Tamara section of the Mount Coke circuit two new classes have been formed in heathen kraals, two new chapels are in process of erection, toward which the natives have themselves contributed £50, and two day schools have been opened.

CHURCH-GOERS IN RICHMOND.—From the figures published at the beginning of the year, showing the number of churches and church members in Richmond, Virginia, the Christian Observer infers that a very large proportion of the adults of the city are regularly connected with some religious organization. If there are two church-goers for every church-member, the majority of the inhabitants of Richmond are regular attendants on religious worship. The churches number 47, and the members 23,174, of whom the four Presbyterian churches have 1,308; the ten Methodist, 2,515; the eight Episcopalian, 1,520; the three Catholic, 5,550, which also represents their entire population; the seven white Baptists, 2,837, and the eight colored Baptist churches, 8,407.

SWITZERLAND has added a new article to its constitution, declaring that "the order of the Jesuits and the societies connected with it may not be revived in any part of Switzerland; and all action in the church and schools is forbidden to their members. Monasteries and convents may not be established or re-established." The latest telegram from Rome states that the committee of the Chamber of Deputies of the Italian Parliament have resolved "that the suppression of the Society of Jesus, including the chief establishment of the order in Rome, is imperatively demanded by the interests of the nation." It is added that this announcement was received by the Liberal deputies with enthusiastic applause. Such are the responses of the European nations to the Vatican Council.

THE Old Catholics of Switzerland have been holding an enthusiastic conference at Olten. About 120 delegates, representing forty localities, were present at the forenoon meeting. The statutes of the Swiss Society of Liberal Catholics were discussed, and resolutions were passed in favor of the establishment of Old Catholic cures. At the public meeting in the afternoon more than 3,000 persons were present. Prof. Munzinger, of Bern, communicated to the assembly the resolutions which had been passed at the delegate meeting. Prof. Reinkens then delivered a discourse, which was frequently interrupted by loud applause. Then came speeches by Pastor Geschwind and M. Leo Weber, of Soleure, followed by a report of the progress of Old Catholicism during the past year. Finally, Dr. Augustine Keller moved that the papal nuncio be no longer recognized as an embassador by the confederation.

CHINESE MISSION CONVERTS.—A recent letter from the New Connection Methodist Chinese Mission, after telling the story of the baptism of several new converts, says: "One is a doctor of medicine, though in England we should call him a herbalist; still he ranks as a medical man among the Chinese. Another is a veterinary surgeon, a calling, by the by, not considered very reputable by the Chinese of Buddhistic prejudices; still, a calling that pays. Another is a saddle and harness-maker, who has a good business in one of the leading thoroughfares in the city. Then there is a farmer, a fine-looking old man in comfortable circumstances, simple as a child in his faith in Christ. A brawny blacksmith and a bank messenger complete the list. I have mentioned these facts because of the prevalent opinion that none join mission churches but men who hope to gain pecuniary help, idlers or coolies, and disreputable characters.

A PUBLIC STATEMENT by the corporation of Boston University, says the Western Christian Advocate, in regard to the University and the great fire, says that a part of the funds of the institution were applied, soon after their reception, to the erection of a granite block for stores in Oliver street, Boston. The stores were just completed, and the first monthly installment of rent received, when the conflagration laid all in ashes. The cost of the building was $25,000, on which there was an insurance of $10,000. As not more than $10,000 of the insurance will be realized, the loss on the property amounts to $15,000. The losses by the destruction of property belonging to the Rich estate were much more considerable, making the total loss to the University of about $200,000. To meet immediate and vital necessities, an average addition to present resources must be made of not less than $50,000 a year for the next ten years.

GERMAN ATHEISM IN NEW YORK. The German "Turners" of this city have employed a noted atheist and author of skeptical books, Dr. Louis Buchner, to lecture among his countrymen upon materialism, at a salary of $15,000 a year. The Rev. Dr. George C. Seibert, editor of the American Tract Society's German weekly, the Deutscher Volksfreund, asks for $5,000 to place that paper free in every German saloon, barber-shop and coffee-house, where it will be well received and read by thousands. It meets the arguments of Buchner, whose "gospel of brutality" is summed up in these three positions: 1. That we are descendants of brutes. 2. We are civilized animals. 3. We return, in death, to the dust of the earth. Dr. Seibert, who is a truly earnest and learned man, says that this man's books are circulated all over this country, partly free of expense, and that by their influence every spark of religious life is extinguished in hundreds of German hearts. Help now in this new battle. New York is the great German stronghold in the New World.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE new British ship Devastation, and the Russian monitor Peter the Great, are the two most powerful war vessels afloat. In the former there are no less than thirty-four distinct and separate engines.

About Missions.

The article from our missionary secretary will, we trust, reach all the members of the church and receive a careful reading. "Two cents a member per week" may put many upon a systematic course of saving and giving, and so far the statements and estimates of Dr. McFerrin will give an impetus in the right direction. There should be some method in the giving of all, rich and poor—a definite amount set apart and statedly contributed. If left to whim or the emotions of the hour, to the occasion of an annual collection and a special appeal, not much will be realized. This regular giving from pure religious principle is yet to be adopted. The most that is collected is by the most urgent persuasion, and according to the feelings and convenience of the hour are the individual responses. If so small a sum per capita would increase our resources nearly five-fold, it is plain that the most give nothing whatever at present; and we fear they never will until they go about it in an orderly and regular way, and conscientiously lay something by weekly or monthly.

No doubt nearly every member could afford two cents a week, if given by the week or month; but if left to a single occasion nothing like this amount can be conveniently spared by thousands. The details of a system of weekly contributions can best be arranged by the people themselves, if once the principle is adopted. There are so many objects demanding their aid besides this one of missions, that some are sure to be neglected unless each one is governed by a definite and well-understood plan. All the enterprises of the church are to be carried on abreast, and the relative demands must be considered and provided for. Suppose we give every week a small amount divided to the several interests—the astonishment will be that the grand total at the end of the year is so much. If every Christian were intent on getting the most out of himself for Christ that is possible, we are sure that he would resort to this plan of stated and frequent contributions.

Until the good day comes, however, when a more general conviction on this subject obtains, and the great mass of believers have a broader intelligence and a deeper love, the comparatively few must shoulder the burden. Pennies and shillings, even mites, would suffice if we could get them; but there are some objects which the intelligence and wealth of the church must carry almost alone. In building and endowing colleges and universities, in the establishment of publishing houses, and in the construction of large and costly churches, the giving must be in large individual contributions, because the average intelligence and appreciation of these enterprises is too limited to accomplish them in any other way. Foreign missions are somewhat in the same category. After making due allowance for selfishness and covetousness, it must be admitted that the intelligence and piety of the church have not yet reached the height of the great argument. Only the most enlightened and spiritual comprehend the duty and the practicability of giving the gospel to the world. A man's views of foreign missions are to us the test of character, and the measure of his enlightened devotion to Christ. Until the church is brought up to the missionary point, the main burden will continue to rest upon a small proportion of the entire membership.

It is not alone with the world without, but with professedly converted people, that we are still compelled to argue whether missions pay, and to reconcile the duty of sending the gospel to China with that of sustaining the work at home. Foreign missions can hardly be said to be popular even in the church, and they never will be until we reach a higher type of zeal and consecration. The last degree of faith and power and love are needed to bring out the abundant resources which we have, and which we are guiltily keeping back from the supreme purpose for which God has given them. The scarcity of missionary men is almost as much to be lamented as the want of zeal in the people and of money in the treasury. The Cokes, Careys and Judsons of this day are, we fear, not many. The men who go, because divinely called and sent, and who feel that they must preach the gospel in the regions beyond, are alarmingly few. There ought to be young men "pressed in spirit" to go to these foreign fields, and demanding of the church that the means be supplied; and there ought to be others, with the fire and inspiration of a Dr. Duff, to lead these raw recruits and to arouse the people of God to a sense of their responsibility.

The fervor of foreign missions should be imparted to our children at the mother's breast, nursed at the family altar, and guided and kindled to enthusiasm in our Sunday schools. God wants not our money only, but our sons and daughters. As the missionary spirit is the highest type of piety, so the missionary preacher is the highest type of ministerial character. If every Conference and every community could have its own representatives, and of its own flesh and blood, on foreign shores, the whole body would be quickened and sprung. The fire which Christ came to kindle on earth was, more than any other, this flame of love and self-sacrifice for the salvation of the world. The church in which it does not burn, the Christian heart in which it does not glow are not in sympathy with the Redeemer's work. Let us, as Southern Methodists, do something this year worthy of so great a cause. God, in his providence, is calling loudly, and the whole heathen world is accessible as never before. Before us, and before anybody, Christ himself has gone into Mexico, and the Holy Spirit has begun a work which the churches neglected. Poverty, misgovernment and past losses, if worse than we believe, afford the Macedonian opportunity: "How that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality."

The Pope.

The Independent quotes from the recent allocution, and comments:

We have now the text of the Pope's late allocution, and find that its references to the Italian government are even more belligerent than the dispatches had represented them. Speaking of the measures recently adopted by the government of Victor Immanuel with reference to the secularization of some of the property of the religious orders, his holiness says:

"Execrating this nefarious crime, in the name of Jesus Christ, whose vicar we are on earth, we condemn it by the authority of the holy apostles, Peter and Paul, and by our own, together with any scheme of law which shall arrogate to itself the power of disturbing the religious orders in Rome and the adjacent provinces, and of depriving the church there of its property, and of disposing of it for the benefit of the treasury or otherwise. We therefore pronounce invalid whatever is done against the rights and patrimony of the church. We declare absolutely void and null any acquisition, by any title, of the stolen goods, against alienation of which this Apostolic See will never cease to protest. Let the authors and supporters of this law remember the censures and spirituul punishments which, ipso facto incurred, the apostolic constitutions inflict on the invaders of the rights of the church; and, pitying their souls, bound by these spiritual chains, let them cease to lay up treasures of anger against the day of wrath and of the revelation of the just judgment of God."

When we remember that the Pope still claims to be a temporal prince and to have authority over all other princes, it is easy to understand why such declarations as these, in which he sets at defiance and tramples under foot the laws of the land, should earn for him and the party who adhere to him the hostility not only of Italy, but of all the European countries. His claim of infallibility and supreme authority is a threat against the peace of every government which does not submit to his dictation; and the threat, impotent as it is, is brandished continually over the heads of European sovereigns.

The New York Observer gives some account of a late interview between the Pope and a deputation of Irish Catholics:

The Pope has recently done a characteristic thing. On the sixth instant, the telegraph tells us, a large deputation of Irish Roman Catholics waited upon him and presented an address, recounting the benefits conferred on Ireland by the Holy See, and tendering him a contribution of Peterpence. Whereupon the Pope, responding, deplored the ingratitude of the people who had permitted the spoliation of the church, but made an exception in favor of the Irish people, whose loyalty to their faith he lauded.

Evidently the Pope understands Irish human nature. He has not been unobservant of their susceptibility to blarney, and, with a close eye to the main chance, has adroitly taken advantage of their national characteristic so as to insure from them a continuation of their acceptable contributions of Peterpence. He deftly strokes down their backs that he may put money in his purse, well knowing that Ireland would not be Ireland if it could resist the potency of pontifical blarney so skillfully applied.

At the same time, plain people, here in America and elsewhere, are curious to learn the specific details of the special benefits which, according to the deputation of Irish Roman Catholics, have been conferred upon Ireland by the Holy See. As an historical fact, has the papacy added, in any particular, to the internal peace or social harmony of Ireland? Has it contributed to its intellectual, moral or religious welfare? Has it elevated its national or individual character? Has it diffused culture and enlightenment among its people? Has it promoted refinement or art or science among them? Has it, in any aspect, improved their industrial or political condition? It would be interesting and enlightening to have specific details on these several points.

Fair and Honest.

Rev. Dr. P. H. Fowler writes to the New York Observer from Palatka, Florida. It is truly refreshing to find a Northern man who can divest himself of prejudice and tell the truth about us. We quote as follows:

1. Southern sentiment has wonderfully acquiesced in the result of the late war and accepted the present situation. There is no disavowal of former political theories touching the supreme sovereignty as to whether it resides in the United States or in the several States, nor as to the abstract right of secession. From the nature of the case, this could not be the guerdon of battle, and we could not ask brave and honorable soldiers to confess themselves mistaken about the principles for which they fought, simply because they were defeated. But without any change of speculative opinions, Southerners almost universally concede that those opinions have now become utterly impracticable, and they relinquish all purpose and wish to carry them out, and they submit to the government on the basis where it is now established.

2. Southerners as unanimously relinquish and renounce slavery, and even feel relieved and gladdened by its abolition. I am yet to meet the man or to hear of one who deplores its fate and wishes its re-establishment.

3. Southerners are the sincere friends of the freedmen—sympathizing with them, and interested in them, and desirous of helping them. Their past relations to them and experience of them necessitate this. They could not be men and avoid it. The freedmen can be trusted with them, for the most part, and they are the only class who can be relied upon for genuine kindness to the freedmen. With never so benevolent a disposition, strangers to them are incompetent for the wisest and most valuable service to them, and the adventurers from distant sections of the country who have stolen their confidence, and prejudiced them against their former masters, and duped them to put them into office, and to facilitate fraud and robbery, have done a wickedness, and produced a mischief in the alienation they have created, to which their thefts of the public treasuries and their impoverishment of the community make no approach.

The cream of the North has flowed to the South and mingled with its private citizenship. I am more and more surprised at the high character of the Northern immigrants settled in business, and in homes here—men and women of intelligence, culture, refinement, principle, purity, enterprise—of prominent positions in the communities they left, and not a few widely known to fame.

Officeholders, likewise, from the North, contain in their number men of the highest integrity and honor, earnestly and singly intent on serving the States of their adoption; but multitudes of them, I hardly need say, are utterly reckless of everything but plunder, and this they have perpetrated on a scale so gigantic, and with a ruin to the people so widespread and complete, and with an ingenuity so demoniac, that the history of malfeasance may be searched in vain for a parallel to them. None but those on the ground can conceive their deeds, and the resulting desolation; and if only the eyes of the North could be opened to the facts, a torrent of indignation would be aroused that must pour the miscreants down the deepest abyss.

I heartily voted for General Grant and have implicit trust in his fairness and moderation, and am sure of his kindness toward the South. But he is a man, and prior to, and pending the late election, it is not strange that he bore with Federal officers who were notoriously linked in with the gang who have been despoiling the country, and making an irreparable breach between the two classes who inhabit it. The election has passed and General Grant is now at liberty to interpose in the case, and for the sake of his own good name, for the honor of his administration, humanity and decency, it is to be hoped that he will compel a separation of his appointees from the bandits with whom so many have consorted. Indeed, it has a suspicious look when a Federal officer actively operates in State politics, and ought not a Northern governor or representative of a Southern State "rise to explain?" The seeming is against him.

THERE are men who, by long consulting only their own inclination, have forgotten that others have a claim to the same deference.

Two Cents a Week.

MR. EDITOR: I have been abroad the past year, and have made diligent inquiry as to the condition of our church in the Southern Conferences. The result of my observations is that, in some respects, we are advancing pleasantly.

1. The increase in the number of members has been gratifying. This increase has been the fruit of gracious revivals of religion in many portions of our territory. Revivals of religion are cheering and stimulating us in our work.

2. In church-building there has been a most gratifying advance. Never, perhaps, have so many houses of worship been erected or repaired in one year in the Southern Church as during the year 1872.

3. As a general thing, I think the preachers have been better supported and Sunday schools better sustained than in any year since 1865.

4. In one thing we have made but little advance, and that is in the missionary collections. Our receipts, I fear, will not reach over $100,000, including what has been applied to domestic missions in the respective Annual Conferences. This is by far too small a sum for our church to contribute in one year for the grand missionary enterprise. We need this day $500,000 for missionary purposes for the year 1873.

There is a pressing demand for an increase of laborers in China. We ought this year to send a missionary to Japan. The door is open in Mexico; we need several missionaries there; besides, we need to have the Discipline, hymn-book and several tracts translated into the Spanish language at once. We need greatly to enlarge the work among the Germans in this country; we need several works in the German language. We need a large supply of ministers in the West; we need money to help to build houses of worship in new territory and in our mission fields abroad; we need to greatly enlarge our domestic missions among our own people. All these we need; and I repeat that $500,000 could be profitably employed during the year 1873. Could our board command that sum? Can it be collected?

Let us see. We have now not less than six hundred and fifty thousand Methodists in our church, besides thousands of friends who are always ready to help us. Two cents per week from each member would give to the cause of missions more than $600,000. Where is there a member who cannot give two cents per week to the cause of missions? Or where is there a church in the Southern connection, or a circuit, or a station or a mission that cannot average two cents per week per member, if we would only determine to raise that amount? I verily believe the Methodist Episcopal Church South could raise any one year, yea, each and every year with her present strength, to say nothing of her future growth, two cents per member if proper plans were taken. Let the preachers address themselves to this work. Let every member of every church give something. Let every Sunday school scholar give something. Let the devoted and intelligent women of the church go to work. Let the rich give of their abundance; let the poor give of their small living; let every one give as God has prospered him and the work will be done.

Now that the Conferences for 1872 are over and we are entering upon a new year, let me invoke the brethren everywhere to begin in time, and let us make this the greatest year in our history in missionary zeal and liberality.

Other churches are putting forth their best efforts, and are keeping their people alive by the spirit of missions that burns in their bosoms. Shall we be content to lag in the rear? O men of God, daughters of Zion, let us rouse ourselves to our duty, and the Head of the Church will own our efforts, and bless us in proportion to our zeal and liberality. Mr. Editor, will you call the attention of your readers to this important matter, and add a word to this earnest appeal?

J. B. MCFERRIN, Secretary.

Florida Conference.

This body met at Fernandina, January 8. Dr. Kennedy, editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, writes of the session as follows:

On Thursday morning we were introduced to the Conference, which was progressing smoothly and satisfactorily with its business, under the facile chairmanship of Bishop E. M. Marvin. Our entire former experience having familiarized us with large bodies of ministers and laymen on such occasions, the proportions of the Conference were, at first, far from impressive. Daily attendance upon its sessions, however, satisfied us that the body, though small, was in possession of all the elements which, in larger proportions, constitute the efficiency and usefulness of its more imposing ecclesiastical sisters. Further than this, disclosures upon the floor of the Conference and private conversations convinced us that we were mingling with a band of moral heroes, whose peers it would be difficult to find, and whose patient heroism finds no superior illustration in cotemporary history. The future of Florida presents a problem toward the solution of which we propose to venture no contribution. Emigration from the State, superinduced by the fearful misrule to which its people have been subjected, has been rapid and heavy, and from among that class of the population, whose removal has been most detrimental to the financial interests of the ministry. Hopes are entertained that the new administration, recently inaugurated, will be more in accordance with the principles of justice, and will tend to the speedy arrest of this disastrous outflow of population. Should these hopes be realized, the material interests of the Conference would be correspondingly improved, and the work which the preachers are now performing faithfully, under the heaviest discouragements and sore privations, would be carried forward at the cost of far less oppressive sacrifices.

Bishop Marvin, who has spent same time in the State, and has intelligently considered the situation, reiterated to the Conference his conviction that the crisis was about passed, that indications of a better day for the Florida Conference were plainly visible, and that its future promised an early return of its former prosperity. The Bishop's opportunities for forming an intelligent opinion in the premises were far superior to our own, and we are hopeful that its correctness may be demonstrated at no distant day.

The most interesting and important question brought before the Conference was presented in a series of resolutions proposing the consolidation into one Conference of the territory now constituting the South Georgia and Florida Conferences; and sending a commission to the next session of the former body, asking its joint recommendation of such action to the ensuing General Conference. The paper, after an interesting discussion, was passed by a decided majority. The debate, however, disclosed a wide difference of opinion as to whether the acknowledged necessities of the Conference would be more efficiently relieved by such a fusion than by maintaining its present organization and relying upon the Parent Missionary Board for such aid as it could appropriate. The matter, we presume, will be thoroughly canvassed upon the appearance of the commissioners before the South Georgia Conference, and determined in conformity with what are regarded the best interests of Christianity and Methodism.

The appointments were announced on Saturday night, and the perfect acquiescence, if not the universal satisfaction of the preachers, was indicated by the fact that the Bishop was undisturbed throughout the Sabbath by appeals for change. So far as we could learn, a very unusual measure of satisfaction was imparted by the Bishop and his cabinet in this very difficult work.

The services of Sunday were highly appreciated by the large audiences who waited upon the ministry of the word. Bishop Marvin's sermon on Sunday morning, crowning his week's work, added the Florida Conference and the community of Fernandina to the host of admiring friends formed upon this his first tour among the Southern Conferences. At night a stirring sermon by Rev. J. W. Kelly, our old and valued friend, was followed by the administration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, the service being conducted by Bishop Marvin. The occasion was interesting and profitable, and the indications were most favorable for a gracious revival, of which we hope soon to hear.

A COTEMPORARY RELIGIOUS PAPER informs its readers of money received to send the paper to those who cannot afford to pay for it. We quote from the Observer:

"We have received, and desire to make special acknowledgment of, $30 from a princess in Germany, $15 from a baroness in Germany, $10 from a noble lady in Indiana, to be applied in sending the New York Observer to ministers who are in straitened circumstances. We have also other contributions for the same purpose. This is a delightful way to feed the soul of a good man and his whole household, and the more of such donations we receive the better."

We have sometimes received money to send the ADVOCATE to those who could not afford to subscribe for it. A brother at the Mississippi Conference, in December last, gave us $5 for this purpose, and it was so applied. For several years after the war a brother, living in Iowa, gave us annually $50 to send our paper to preachers' widows. Are there not other noble men or noble women who can aid us in supplying the needy with the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE? We were greatly affected by a letter from a poor widow requesting us not to stop her paper; that she and her little children were picking out their cotton crop of three or four bales, and would send the money when she obtained it. The paper was not stopped, and we never cared to inquire whether the money came. Another old subscriber, loving and prizing the paper next to his Bible and hymn-book, sent us word lately that he was sick and no longer able to pay his subscription. That paper is not stopped. Thus, in many cases, we cannot afford to give away so many papers, neither do we like to stop them. Here is an opportunity for a good deed.

Spectacles.

Let not our elder confreres of the Methodist press read this with other than a single eye. Editors' eyes are subjected to much hard usage, and the presumption is that they need "helps to read." We can look upon this gift to Bro. Johnson in no other light than as a delicate compliment to his excellence as an editor, and as a testimonial of the grateful appreciation of his labors; and all the more expressive because in advance of the infirmity which it was designed to meet. Anent this singular streak of luck the Western Methodist says:

The Rev. P. Tuggle made, last week, a formal visit to this office, and a formal address to the editor—one of his best speeches, of which we wish we had a complete report for our readers. Certainly it was eloquent. The editor's reply was grateful in sentiment, though somewhat stammering. The occasion was the presentation of a very fine pair of spectacles with gold frame—beautiful to the sight, and with which we hope to see beautifully when we grow old enough to need them.

THERE was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning,
And the darkest hour, so the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

The Mexican Mission.

MR. EDITOR: It gave me peculiar satisfaction, as I have no doubt it did many others, to see the announcement that Bishop Keener had so promptly started for Mexico to establish a mission there. That is a step in the right direction; it will stir the heart of the church and call forth an unmistakable response. To raise the missionary spirit of the church it is only necessary to place before it objects and work of sufficient magnitude to command its respect and enlist its interest. Unless this is done our missionary operations and work will dwindle to disgraceful littleness.

Now let the Bishop commence upon a scale worthy the church and the work to be accomplished. Let us have no day of small and sickly things about it. That is what disappoints and displeases—to use no stronger word—the church. If he wants five men and $15,000 for the next year, let him call for them and show the church a programme, simple and practicable, demanding them, and his call will not go unheeded. Let the church see that he means not only "business," but success.

I believe that Louisiana and Alabama will take up that mission, if assigned them, and carry it on to success. The mission work must be brought nearer the Conferences and the church. Let different departments of it be placed distinctly in the hands of different sections and Conferences, and they will give a good account of it. Generalizing has thrown it off from the feeling and interest of every section, and led to weakness.

I hope that the Southern University, Centenary College, Emory College and all our other colleges will at once furnish the means for acquiring the Spanish language, that we may have the young men ready to meet Bishop Keener's call. Our "holy women," too, would fain have a share in that work. Let the authorities encourage them to form a ladies' foreign missionary society, and they will raise tens of thousands for the good work.

J. HAMILTON.

Death of Commodore Maury.

The death of this distinguished man took place at Lexington, Virginia, February 1, aged sixty-seven. His achievements in science have given him a world-wide celebrity, and fully entitle him to rank with the ablest savants, and the most distinguished benefactors of his race. In the late war Commodore Maury was true to his native South and to his convictions of right. He gave up position and fortune for the cause which he considered just. A man of purest patriotism and of spotless character, his name will stand next to that of Robert E. Lee in the affectionate remembrance of his countrymen, while to the world at large his memory will outlive that of the first statesmen and captains of the age. Every sea and every clime are familiar with his beneficent labors to unfold the laws of the winds and waters, and to give security and speed to ocean navigation. His wind and current charts and sailing directions have been the means of saving thousands of human lives, and of adding millions of dollars to the gains of commerce. Such a man is a gift to the human race—his work and fame are the property of the whole world. The luster which he shed upon his own State and country goes beyond them, and throws a radiance upon all the seas and continents and islands. The wreaths and trophies won by such a life cannot wither and decay. The lapse of time will only lift the name of Mathew Fontaine Maury higher and ever higher in the estimate of history.

WE DEEPLY REGRET the death of Miss Marion L. Palmer, youngest daughter of Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., of this city. She died on Saturday, the first instant, aged seventeen years. A sister preceded her but a few months to the heavenly mansions. The bereaved family have our sincere sympathy in the sorrow which has fallen upon them.

WE ARE GLAD to see that the Minutes of the Louisiana Conference are already out and sent abroad. They are very handsomely gotten up, and much credit is due to the secretary, Rev. C. F. Evans, for the promptness and care with which he has performed the work of preparing the copy for the press.

CAPTAIN C. H. SLOCOMB, a well-known citizen and merchant of this city, died on Friday, January 31. Captain Slocomb served throughout the war in the celebrated Washington Artillery, and was noted for his public spirit and his generous charities.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the fourth annual report of the Board of Indian Commissioners to the President of the United States for 1872. It is a volume containing much valuable information.

THE DEATH OF CARLOTTA, widow of Maximillan, is announced by telegraph. The failure of the attempt to establish an imperial throne in Mexico and the tragical end of her husband made her a lunatic. It has been hinted that her madness was the effect of poison, administered by some would-be assassins before she left Mexico; but of this there is no proof. Her misfortunes and disappointments were enough to have overthrown the reason of a woman born in the purple, and whose pride and ambition were only less than her love for her husband. The fate of Maximilian and of his spirited and devoted wife forms one of the saddest and most affecting episodes in recent history. Carlotta's gloomy career of disappointment and insanity has excited a world-wide sympathy. The last act in this tragical drama is closed by death, and the curtain falls. To the plans and machinations of Louis Napoleon, and to his bad faith in the Mexican undertaking, the misfortunes of Maximilian and Carlotta have been ascribed. It was, however, at their own election that they embarked in an enterprise which ended in their ruin. All, discrowned here, have gone to their account to confront the King eternal, immortal, invisible, and, doubtless, to realize the insignificance and vanity of the thrones and sceptres of earth, when compared with the crown of life which they may have gained or lost.

Course of Study.

We have no doubt that we shall be requested to publish the Conference course of study several times during the year. Will the brethren interested cut it out, and keep it in their memorandum-books?

FOR ADMISSION ON TRIAL.—The Bible, in reference to doctrines generally; Wesley's Sermons on Justification by Faith and on the Witness of the Spirit; Book of Discipline; the ordinary branches of an English education.

FIRST YEAR.—The Bible, in reference to its historical and biographical parts and its chronology; Book of Discipline, with special reference to chapter 1, sections 1 and 2; Manual of Discipline, chapters 1 and 2; Wesley's Sermons, volume 1; Ralston's Elements of Divinity; Watson's Institutes, part 4; Preachers' Manual; History of the Organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, by Redford; written sermon on Repentance.

NOTE.—The examination will be confined to the course of study. The books of reference are recommended to be read, and the commentaries to be consulted.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the Southern Farmer for February, published at Memphis, Tennessee, and the Southern Cultivator, published at Athens, Georgia, both excellent agricultural publications.

MARRIED.

REGAN—McCAY.—At the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Sina Lum, Claiborne county, Mississippi, on the twenty-second of January, 1873, by Rev. H. R. Singleton, Mr. Joseph Regan to Mrs. Mary E. McCay, both of said county.

WILLIAMSON—HALL.—At the residence of the bride's father, on the evening of the sixteenth of January, 1873, by Rev. John W. Hall, Mr. J. N. Williamson to Miss Sallie Hall, all of Madison county, Mississippi.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference for 1872.

The unusual number of Minutes sent out this year has forced me to use for transmission the public carriers instead of the mail, as heretofore. Where neither railroads nor steamboats could be used, I have consigned the packages to the care of some one at what I supposed to be the nearest point. Below is a list of packages thus consigned:

RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR INVESTMENT IN THE DRUG BUSINESS.—Persons seeking a favorable opening for engaging in business should direct their attention to an advertisement, in another column, offering a drug store for sale. It was fitted up and stocked by the late Dr. Albers, with a view to supplying all the requirements of a first-class establishment, and ere his lamented demise achieved a success rarely realized in so short a period. This may be attributed, apart from the well-known ability of the doctor, to the eligible position which it occupies—corner of Canal and Magazine streets—being in the very center of the dense thoroughfare leading to the postoffice and custom-house. It has secured a run of custom from both city and country that warrants the amplest guarantee of a fortune in the future if conducted with only ordinary attention to the details of business. Although laboring under the disadvantage consequent upon the death of Dr. Albers, the intelligent inquirer will be satisfied upon examination that it has been steadily gaining both in the confidence and patronage of a discriminating public. It may serve to satisfy a natural inquiry to state that nothing but the inability of the administratrix, compatible with her other duties, to conduct the business, could induce her to relinquish so profitable a business. We will add that with the sale may be included the formula of two well-known physicians, that have enjoyed widespread popularity, and which of themselves constitute, in energetic hands, an unfailing source of remuneration.

BETHESDA MINERAL WATER.—Attention is called to the advertisement, in another column, of Mr. H. D. Huff, No. 38 Magazine street, sole Southern agent for the sale of the Bethesda mineral water. Those afflicted with Bright's disease, diabetes, liver and bilious complaints, kidney and urinary diseases will be benefitted by the use of these celebrated waters.

PURCHASING AGENCY.—Mrs. H. Mogridge respectfully offers her services in selecting, purchasing and forwarding any article of apparel or personal adornment for ladies' and children's use, including millinery, dry goods, jewelry, bridal trousseaux, fancy and toilet articles, etc. Mrs. Mogridge can be found at No. 96 Canal street, New Orleans.

AT THE TWO STORES of the Septoline Oil Company, No. 62 Camp and 15 Dauphine street, will be found a full supply of the celebrated septoline oil, together with a full assortment of lamps, trimmings, chandeliers, Japanned ware, etc.

WE CALL the attention of our Indy readers to the advertisement of George T. Shilling, No. 381 Dryades street, manufacturer of and dealer in all kinds of human hair goods.

PRACTICAL PAINTERS.—Messrs. Johnson & Hillsman, No. 111 Magazine street, are prepared to do all kinds of house and sign painting, steamboat, store and office work. All orders promptly attended to, and charges moderate.

MESSRS. R. L. DELEA & Co., at No. 112 Camp street, are the general agents for Louisiana of the General R. E. Lee Monumental Association. Agents wanted. See advertisement in this issue.

J. J. DONAHOE, wholesale and retail manufacturer of mattresses, No. 118 Camp street, next to Odd Fellows' Hall, New Orleans. Country orders will receive prompt attention.

DR. A. J. PADRON, whose address is No. 81 Derbigny street, offers his services in the cure of epileptic and hysterical fits, cancers, ulcers, excrescences, etc.

MARCHAL'S RESTAURANT, No. 19 Union street, will be found to be a convenient and desirable restaurant. Boarding by the day, week or month.

MESSRS. NAVRA & OFFNER, No. 174 Canal street, keep on hand and for sale full lines of chinaware, cutlery, household comforts, etc.

WE CALL THE ATTENTION of persons in search of a commercial education to Dolbear College, 201 and 203 Canal street. de12 3m

BUSINESS NOTICES.

ONE SIP of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, impaired by physical ailments, it is Price's celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose eves "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion, or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried, "Heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work. A vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of its efficacy, it stands to-day stamped with the signet-seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS.—Within the past year two hundred thousand boxes of Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills have been sold, and not a single testimonial is known where they have failed to give satisfaction. If you would enjoy life, have a fine appetite and robust health, use these Pills.

AUGUSTA, November, 1869.

DR. W. H. TUTT: It affords me much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Liver Pills. They are all they are represented to be. In my opinion there are no Pills so well adapted to the Southern climate as they are. Yours truly,

REMOVE from the blood those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause for their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion Imparts fresh life and vigor to them, and makes of them the best blood purifiers one can have. # WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the filthiest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. Fur Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

The Child's Corner.

A CHRISTMAS CAROL.

BY MISS ROSE TERRY.

On Christmas day,
Far, far away,
A little baby slumbering lay;
Starlight was shed
Upon his bed,
And round his fair and lowly head.

The angel sang,
The blue sky rang,
And all the earth looked bright and young;
'Twas God's own Son,
Come down alone
To make our little souls his own.

Dear Lord above,
Teach me thy love!
Make me thy gentle, spotless dove,
To find my nest
Within thy breast,
And there in peace and safety rest.

What a Child May Do.

I once visited a Sunday school with a friend, and, while going round among the classes, my attention was arrested by hearing a teacher ask one of the scholars at what age she thought a child could become a Christian. The child replied: "I don't exactly know, but I should think at twelve."

"And what do you think, Jane?" asked the teacher of another scholar.

"I should think earlier; perhaps at ten," answered the bright-eyed girl addressed, who looked as though she loved fun better than anything else.

One thought nine was the proper age to become a follower of Christ; another fixed upon eleven as the suitable period to begin a Christian life. And so various opinions were expressed and discussed by the teacher and her scholars. At last a quiet little girl looked up from the book over which she had been poring intently, and, with a sweet earnestness in her deep blue eyes, said gently:

"I don't know, ma'am; but I think may be a little child can begin to be a Christian whenever she feels she wants to be like Christ."

Truly, I thought, the Master said not in vain: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not;" for this little one could not have numbered more than nine or perhaps ten summers; and yet she had already settled that important question with the wisdom that should come with years. This little girl, I was sure, loved the Savior, and had already tried to walk in his footsteps. She had sat in spirit at the feet of the gentle Nazarene on that mountain-top where he spoke to the assembled multitude, and told them of the bright inheritance prepared for the poor in spirit, the faithful ones who walk humbly with God; of the satisfying of those who do hunger and thirst after righteousness; of the recompense meted to the merciful, that double blessing which the quality of mercy ever bestows; of the blessedness of the pure in heart, who shall behold their Master; of the precious name won by the peace-makers, who are trying to bring the reign of "peace on earth and good will to man," and who the good Father shall own as his dear children; and lastly, of the present exceeding great reward which they enjoy who are persecuted for righteousness' sake—"theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

All this, I felt, this child must have treasured in her young heart as the words of him who spake as never man did before, and who is the Giver of eternal life.

But I little knew then that she had even at that tender age endured great conflicts. Interested at first by the child's words, and attracted to her by her appearance and modest behavior, I afterward made some inquiries about her and learned what I am about to relate of the trials she had already endured in her endeavor to follow her divine Master.

Fanny had been brought to Sunday school by another child, who was a punctual attendant, and she continued to come regularly for several weeks. She appeared very much interested in all the exercises, and her lessons were always well prepared. But suddenly she stopped coming, and for three or four weeks was missed from her accustomed seat. Again she made her appearance, and when asked by her teacher the cause of her absence, she remained silent and hung her head, as if ashamed to answer the inquiry. When pressed for a reply, the poor little girl burst into tears, and continued sobbing as if her heart would break.

"Why don't you answer me, Fanny?" asked her teacher. "Don't you like to come to Sunday school?"

"Oh, yes, ma'am, I would rather come here than go anywhere else."

"Then how is it you are so irregular in your attendance?"

"Indeed, ma'am, and I would come if I could, but I can't tell you why I don't. Indeed I can't now!"

Puzzled at her strange conduct, her teacher determined to press the matter no further at the time, but wait and trust to the future for a solution of the mystery. Meanwhile she watched the little girl closely, and from her observations was soon convinced that the child had some secret grief which preyed upon her. Fanny still continued to be irregular in her attendance, and refused, when questioned, to give a reason for it. But whenever she came her attention to the instruction given was so very marked that it was evident her heart was there. One Sunday, after a prolonged absence, she made her appearance, but looked thin and pale, as if she had been suffering.

"Why, Fanny, you have been ill, I fear," said the teacher. "Why did you not let me know of it? I would have gone to inquire about you, but I lost the address you gave me."

"No, ma'am, I've not been sick," the child answered, "but I've been very unhappy, and I am so still."

"What is the matter, dear? Tell me, and perhaps I can help you."

"I'm afraid not," she replied sadly, "for the Bible says, 'Honor thy father and thy mother,' which, you've often told me, means to obey them; but it says nothing about going to Sunday school when they don't want you to. Does it, ma'am?" she asked, looking anxiously up into her teacher's face.

"I believe not, dear," replied her kind friend, "but it is at Sunday school that many children first learn the commandment that teaches them to obey their parents."

"Then there's no help for me, and I must come no more," replied the poor child. "Oh, how I've tried to think it was right to come, because it was here I learned to try to please God. But I can't please him when I break one of his commandments—can I?" And the poor child again burst into tears. The teacher soothed her little charge, and then gathered what follows, between her half-suppressed sobs.

Fanny's parents were very rough people, who had no knowledge of God, and, what is far worse, they then desired to hear nothing of him as a Savior and Redeemer. They were also very poor, for they led a life of sin and idleness, and were accustomed to send the child into the streets on Sundays, as well as other days of the week, and often punished her if she returned home without money. This had occurred of late so much more frequently than formerly, that, after finding punishment and whipping had no effect upon the child, they watched her and discovered that the time they had thought devoted to street-begging had been spent by her in the school to which she had been brought by her little friend, who had, indeed, been an angel of light to her. That day the poor child was received, on her return to her wretched home, with blows and bitter reproaches, for what was called her ingratitude to those who provided her with tattered garments and scanty food; and she was urged to promise never again to enter the school. But the little girl preferred to endure persecution rather than give up the opportunity of receiving the sweet lessons she learned from the word of God. She therefore continued to join her class as often as she could, till something she heard one day, in the course of her instruction on the commandments, awakened in her tender heart and enlightened conscience doubts of the propriety of her conduct.

"Many a night," she said to her teacher, "I lay in my little bed in one corner of our garret-room and watched a star I could just see peeping at me through the window, and thought I couldn't be doing a very naughty thing to go to that nice school or God wouldn't let his beautiful star look on me so bright; and then I'd be comforted and would fall asleep, looking at it and thinking of that star of Bethlehem you've told me about."

"But you can't help me, ma'am, I'm sure," she continued sadly, after a pause, during which she seemed lost in thought, "and so I'll just have to stay away and think of the Lord, and perhaps he'll be so good as to be with me there where I have to live."

"Yes, Fanny, I am very sure he will," her friend replied, "for you know he has promised to be with us even unto the ends of the earth."

"And I'll pray to him," said the little girl, with great earnestness, "and I know he'll hear me, though I am a very little child; and may be some day he'll let me come again."

"And I will add my prayers to yours, my dear child," said her sympathizing friend. "Perhaps the Lord will hear us, and answer in his own right way."

And so they parted for a time. Miss Winslow—for so we will call Fanny's teacher—took the child's address and gave her her own, so that they might sometimes see each other. Her kind heart was deeply touched by the child's sad experience, and the conflicts she was called to suffer at so early a period of her Christian career, and she pondered much what course she should pursue in the affair. To call upon the parents and expostulate with them might awaken a spirit of still greater opposition. They might consider her interference as unnecessary or an infringement upon their right to govern their child. So this step was abandoned as unwise, and she determined to lay the whole matter before the Lord in prayer and implore his help, knowing that he alone can influence the hearts of men and bring light out of darkness. The words of the child sounded in her ears, "I know he will hear me, though I am a little child," and they strengthened her own faith.—New York Observer.

What Willie's Puppy Did.

Two or three little boys, almost babies, were standing near a man who was whipping his horse to make him draw a very heavy load of coal. One of them called out in his helpless indignation: "Stop that, mister! You shan't whip that nice old horsey any more!"

But still the smutty fellow laid on the whip. Another of the children exclaimed: "You better stop that, or, or I'll whip you real hard with my horsewhip when I'm a man! Stop! else I'll tell my father of you!"

The man laughed till he looked up and saw the third baby-boy sitting down by a stone wall, crying bitterly, and rubbing his eyes with his white blouse. He stopped his cruel work and called out: "What are you crying for? This isn't your father's horse, little fellow."

"I'm crying 'cause, 'cause I don't want that nice old horsey hurted. Please don't hurt him any more, and I'll help you push the cart, and Sam and Joe will push too!"

The man laughed out very loud and said: "Why, you could draw the coal yourself! But why don't you like to see the horse whipped?"

"'Cause, 'cause," sobbed out little Willie, "'cause I've got a puppy at home!"

Now there seemed no sense, at first thought, in this reply of the dear, tender-hearted child; but there was a great deal of good sense in it. What Willie meant was this: "I own a puppy that I love, and I could not have him whipped nor hurt in any way. And because I love my puppy and am tender of him, I love every other living thing."

Willie's puppy had taught him to be merciful to every dumb creature, and so had done a good work in his little heart.

The child who is tender of dog, cat or bird will never grow up to beat horses. Let children have pets to love and care for.—Methodist.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Deep Plowing.

It has been truly said that an increase of one inch in the average depth of plowing throughout the United States would produce a larger amount of profit, as compared with present results, than all the gold received from California. We believe in this assertion; but we do not believe that all soils, without being previously subsoiled, are fit for this immediate increase in depth. We know that even clay subsoils, which approach within a few inches of the surface, after being thoroughly subsoiled are so ameliorated as to be capable of admixture with the immediate surface-soil; and we are equally well aware that subsoiling cannot be performed with any profit in clay subsoils containing excessive amounts of water; that such soils must first be underdrained and the subsoiling precede an increase of depth in surface-plowing. But there are millions of acres capable of being plowed to double the depth to which they have ever received an incision, from a tool of any kind, with increased profit. There are thousands of acres at this time which have never been plowed to a greater depth than four inches, composed of a loam entirely ready to be disintegrated by a surface-plowing to the depth of twelve or fifteen inches with increased profit, and there are few soils that may not be at once plowed to a depth of an inch or more than its former depth. The adage that "many farmers own another farm immediately under that which they now cultivate" cannot be too often repeated, and the judicious farmer, whose will has been so often quoted as having informed his sons that he had buried a sum of money at a depth of twelve inches somewhere on his farm, and that they must find it, improved the quality of their products by the disturbance of the soil more than he would benefit them by the supposed legacy by direct bequeathment. Less manure will produce a larger amount of crops in a deeply-disintegrated soil; and it is not true that the deeper you plow the more manure you require. It is true that the more thoroughly manure is divided the greater will be the amount of the crops produced, and this is the more certainly brought about by deep than it is by shallow plowing.

No practical farmer can doubt that in deeply-plowed soils crops are less annoyed by drought and by insects; and if plowing is useful at all, it must be useful precisely in the same ratio to the amount of soil disturbed, provided that the roots are capable of appropriating a greater amount of soil by its disturbance. Who doubts that roots will travel to the depth of twelve or fifteen inches, or even double that distance? Who doubts that the lime, passing down through the soil, will rest on the surface of a cold and undisintegrated subsoil? Who does not know that many farms, supposed to be worn out, have been revived by the increase of a few inches in the depth of plowing? Who will longer be contented to use a pitiful one-horse plow, skating it through the soil like a harrow with one tooth, when by deep plowing he can more than double his crops?—Working Farmer.

LOUISIANA SUGAR PLANTATIONS. Below we give a compilation of facts in relation to the sugar crop of past years in Louisiana, and in regard to sugar plantations, which may be interesting to many of our readers. These statements are gathered from Bouchereau's Sugar Report for 1871-72.

The sugar crop of the State in 1871-72 amounted to 128,461 hogsheads.

|---|---|
| Crop of 1870 | hhds... 144,881 |
| Crop of 1869 | 87,093 |
| Crop of 1868 | 81,256 |
| Crop of 1867 | 37,647 |
| Crop of 1866 | 41,000 |
| Crop of 1865 | 15,000 |
| Crop of 1864 | 6,000 |
| Crop of 1861 | 459,410 |

Sugar Estates, Large and Small,—In the year 1871 there were in operation in Louisiana sugar estates as follows:

|---|---|
| Making over 100 hogsheads | 458 |
| Making from 100 to 50 hogsheads | 295 |
| Making from 50 to 20 hogsheads | 277 |
| Making from 20 to 10 hogsheads | 181 |
| Making from 10 to 5 hogsheads | 118 |
| Making from 5 to 1 hogsheads | 127 |

The same year there were 336 sugar estates on which no sugar was made. This year the number is doubtless much larger.—New Orleans Picayune.

CELERY AS A REMEDIAL.—I have known many men, and women too, who, from various causes, had become so much affected with nervousness that, when they stretched out their hands, they shook like aspen leaves on windy days; and by a daily moderate use of the blanched footstalks of the celery leaves as a salad they became as strong and steady in limbs as other people. I have known others so very nervous that the least annoyance put them in a state of agitation, who were in almost constant perplexity and fear, and who were effectually cured by a daily moderate use of blanched celery as a salad at meal-times. I have known others cured of palpitation of the heart by the use of celery.—Correspondent of Practical Farmer.

RED DEVONS.—The Red Devons possess all the requisite qualities by nature to fill the wants of mountain agriculturists. They have the blood, bone, sinew, endurance and disposition, with beef and milk qualities combined; will keep on a less quantity of food than any other breeds in hilly sections, and make a surer and better return to the owner, to the stock-raiser or dairyman. The Devons are sure-footed, make obedient and powerful oxen, and, as a general thing, are less liable to the effects of exposure and disease. The Devon also makes a safer and better cross with the native cattle, and produces a grade well adapted to mountain ranges.—Vermont Farmer.

FRENCH ROLLS.—Rub one ounce of butter into one pound of flour, mix one egg well beaten, a little yeast and sufficient milk to make quite stiff. Beat, not knead, all well together. Half fill the pan and let it rise.

IMPROVED

EAGLE COTTON GINS.

The great popularity of the EAGLE COTTON GINS is established from the well-known fact that they are the most reliable, strongest and best built Cotton Gins ever made. The Eagle Cotton Gin runs lighter than any other gin, thus having a great advantage for planters who wish to run by horse power. All the numerous planters who use the Eagle Cotton Gin will certify to the fact that when their cotton is sent to market it always brings the highest market price, as no other gin can produce a finer or a better sample of cotton than the Eagle Cotton Gins. Over seventeen thousand of the Eagle Cotton Gins have been made and sold. During a period of twenty years the undersigned has had the agency of the Eagle Cotton Gin in New Orleans. He has never had a gin returned or rejected out of the immense number sold. The saw cylinders of all the Eagle Cotton Gins are twelve inches in diameter, which is two inches larger than most other kinds of gins, thus giving our forty-saw gin more teeth, and they are more than equal to the fifty-saw gins of other makers, who use only a ten-inch cylinder, and these same great advantage of the twelve-inch cylinder in large-sized gins can be easily estimated. Planters who wish a reliable cotton gin, with an established reputation, can purchase an Eagle Cotton Gin with a certainty that they are not making an untried experiment, but will obtain a cotton gin which is indorsed by the oldest and largest planters in the country as the best in use. A large stock of the Eagle Cotton Gins are always kept on sale in New Orleans, ready for immediate shipment. Planters should be particular to state if they want right or left-hand friction gins.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

The weather has been clear and spring-like. Nothing of any importance has transpired with regard to the crops. Under more liberal receipts at all the ports there seems to be a general disposition to put crop estimates at 3,500,000 bales, while many count on 3,700,000 to 3,800,000 bales.

The river is 11 feet 3 inches below high water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals since the thirty-first ultimo:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Louisiana and Mississippi | bales | 24,471 |
| Lake | | 20 |
| Arkansas | | 1,233 |
| Mobile | | 3,930 |
| Florida | | 3 |
| Texas | | 852 |
| Total | | 29,615 |

On Saturday the market opened with a slack demand, and, although factors made concessions of ⅛c. in the morning and in some cases an additional ⅛c. subsequently, it failed to bring out buyers with any spirit, and the movement continued sluggish throughout the day, the sales up to four P. M. embracing only 3,500 bales, exclusive of 100 not reported on the day previous. At a later hour, however, two buyers consummated negotiations previously pending to the extent of 1,050 bales, which swelled the day's business to 4,550 bales, good ordinary closing at 18⅛@18⅜c., and low middling at 19@19⅛c., the former showing a decline of ⅛c. and the latter of ⅛c. On Monday, under a further decline in foreign exchange, buyers came forward with still lower offers, and in some cases obtained concessions of ⅛@⅛c. As a general thing, however, factors steadily refused any further reduction, although willing to meet the demand freely at the previous decline. The sales did not exceed 4,200 bales, middling closing at 19⅛@20c., with occasional sales at a fraction more, strict middling at 20⅛@20⅛c., high style commanding more, and good middling at 21@21⅛c. On Tuesday the market opened quiet, with a decided tendency to easier prices, but, as factors were reluctant to submit to the concessions claimed, the movement during the morning was of limited extent, a part of the business showing a decline of ⅛c. and the rest no quotable falling off. The general tendency, however, was decidedly in favor of buyers, which became more decided later in the day, when, the demand being met more freely, a comparatively active business ensued, resulting in swelling the day's business to 5,900 bales, of course exclusive of any on the day previous.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 702,275 bales, against 648,181 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest dates, as compared with last year, is 321,531 bales. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same dates last year, there is an increase of 82,968 to Great Britain, of 34,312 to France, and of 119,937 to other foreign ports.

ARISTOTLE'S LIBRARY.

At Aristotle's death his MSS. came into the possession of Theophrastus, who continued for thirty-five years chief of the Peripatetic schools at Athens. When Theophrastus died the whole joint collection, containing the original works of both philosophers, and all the books of others they had respectively bought (as, for instance, the library of Spensippus, for which Aristotle was said to have given three talents or £720,) went by bequest to Neleus, a philosophical friend and pupil of Theophrastus, who carried them off to his own home at Scepsis, a town in the Treas. A generation after this occurrence the kings of Pergamos began collecting books for their royal library, and the heirs of Neleus, in order to save the precious collection which was in their possession, but of which they themselves could make no use, from being seized and carried off to Pergamos, concealed it in a cellar, where it remained, a prey to worms and damp, for nearly one hundred and fifty years. At the end of that time the Attalid dynasty at Pergamos was extinct, the last of these kings, Attalus, having died in 133 B. C., bequeathing his kingdom to the Romans. The then possessors of the Aristotelian and Theophrastean libraries, having no longer anything to fear from royal requisitions, brought out the MSS. from their hiding-place, and sold them for a large sum to Apellicon, of Teos, a wealthy man, resident at Athens, and attached to the Peripatetic sect. The precious rolls were now transferred, about the year 100 B. C., to Athens, after having been lost to the world for one hundred and eighty-seven years. They were found to be in very bad condition, and Apellicon caused copies of them to be taken, himself filling up on conjecture the gaps which now existed in the worm-eaten text. His conjectures, however, were infelicitous, as he was more of a bibliophobist than a philosopher. Soon after his death Athens was taken by Sylla (86 B. C.,) and the library of Apellicon was seized by him and brought to Rome. It was there preserved under the custody of a librarian, and various literary Greeks, residents at Rome, gained access to it. Tyrannion, the learned friend of Cicero, got permission to arrange the MSS.; and Adronicus, of Rhodes, applying himself with earnestness to the task of obtaining a correct text and furnishing a complete edition of the philosophical works of Aristotle, arranged the different treatises and scattered fragments under their proper heads, and, getting numerous transcripts made, gave publicity to a generally-received text of Aristotle.—Edinbury Review.

THE NIAGARA SUSPENSION BRIDGE.—It is now some twenty years since the great suspension bridge was built over the Ningara river. The question of its safety has recently been agitated, and critical investigation has accordingly been made by the chief engineer and directors of the Great Western railway. The caps on the towers covering the cables have been removed, and the cables found to be as perfect in all respects as ever they were. But, most important of all, the anchorage of the cables were thoroughly inspected. The masonry over one of them was removed for about twelve feet, or below where the wires are attached to the anchor chains. A portion of the cablo is imbedded in water-lime cement. For twenty years this has been there, yet, on removing it and rubbing the paint from the wires, the latter were found as bright and perfect as when placed there, the cement having preserved the wire and anchorchains intact. The examination was made in the presence of competent engineers, who have expressed themselves as above to the directors of the bridge company.

IN THE COURSE of his recent submarine explorations Prof. Agassiz adopted the following plan for determining the depth to which the solar rays penetrate the sea: A sensitive photographic plate was inclosed in a box having a revolving lid. This box was sunk to the required depth, and the lid withdrawn. At the end of forty minutes it was drawn up, the plate removed, and developed in the ordinary way. From these observations it was evident that the chemical or actinic rays penetrate to a much greater depth than was supposed possible.

A REMARKABLE EXPEDITION.

SAVANS TO CIRCUMNAVIGATE THE GLOBE.

The expedition about to be dispatched by the British Admiralty to undertake a scientific circumnavigation of the globe is described at great length by Nature. The vessel set apart for this purpose is the corvette Challenger, of two thousand three hundred and six tons, under the command of G. S. Nares, R. N., well known as the author of a valuable work on seamanship, who has seen a great deal of active service, formerly in arctic exploration, and latterly in the Suez survey, which he now leaves to head this expedition. On the scientific staff are Prof. Wyville Thompson, F. R. S., as director; J. Y. Buchanan, of Edinburg University, chemist; H. N. Moseley, of Oxford, naturalist; Dr. Von Willemoes Suhm, of Munich, naturalist; John Murray, of Edinburg University, naturalist. The three naturalists take charge respectively of the invertebrata, the vertebrata and botany. Prof. Thompson assumes the charge of the general zoological work. A photographer is also assigned to duty. The whole expedition is under the immediate direction of the hydrographic department of the Admiralty, and the ship is fitted out with a magnificent collection of scientific apparatus.

The voyage is expected to take about three and a half years.

It is difficult to overestimate the immense benefit which science must derive from an expedition such as this. Apart from the results of intense interest which may be expected from the deep-sea work, the principal object of the expedition, and which must go far to elucidate a subjection which our knowledge is at present of the most imperfect description, abundant opportunity will offer for the accurate investigation of the animal and vegetable life of many highly interesting and yet imperfectly known or totally unexplored regions. The investigation of the floras of such islands as Fernando Norohna and the Marion and Crozett groups cannot fail to yield most instructive results; and it is needless to speak of the intense interest which centers in New Guinea.—American Artisan.

FLIES AND CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.—The very important suggestion was lately made by Prof. Leidy, to the Philadelphia Academy of Sciences, that flies are probably agents of communicating contagious diseases to a greater extent than is suspected. He had recently noticed some flies greedily sipping the diffluent matter of a certain fungus, and upon catching several, and examining with the microscope the liquid which filled their stomachs, and which they exuded from their probosces, he found it to be swarming with the spores of the fungus. From what he had observed in a military hospital, during the late war, he thought flies should be carefully excluded from wounds, to prevent the communication of hospital gangrene.

THE English papers contain detailed accounts of several recent trials of Whitworth's compressed steel, which prove that it is very tenacious, and is, therefore, a most valuable material for field-guns or heavy ordnance. The process by which this substance is prepared consists in submitting molten steel to a high hydraulic pressure during the time that it is cooling. The results of these trials, it is stated, prove conclusively not only that the new material is suitable for guns, but that, owing to its great strength and tenacity, it may prove of great service for many other purposes.

IN ONE of the earliest trials before a colored jury in Texas, twelve gentlemen of color were told by the judge to retire and "find a verdict." They went to the jury-room. The sheriffs and others standing outside heard the opening and shutting of drawers, the slamming of doors and other sounds of unusual commotion. At last the jury came back into the court, when the foreman rose and said: "We have looked everywhar, in the drawers and behind the do', and can't find no verdic'. It warn't in the room."

ONE GOWN A YEAR.—"I declare," said an old lady, reverting to the promise made on her marriage day by her liege lord, "I shall never forget when Obadiah put the nuptial ring on my finger and said: 'With my worldly goods I thee endow.' He used to keep a dry goods store then, and I thought he was going to give me all there was in it. I was young, and did not know till afterward that it meant one calico gown a year."

GOD knows a thousand "might have beens" where we know one; he can look at them all patiently, because—this is the blessedness—he knows a thousand "maybes" also! Hitherto.

TO A BEING so nobly endowed as man, God himself can give nothing better than opportunity.

SCHOOL BOOKS—SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

"Southern Books for Southern Schools."

School-Books which are Unsectional, Unpartisan, and Unpolitical.

PREPARED BY THE MOST EMINENT SOUTHERN SCHOLARS; AND

ENTIRELY ACCEPTABLE TO SOUTHERN TEACHERS AND PARENTS.

The University Publishing Co.,

An Association composed of many of the most eminent citizens of the several Southern States, feeling the necessity for a series of School Books which should be entirely unsectional, unpartisan, and shall not be offensive to the public—which should present only the facts of history and science—are now issuing a complete series of School and College Text-Books by the eminent Southern scholars and educators named below, which are the

Cheapest, Best, and Most Beautiful School-Books

Now published. The "University Series" embraces

MAURY'S GEOGRAPHICAL SERIES,

By Commodore M. F. Maury, of the Virginia Military Institute. A series of books which mark an era in the study of this science, and which, in the hands of a well known and accomplished Southern teacher, "are characterized by a felicity of arrangement and simplicity of style which will commend them at once to the young, and which will be used by all who wish to teach Geography as a science, rather than a thing to make pupils think, and not merely as an enumeration of dry facts."

Holmes' Readers and Spellers,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., Professor of History and General Literature in the University of Virginia. "A series of Readers unequaled in cheapness, excellence, and typographical beauty. They are steadily progressive in character, bright and fresh in their selections of prose and verse, and illustrative of Southern scenes, incidents, and history.

Venable's Arithmetical Series,

By Charles S. Venable, LL.D., Professor of Mathematics in the University of Virginia. These books are received everywhere by intelligent teachers with the highest satisfaction, as being most admirably adapted for mental drill, as well as for business education. Their methods, rules, and reasonings are clear, distinct, logical, and comprehensive, and the series is carefully graded throughout.

Holmes' History of the United States,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia. It is enough to say of this admirable work, interesting, impartial, and truthful, as well as pure and graceful in style, that it is the only History of the United States which is acceptable to Southern teachers and parents. It comes down to the present date.

THE "UNIVERSITY SERIES" OF SCHOOL-BOOKS

COMPRISES, ALSO,

De Vere's French Grammar, Readers, etc.,

By M. Schele DeVere, LL.D., Professor of Modern Languages in the University of Va.

Gildersleeve's Latin Series,

By B. L. Gildersleeve, Prof., LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

Carter's Elements of General History,

By Rev. J. P. Carter, A.M., of Baltimore, Maryland.

Holmes' English Grammars,

By George F. Holmes, LL.D., of the University of Virginia.

LeConte's Scientific Series,

By the Professors LeConte, late of the University of South Carolina.

Johnston's English Classics,

By R. M. Johnston, A.M., late Professor of Rhetoric and Belles-Lettres in the University of Georgia.

To which list other books in other departments will early be added.

Send for our full ILLUSTRATED DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, which will be mailed free to any teacher or school officer. Liberal terms given for introduction.

Board, including lodging, washing, lights and fuel, can be had in the best of families for $20 per month. Day-boarding with the same families, $13 per month. Rooms provided in the dormitories free of rent. Board to be paid in advance at least one month.

LOCATION.

This Institution is located in the lovely village of Jackson, about twelve miles from Bayou Sara, in a grove of pine, magnolia, oak and beech. The location is remarkable for its beautiful woodlands, its bland and delightful atmosphere, its pure water, its unrivaled healthfulness, and its cultivated and refined society.

WHEN FOUNDED.

The college was established by the State of Louisiana in 1825, and ceded to the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1845.

ALUMNI.

Its Alumni numbers 203, and they are to be found in the most honorable and useful stations in the land.

APPARATUS AND CABINET.

The college possesses a valuable set of Philosophical, Astronomical and Chemical Apparatus, and also a well-selected Mineralogical and Geological Cabinet. The apparatus includes a Theodolite, Sextant, Compass, Chronometer, Atwood's Machine, Whirling Tables, Electrical Machine, Air Pump, various combinations of the Mechanical Powers, Batteries, Chemical Tests, etc., sufficient for a thorough and extended course of observations and experiments. Steps have been taken by the Board of Trustees to put these in thorough repair.

LITERARY SOCIETIES.

There are two regular Literary Societies connected with the Institution. These are of great utility to young men acquiring a liberal education—improving them in the art of public speaking, making them in some degree familiar with the proceedings of deliberative bodies, and in cultivating systematic business habits. Each Society has a convenient hall and a well-selected library—about 1,600 volumes each, which, added to the College Library of 2,000 volumes, makes over 5,000 volumes in the college.

BUILDINGS.

The Trustees are determined to continue the repairs on the buildings till completed. The grand Center Building is a noble specimen of architectural beauty and adaptation to the purposes of its erection. The wings, built of solid brick, present each a front of two hundred feet, with upper and lower galleries the entire length, supported by Tuscan columns, and with the center making in the perspective a continuous front of 700 feet.

PREPARATORY DEPARTMENT.

In the Preparatory Department students are fitted for regular college classes, or may obtain a thorough English or commercial education.

ITS FACULTY are men of experience and success in teaching.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

BRADLEY'S PATENT CROQUET.

WE DESIRE TO CALL THE ATTENTION of our friends and the public generally to our large and well-assorted stock of CROQUET from the celebrated manufactory of MILTON BRADLEY & CO. The increasing demand for out-door games at this season of the year, combining exercise with harmless amusement, induced us to adopt this branch of business in connection with others; and to enable our friends to have the best of the kind, containing all modern improvements, we have made arrangements with this well-known house to supply the demand from their manufactory.

THE PATENT CROQUET

has many valuable improvements, among the most important of which is the PATENT BRIDGE, and to which we desire to call especial attention. It belongs to each set of Croquet, and the accompanying cut shows plainly the relative condition of the ordinary bridge and

THE GATE OF DEATH.

BY MRS. E. ATKINSON.

It is a baby's hand
Knocks at the gate of death.
And we who love him stand,
Weeping with bated breath,
Waiting to see it ope
For the little feet to pass
In through the gate of hope
To the throne on the sea of glass.

Alas, the death-mists close
Around the frail life's goal,
Else should we see what glory glows
Around the entering soul.
Nor saint nor seraphim
But the one who loves him best
From his mother's arms receiveth him
And lifts him to his breast.

How safe the baby soul
God's fair world entereth,
To dwell, while happy ages roll
Beyond the gate of death!
Lord, open thou our eyes
To see their blest estate
Who live with thee in Paradise,
The other side death's gate!

Advance.

CYCLONES IN THE TROPICS.

These sudden movements of the air are, perhaps, after the great volcanic eruptions, the most terrible meteorological phenomena of our planet, and we cannot be astonished that in the mythology of the Hindoos, Rudra, the chief of winds and storms, should have ended by becoming, under the name of Siva, the god of destruction and death. Some days before the terrible hurricane is unchained, Nature, already gloomy and as if veiled, seems to anticipate a disaster. The little white clouds which float in the heights of air with the counter trade-winds are hidden under a yellowish or dirty-white vapor; the heavenly bodies are surrounded by vaguely-iridescent halos and heavy layers of clouds, which in the evening present the most magnificent shades of purple and gold, stretching far over the horizon, and the air is as stifling as if it came from the mouth of some great furnace. The cyclone, which already whirls in the upper regions, gradually approaches the surface of the ground or water. Torn fragments of reddish or black clouds are carried furiously along by the storm which plunges and hurries through space; the column of mercury is wildly agitated in the barometer, and sinks rapidly; the birds assemble, as if to take counsel, then fly swiftly away, so as to escape the tempest that pursues them. Soon a dark mass shows itself in the threatening part of the sky; this mass increases, and spreads itself out, gradually covering the azure with a vail of a terrible darkness or a blood-colored hue. This is the cyclone which falls and takes possession of its empire, twisting its immense spirals around the horizon. The roaring of the sea and skies succeeds to this awful silence.

The progress of the wind experiences much more resistance in the interior of continents than on the seas; but the phenomena which are produced there during hurricanes are not less terrible. Buildings which occur in the path of the storm are razed to their foundations, the waters of rivers are arrested and flow back toward their source, isolated trees are torn up and plow the earth with their roots, the forests bend as it they formed but a single mass, and give to the tempest their broken branches and torn leaves. Even the grass is uprooted and swept from the ground. Innumerable fragments fly in the track of the hurricane like the waifs carried away by a fluvial or marine current. Ordinarily the action of electricity is added to the violence of the air in movement, to increase the ravages of the tempest. Sometimes the flashes of lightning are so numerous that they fall in sheets like cascades of fire; the clouds, and even the drops of rain, emit light; the electric tension is so strong that sparks have been seen, says Reid, to dart spontaneously from the body of a negro. An entire forest in St. Vincent's Isle was destroyed without a single trunk having been overthrown. In the same way, on the shores of Lake Constance, in Europe, a great number of trees, which had remained upright in spite of the storm, were completely stripped of their bark.

It is principally on the shores of islands and continents, where the tempest has not been retarded by the obstacles of the ground, that the effects of the storm are the most violent. It is there, too, that the greater number of human lives are destroyed in the general disaster; for then the ships always repair to the ports, and in many places of the coast there are low lands which the waters, suddenly rising, inundate to a vast extent. Nevertheless, when the cyclone strikes against the mountains of a coast it cannot surmount them, and the regions situated beyond remain completely sheltered. Thus in the Island of Reunion the hurricane only strikes one side of the island at the same time; too low to cross the mountains, it at first only devastates the plains situated on one side; but in its march across the sea the wind doubles the promontory that arrested it, and the ravages are instantly recommenced. Since the time of Columbus, the first European who contemplated the hurricane of the Antilles, thousands of ships have been swallowed up during the revolving tempests of the tropical seas, either in the depths of the ports and roads, or in the seas that bathe the coasts of America, China, Hindostan and the islands of the Indian ocean. Such a cyclone as that of Calcutta in 1864, or of Havana in 1846, has shattered more than one hundred and fifty large ships in a few hours; such another catastrophe of the same kind, especially that which passed over the delta of the Ganges in October, 1737, drowned more than twenty thousand persons in the rising waters.

In the midst of the ocean the dangers which ships run are less than in badly-inclosed roads of the coast; but the sensations experienced by the seamen must be all the more lively by their being completely isolated and lost in the awful whirlwind. Around them the daylight is darkened, and darker than night, one might say, since the little light that still remains serves only to show the gloom. The winds which howl and whistle, the waves which dash against each other, the masts bending and breaking, the groaning of the timbers of the ship, all these numberless sounds are mixed and confused in a terrible, despairing wail, drowning even the peals of thunder. The sea no longer rolls in large and mighty waves, but boils over like an enormous caldron, heated by the fire of submarine volcanoes. The low clouds, creeping above the waters, often emit a lurid light that one would say was the reflection of some invisible Gehenna; at the zenith appears, surrounded by darkness, a whitish space which sailors have named "the eye of the tempest," as if they really saw a fierce god in the hurricane, who descends from the sky to seize and destroy them. When, in the middle of this terrible storm, the sailors accept the strife with the elements, and, defying death, seek to maneuver and steer their dismantled ship without sails or masts, they certainly furnish a sublime example of human greatness.

Among the effects that certain hurricanes have produced, there are several which would seem quite incredible, if the genius of man could not by means of powder and other fulminating matters impress on the air a still greater rapidity, and give it thus, though in very limited spaces, a force of destruction superior to that of the tempest. On the twenty-sixth of July, 1825, during the hurricane of Guadaloupe, a gust of wind seized a plank an inch thick and sent it through the trunk of a palm-tree sixteen inches thick. In the same way, in a lesser whirlwind which passed near Calcutta, a bamboo was hurled through a wall of a yard and a half in thickness—that is to say, the breath of air in movement over this point had a force equal to that of a six-pounder. At St. Thomas, in 1837, the fortress which defends the entrance of the port was demolished as if it had been bombarded. Blocks of rock were torn from a depth of thirty or forty feet beneath the sea and flung on shore. Elsewhere solid houses, torn from their foundations, have glided over the ground as if flying before the tempest. On the banks of the Ganges, on the coast of the Antilles and at Charleston vessels have been stranded far from the shore in open plains or in forests. In 1681 a vessel from Antigua was carried up the rocks three yards above the highest tides, and remained like a bridge between two points of rock. In 1825, at the time of the great hurricane of Guadalupe, the vessels which were in the road of Basse Terre disappeared, and one of the captains, happily escaping, recounted how his brig had been seized by the hurricane and lifted out of the water, so that he had, so to speak, "been shipwrecked in the air." Broken furniture, and a quantity of ruins from the houses of Guadalupe, were transported to Montserrat, over an arm of the sea fifty miles wide. From the mountains of St. Thomas the immense black whirlwind was seen from afar to pass across the sea, and over the islands of Porto Rico and Santa Cruz.

The most terrible cyclone of modern times is probably that of the tenth of October, 1780, which has been specially named "the great hurricane." Starting from Barbadoes, where neither trees nor dwellings were left standing, it caused an English fleet anchored off St. Lucia to disappear, and completely ravaged this island, where six thousand persons were crushed under the ruins. After this the whirlwind, tending toward Martinique, enveloped a convoy of French transports, and sunk more than forty ships, carrying four thousand soldiers; on land, the town of St. Pierre and other places were completely razed by the wind, and nine thousand persons perished there. More to the north, Dominique, St. Eustatius, St. Vincent and Porto Rico were likewise devastated, and most of the vessels which were on the path of the cyclone foundered, with all their crews. Beyond Porto Rico the tempest bent to the northeast, toward the Bermudas, and, though its violence had gradually diminished, it sunk several English war-ships returning to Europe. At Barbadoes, where the cyclone had commenced its terrible spiral, the wind was unchained with such fury that the inhabitants hidden in the cellars did not hear their houses falling above their heads; they did not even feel the shocks of earthquake which, according to Rodney, accompanied the storm. The rage of man was arrested before that of nature. The French and English were then at war, and all the ships which the sea swallowed up were ladened with soldiers seeking to destroy one another. At the sight of such ruin the hatred of the survivors was calmed. The Governor of Martinique caused the English sailors, who had become his prisoners in consequence of the great shipwreck, to be set at liberty, declaring that, in the common danger, all men should feel as brothers.—The Ocean, by Elisee Reclus.

SCIENTIFIC.

ODORS OF PLANTS AND RADIANT HEAT.—Mr. Robert Mallet says, in a letter to the Chemical News, that the interesting speculations of Mr. W. H. Olley, as to the part played by the odors of flowers and fruit in tendency to preserve a congenial temperature around them, are probably based in truth. His views are, however, not new. "Whether Prof. Tyndall himself saw that those views followed from his researches on the heat jacketing effects of vapor, I know not; he may possibly have done so, although not referring to the subject in his original memoir; but, when thanking Prof. Tyndall for a copy of that paper some years ago, I myself took occasion to remark to him (as he may possibly recollect) that his results afforded a probable explanation of one of the uses of the odors of flowers, etc. Indeed, the probable connection, as pointed out by myself and now by Mr. Olley, is so obvious that it can scarcely be missed. Still in this, as in most other cases, we have to ask of nature the question, How much? before we can convert speculation into truth. An atmosphere saturated in an odorous vapor is very different from the infinitesimally small and unweighable amount that is sufficient to diffuse the perfume of the flower or fruit, and in such minute proportions the 'jacketing' effects, with wind freely blowing around, may be also all but evanescent. Strong as is the odor of the lemon or orange when the rind is pressed or broken, those who have been in the orange orchards of the South may remember how the odor of the fruit rind is scarcely perceptible, unless when these are by any cause rubbed or struck against each other."

A PERFECT WATER-PROOF.—A writer in an English paper says: By the way, speaking of water proofs, I think I can give travelers a valuable hint or two. For many years I have worn India rubber waterproofs, but will buy no more, for I have learned that good Scottish tweed can be made entirely impervious to rain, and, moreover, I have learned how to make it so; and for the benefit of readers I will give the recipe: In a bucket of soft water put half a pound of sugar of lead and half a pound of powdered alum; stir this at intervals, until it becomes clear, then pour it off into another bucket, and put the garment therein, and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. Two of my party—a lady and a gentleman—have worn garments thus treated in the wildest storms of wind and rain without getting wet. The rain hangs upon the cloth in globules. In short, they were really water-proof. The gentleman, a fortnight ago, walked nine miles in a storm of rain and wind such as you rarely see in the South; and when he slipped off his overcoat his underclothes were as dry as when he put them on. This is, I think, a secret worth knowing, for cloth, if it can be made to keep out wet, is in every way better than what we know as water-proofs.

THE SOURCE OF SOLAR ENERGY.—Captain John Ericsson, writing in Nature, supports by a mathematical calculation the theory that the solar heat is developed by the shrinking of the solar mass. He says that at first sight it would appear that no probable amount of contraction of the sun could develop by gravitation toward the center the enormous amount of dynamic energy of 312,000 thermal units, or nearly 241,000,000 foot-pounds per minute, for each square foot of the solar surface. Yet he finds that an annual shortening of the sun's radius by 120.7 feet would be sufficient. A period of 1,864 years would be required, at this rate, to diminish the solar diameter one ten-thousandth part. In 2,000,000 years from the present time the tropical solar intensity will be reduced to 51.4 degrees, from 67.2 degrees, the present maximum temperature produced by solar radiation on the ecliptic, when the earth is in aphelion. Captain Ericsson rejects the meteoric theory of solar heat. Mr. Maxwell Hall, in the monthly notices of the Royal Astronomical Society, presents a demonstration of the same theory. His calculations (and some of his assumed elements, even) differ considerably from those of Captain Ericsson; but he arrives at a result not very far from that of the former investigator, namely, an annual shrinkage of the sun's radius of 129 feet. Of this astronomy affords, as yet, no direct evidence. All that these calculations prove is the adequacy of the assumed cause to produce, without a diminution of the sun's size which would be apparent to our observations, the actual quantity of solar heat.

CINNABAR is said to have been discovered in Nevada, though the present authority is that of an Indian, who offered for sale a fine-looking specimen weighing four or five pounds, which he said he picked up in the low hills skirting the west side of the desert. An enormous amount of quicksilver is consumed in Nevada, and, as it is essential to the reduction of gold and silver ores, its present cost—ninety cents a pound—largely increases the expense of mining. The annual quicksilver yield of the world is seven million pounds, one-third of which is the product of the New Almaden and New Idria mines, California. As our native ores cannot now be reduced without quicksilver, the discovery of the Indian should be followed up by a thorough exploration of the region indicated.

THE QUESTION of South sea exploration is now attracting the attention of scientific explorers, and it is not improbable that the long-continued efforts of Dr. Neumayer to organize and equip an expedition for this purpose will soon be successful. It is a matter of no little surprise that, while vessels of every flag are penetrating the frost-bound seas of the north, as yet little is known of these south polar regions. It is an open question whether our geographical maps of these regions are correct, even in their most decided features; while of the geology and natural history of these southern continents or islands the world is still in confessed ignorance.

THE African exploring expedition which the Khedive of Egypt is about to send out under the command of Purdy Bey, one of his American officers, comprises five thousand men. The ostensible object of the expedition is to go into the country which it is supposed that Livingstone may be exploring, and to cooperate with him in case assistance is desired. If this be declined, the expedition will undertake, on its own account, a search for the sources of the Nile; and, if these be discovered, the Egyptian flag is to be planted there, and the country annexed to the already wide domains of the Eastern monarch.

possessing a peculiar and thrilling quality of tone, most pipe-like in its nature, and which can be used in many passages with charming effect.

The above Stops are in every case separate, and additional sets of reeds, are entirely distinct from the "Tremolo," which always accompanies them, and which is never perfect without them, and can all be brought at will into the full organ, adding greatly to its power and richness of tone.

They take pleasure in announcing to the musical public and the trade the valuable addition to their Organs of a most beautiful Solo Stop,

THE ÆOLINE.

It is an additional set of reeds, exquisitely voiced and ingeniously arranged in a separate wind-chest (patented September 13, 1870.) Its quality of tone is the most delicate and soft imaginable. It is capable of the greatest variety of effects possible to obtain with their other stops, the improved VOX HUMANA in particular. It has elicited the warmest encomiums from all organists and musicians who have examined it. It is perfectly simple in its construction, and they predict for it the highest degree of success. Its charming effects, especially when used in connection with their improved styles of cases, can but be appreciated by every musician.

IMPROVED CASES, ETC.

By the construction of these Cases the quality of tone in their Instruments has been greatly improved, every facility for the comfort and convenience of the performer has been provided for, and the effect of their beautiful and graceful design is such as to entirely obviate the disagreeable boxy appearance which has been for so long a time an unpleasant characteristic of the Reed Organ.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.—At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, this afternoon, resolutions acknowledging the contributions to science by the late Commodore Maury, and expressive of sympathy with his widow, were opposed by Mr. Blunt, on the ground that Commodore Maury was a traitor. Mr. Opdyke remarked that Commodore Maury was a Southerner, and that if Mr. Blunt, had been one he might have done the same. Mr. Blunt energetically protested that he never would. The resolution passed, Mr. Blunt dissenting.

NEW YORK, Feb. 7.—A special dispatch from the City of Mexico, dated the fourth, says: Mr. Skelton, United States consul, says that the forces of Lozada, the rebel and Communist, were defeated before Guadalga and Mazatlan, and are fleeing before the government troops toward Tepic. Peace prevails in the remainder of the republic.

BOSTON, Feb. 7.—The public library is to remain open, by order of the Common Council, on Sundays. Vote, 47 to 10.

LITTLE ROCK, Feb. 7.—The Senate to-day passed the civil rights bill abolishing distinctions on account of color in the public schools, and attaching heavy penalties to innkeepers, railroad and steamboat companies, etc., for refusing colored men any privileges enjoyed by whites.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—The Secretary of the Treasury sent a communication to Congress to-day recommending the sale of the unfinished cast-iron hospital at New Orleans, which was commenced eighteen years ago, and the purchase of a more healthful site, and the erection of a pavilion hospital, if the proceeds of the old establishment cover the expense.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 8.—Governor Geary died suddenly this morning. He returned last night from New York apparently in good health. While breakfasting with his family, when in the act of helping his little son, his head fell back, and before his wife could reach him he had expired.

HARTFORD, Feb. 8.—The Rev. Fisk Harsh, for fifty years pastor of the Congregational church of Winchester Center, died this morning, aged ninety years.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 8.—A petition is circulating in Los Angeles asking Congress to appoint a commissioner to report on the practicability of turning the Colorado river into the Colorado desert, thus forming a lake which would reclaim its vast wastes.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 9.—A special from Fort Deposit says: This afternoon, quite unexpectedly, the water began to rise and pour into the town at Rock run. The streets were flooded, as also Middleton, just above; and the scene of parties moving their household effects from the threatened points was again repeated, and with more excitement than heretofore, owing to the continued rapid rise of the river.

The water at four o'clock was higher than at any time since the freshet, and the alarm of the inhabitants increased momentarily as the waters gathered around them. The Presbyterian church was entirely surrounded. At the new Methodist church the Sunday school was compelled to suspend its exercises, the pupils with great difficulty reaching their homes. In many cases they were compelled to take the hill route back of the town.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Secretary Fish this evening received a dispatch from Minister Sickles, that at three o'clock to-night the Cortes adopted a republican form of government by a vote of 259 to 32.

There is now no doubt of the President's intention to start in about six weeks upon an extensive Southern tour.

The rooms of the Credit Mobilier are crowded to suffocation.

Oakes Ames has testified. He has lost none of his defiance. He has little memoranda—new ones; he has refreshed his memory.

FOREIGN.

CITY OF MEXICO, Feb. 1.—The Lozado revolution in Tepec is assuming formidable proportions. Lozado has defeated the government troops in a pitched battle.

BERLIN, Feb. 5.—The new army bill claims twelve years' service—three active, four in reserve and five in the landwehr.

ATHENS, Feb. 5.—The earthquake shocks on the Island of Samore, which caused such great destruction to property and loss of life, continued four days. It has not yet been ascertained the number of persons who perished.

CADIZ, Feb. 5.—A dispatch from Lisbon, announcing that the steamship Murillo had been sighted off that port, was incorrect, as she is yet in Cadiz, where she has remained since her first arrival. The British consul here has demanded the issue of a writ of attachment against her. The captain of the Murillo and the officer who was on watch at the time the disaster to the Northfleet happened are held as prisoners on a Spanish man-of-war. Pending the investigation the crew are under guard and are not allowed to go ashore.

The Spanish authorities, who have made an examination of the Murillo, declare that she shows no sign of having been in collision, and it is their belief that she is guiltless of having run down and sunk the Northfleet.

LONDON, Feb. 6.—Parliament has assembled. In the Queen's speech it is said: "England, being at peace with the great powers, will co-operate for the suppression of the slave trade."

On the east coast of Africa friendly negotiations are progressing with Russia. Schoenwalloff assures her majesty of the friendship of the Czar toward England.

Thiers will arbitrate between England and Portugal relative to the possession of the south coast of Africa. It is considered proper to hasten the payment of the Alabama claims award.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—Railroad travel in Spain is still interrupted by the Carlists. The mail from Madrid is nine days behind. Spanish trade is disturbed.

ST. PETERSBURG, Feb. 7.—Apartments are preparing in Winter Palace for the Shah of Persia.

MADRID, Feb. 10.—The Correspondencia, in its issue of to-day, announces that it is probable that the session of the Cortes will be suspended for a few days, and upon reassembling a proposition from King Amadeus to abdicate the throne will be read in Congress, whereupon effort will probably be made to dissuade the King from carrying out his purpose. Should he persist, a special law will be passed electing regent and cabinet.

Other Madrid journals state that if the King should resign the present authorities will remain in office to watch the course of events, and it is believed all questions arising out of the abdication will be settled according to the constitution and without any disturbance.

PARIS, Feb. 10.—Advices from a Carlist source represent the insurrection as daily gaining strength. It now exists in the eight northern provinces, and is extending to the central provinces.

The government is acting on the defensive. Towns are being fortified, and volunteers are armed to resist the advance of the insurgents.

MADRID, Feb. 11, 1 A. M.—King Amadeus persists in his determination to abdicate the throne. It is expected that an executive committee of the government will be formed which will proclaim a republic.

When it became known last night that the King would resign the crown, groups of people gathered in many of the streets, and there were several attempts made to create a disturbance. They were promptly suppressed, however, and the crowds dispersed without any conflict.

The Congress last night adopted a proposal that the president of that branch of the Cortes and fifty deputies shall constitute a permanent committee.

Greenville Methodist Church.

MR. EDITOR: I have enjoyed a passing acquaintance with the church in Greenville for the past six years. They had no house of worship. The Protestants kindly gave them their house to worship in. Under the pastoral labors of Bro. Molby for three years, both Methodisms were mostly united, and large accessions were made to the membership. Bro. Shores, the former presiding elder, has been diligent and watchful over all the interests of the district. Bro. Barker, the present pastor, who was stationed here last year, under the blessing of God has made many valuable accessions to the membership. On entering upon the work, last year, he began at once to collect material to build a house for the Lord. The work of building and paying were carried on successfully during the past year. In January the building was completed and ready for consecration. Bishop Keener was invited to preach the sermon, but other episcopal duties prevented his attendance. On the fourth Sabbath the writer preached the dedication sermon. The church was in debt about $1,100. The entire amount was raised, and the house given to God for his worship. Bro. Barker, the pastor, read the usual service and offered the prayer of consecration. Bro. Shores preached at night. The day was unfavorable, but the congregations were large. The church building is valued at about $15,000. It is one of the most commodious and tastefully finished houses of worship in the State. It is favorably located, is an ornament to the town, and a lasting monument to the energy of the pastor. It reflects credit on the taste and liberality of the church and citizens of Greenville. May it prove a perpetual blessing to them and their children and children's children. This station has grown, in the last six years, from a very small beginning to compare favorably with the churches in Montgomery, Selma and Mobile in all respects. Greenville now only lacks one thing to make it a most desirable place to live in, and that is a first-class male and female high school. This obstacle will certainly be remedied by next September. The church has determined to open and sustain a first-class male and female academy, under the control and patronage of the Methodist church in Greenville. The building will be ready by September. We shall need a first-class male teacher. S. P. RICHARDSON.

GREENVILLE, Jan. 5, 1873.

"WHO'S that gentleman, my little man?" was asked of an urchin. "That one with the spike-tailed coat?" "Yes," was the response. "Why, he's a brevet uncle of mine." "How is that?" was asked. "'Cause he's engaged to my Aunt Mary?"

IF WE SAVE the moments of time we will have enough for every needful work. Moments are the material of which days and years are made. If these be well improved we will have years devoted to profitable employment.

What is the Credit Mobilier?

ITS ORIGIN, OBJECTS, HISTORY AND PROMOTERS.

The story of the Credit Mobilier is somewhat complicated, but by attending only to the salient points a sufficiently intelligent comprehension of the great scandal which has involved so many prominent men may be obtained. The facts are about these:

By act of Congress, approved July 1, 1862, a number of persons were incorporated into a company, to be known as "The Union Pacific Railroad Company," for the purpose of constructing a railroad and accompanying telegraph line "from a point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, between the south margin of the valley of the Republican river and the north margin of the valley of the Platte river, in the territory (as it was then) of Nebraska"—this point being afterward settled upon as Omaha—to the western boundary of Nevada. To assist this enterprise the act gave the company five alternate sections of the public lands per mile on either side of the road, and lent the company six per cent. United States bonds, payable in thirty years after date, to the amount of $16,000 per mile for track laid on plain land or prairie, $32,000 per mile for rolling, and $48,000 per mile for mountainous land.

These bonds were to be delivered to the company as sections of forty miles of the line were put in operation and approved as properly constructed by the government inspectors, and "the issue of said bonds and delivery to the said company shall ipso facto constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of the railroad and telegraph, together with the rolling stock, fixtures and property of every kind and description." Furthermore, "all compensation for services rendered for the government shall be applied to the payment of said bonds and interest until the whole amount is fully paid." Under these provisions the Union Pacific had, of course, no money from the government to begin operations with. The lands could not be sold until a railroad made them accessible; the bonds could not issue until the road was at least in part in practical operation; and, finally, it was difficult, if not impossible, to procure popular subscriptions to the company's stock as long as the government had a first mortgage on the company's property. Under these circumstances an effort was soon made to procure further favors from Congress, and on the second of July, 1864, another act was approved, by which the government gave up its first mortgage on the road and accepted a second mortgage as security for the bonds loaned the company, and consented that only half the compensation for services rendered the government by the company should be required to be applied to the payment of the bonds loaned.

The company was therefore enabled to sell its own bonds by giving a first mortgage as security to the purchaser, and anticipated being able to pocket half the compensation for services rendered, though out of this latter matter grew a controversy, of which hereafter. The act of July 2, 1864, not only allowing the company United States bonds, but permitting it to issue its own first mortgage bonds to an equal amount, the question of constructing the road began to attract attention. Some of the shrewder stockholders determined to get the contracts for building the road themselves, and, by virtue of their interest in the company, to make those contracts as favorable to themselves as possible.

The idea may be better understood, perhaps, by supposing that five men, A, B, C, D and E, are in partnership, and the partnership business needs a store. A, B and C enter into an outside partnership to build the store, in order thereby to reap the profits of the transaction, and then, by virtue of their position and influence in the original partnership, let the contract in the name of that partnership to the outside partnership they have formed. Thomas C. Durant, originally vice president of the Union Pacific, seems to have been at the head of this move.

There was in Pennsylvania a sort of speculating company incorporated by the Legislature of that State under the name of "The Pennsylvania Fiscal Agency," and this affair, which had a charter allowing it to do almost anything, Mr. Durant and his associates bought, changing the title to "The Credit Mobilier of America." October 7, 1861, this transformation took place, and forthwith Mr. Durant and associates, as stockholders and officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, contracted with themselves, as the Credit Mobilier, to build the Union Pacific road. As the Union Pacific was receiving millions from the government in the shape of United States bonds, and other millions from the sale of its own first mortgage bonds and from the proceeds of stock sold, money to pay the Credit Mobilier for its labors was abundant, and Mr. Durant and friends hadled it out from the Union Pacific treasury to the Credit Mobilier treasury—i. e., into their own pockets—in great quantities and with much zeal. Everything coming into the Union Pacific above the bare cost of construction being paid over to the Credit Mobilier, the dividends of that company were miraculously large. In the fall of 1865, or after the Credit Mobilier had been in business about a year, Mr. Oakes Ames appears as a Credit Mobilier stockholder, and immediately began a war upon Mr. Durant, with a view to ousting that gentleman and becoming the presiding genius of the grab himself. Durant resisted, and a fierce conflict between the Ames faction and the Durant faction ensued.

In July, 1867, a compromise was arrived at, and in the September following carried into effect. Oakes Ames was to manage the Credit Mobilier busines in the East, and Mr. Durant was to go out West and watch the interests of the speculation on the line of the road. Up to this time the Credit Mobilier had declared dividends aggregating two hundred and seventy per cent., and had earned an additional dividend of about one hundred per cent., equal in money to about $7,000,000. Mr. Oakes Ames having thus settled himself in the saddle, lost no time in ousting Mr. Durant, and finally reduced that gentleman to the position of a mere unlnfluential stockholder. Then, this being, as will be borne in mind, about the end of the year 1867, or near the time of the annual assembling of Congress, Mr. Ames went to work to place Credit Mobilier stock where it would, in his language, "do good"—i. e. procure certain legislation which was still deemed desirable on behalf of the Union Pacific, the object being to give that company more money, in order that the Credit Mobilier might suck more out of it.

By the act of July 2, 1864, as has been mentioned, it was provided that only half of the compensation for services rendered the United States by the Union Pacific should be applied to the payment of the bonds loaned the road by the government. The act saying nothing about the interest on these bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury insisted that the other half of the compensation should go to pay that, whereas for the Union Pacific—i. e., really for the Credit Mobilier—it was contended that one-half should go to pay the bonds and the other half should be paid over to the Union Pacific in money. To secure an act putting this beyond question, so that the Secretary of the Treasury should be compelled to pay, was therefore a prime object with Mr. Oakes Ames, and the process of securing the requisite congressional strength to pass such an act was entered on. This process was to sell Credit Mobilier stock, then enormously valuable, to prominent representatives and senators at par, allowing them the dividends due on the stock as a set-off on the purchase money. Thus twenty shares were sold Vice President Colfax at par and interest; but as a dividend of eighty per cent. in Union Pacific bonds was then due on those shares, Mr. Colfax was only called on to pay the difference between this dividend and the par of the stock, with interest added.

This difference was $534.72, and by paying this Mr. Colfax became the owner of the twenty shares. Oakes Ames therefore gave him the difference between $534.72 and $2,000 and accrued interest, but as the stock was worth far more than par he really gave him much more. Thus the stock was really worth, at the lowest figure, 250, or $5,200 for the twenty shares, and the net value of the eighty per cent. dividend, which was in bonds worth 97, being $1,552, the twenty shares were really worth in the market $6,752, at the lowest estimate; and yet Mr. Colfax got all this for $731.72, or really paid no more than eight per cent. for his stock. In like manner Mr. Dawes bought ten shares at par, paying $1,000 therefor, and in three weeks thereafter received a dividend of $350, making the transaction really stand, value paid, $1,000; value received, real value of stock, $2,600; dividend, $350; total, $2,950; surplus of value received, $1,950. Mr. Dawes, it should be mentioned, paid all that he had received back with the exception of ten per cent. on his money for the month he owned the stock. It should also be mentioned that he did not pay back until he heard the Credit Mobilier was threatened with litigation. Senator Patterson also owned stock, swore that he had never owned any, and finally had it proven point blank upon him that he had, and had furthermore received dividends thereon.

Other senators and representatives, present or past, as Logan, Wilson, Harlan, Bingham, Kelly, Scofield, Allison and Alley, were likewise tampered with by Oakes Ames in the same general fashion as those whose cases have been more particularly recited, and on the proposition desired by Mr. Ames coming before Congress it was passed forthwith, and is now the much-mentioned ninth section of the army appropriation act of March 3, 1871. Its sum and substance is to command the Secretary of the Treasury to pay over in money to the Union and Central Pacific roads one-half the compensation for services "heretofore"—that is, before March 3, 1871—or hereafter—that is, ever since that date—rendered the government. In other words, half of that security which the people of the United States were, under the act incorporating the Union Pacific, to have that they would not be called upon to pay the loan to the Union Pacific, so far as the services of that road to the government could quiet it, was surrendered by this section. It was a plain gift to the railroads—and, so far as the Union Pacific is concerned, to the Credit Mobilier—of from $4,000,000 to $6,000,000.—Picayune.

WHAT we act has its consequences on earth; what we think has its consequences in heaven.

Religion in the Army.

Rev. Dr. B. T. Lacy delivered a lecture before the Southern Historical Society, in this city, February 3, on "The Religious Elements in the Armies of the Confederate States." From the lecture, as reported by the Picayune, we make the following extract:

In the good work in the army it could not be said that one religious persuasion did more than the other; but the Baptists and Methodists, from being more numerous, probably had more chaplains than any other religion.

The speaker then went on to tell what first led him into the army. He took no credit to himself, but he gave it all to the appeal of that great and good man, Stonewall Jackson. He was pushing his way through Maryland when Jackson heard of it, and sent a direct request that he would come, as "under God" there was work for him in the army. He then told how his duty detained him at Fredericksburg, and told very graphically of the scenes preceding the great battle, and of the doings during the battle, and of the final bombardment and sack of the town, and it was after the destruction of Fredericksburg, when there was no further call for him there, that he recalled the request of Jackson, and he went to him, and in his greeting there was perhaps a spirit of prophecy. "Your coming has been long," he said.

The reverend gentleman then told of Jackson's solicitude for the welfare of his men, and how he frankly signed a letter to the Secretary of War calling his attention to the need of an efficient chaplain corps.

The speaker had taken the letter, and every aid was promised and given.

The first thing done in the way of reform was the furnishing every chaplain with a horse. Many of them had become worn out with the marches and their duties. There was another thing: the chaplains could not leave their regiment, and many of them had preached all their sermons, and they were compelled to repeat, and the men became listless and hard to interest; this was changed so that the chaplains could visit and associate with every corps in the army.

Then there were weekly meetings of the chaplains when the movements of the army permitted. At the first meeting there were twenty-five, and after awhile there were eighty.

Nowhere, perhaps, was there so much good accomplished as in the army of northern Virginia. The reason that the same good was not accomplished in the other armies was owing to the fact that they were constantly on the move; they were stationary for no length of time. It was impossible to organize when the army was flying around, and the chaplains, as it were, had to cast their words on the wind and rely on God's mercy to carry them into the hearts of the men.

The corps of the army of Virginia had another advantage. When the army stopped for any length of time there were volunteers in the work, and the speaker would make appointments for them, and at the end, when he made these appointments, he had to tell them to bring a box of provisions to contribute their share to the general supply.

The good that had been accomplished was great. Statistics, carefully compiled from reports made at each meeting, showed that six thousand men had in one year professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. There are almost as many citizens in New Orleans as there were soldiers in that army, but when did ever six thousand people come to the church in one year?

Some say this was the worst of the fears of the men, that had they lived—few of them did—they would have turned away again. This might be so; but who knows, who shall dare to say? Oftimes they preached on the very verge of the battle-field, and many a man had found salvation while passing from the place into the fight.

One of the chaplains in the army, while passing over a battle-field after the fight, was called by name, and, turning, he saw a man whom he did not know; he was wounded terribly, and was dying. The chaplain immediately asked him how his mind was—how he felt at entering the presence of his God—and the wounded man had said: "I can go; I have found Christ but only a short time ago—it dates from your sermon before the battle." This was but one blessed instance.

The speaker then went on to give many other instances tending to show the good results of the work of chaplains; but there was another side. It must not be supposed that it was a Christian army. There were but six thousand out of one hundred thousand, and even this could not be seen save by one who moved among them all the time.

He then digressed and related some very interesting anecdotes of army life, and concluded by a touching tribute to the memories of Jackson and Lee, to whom, he said, the good results were in a great measure to be attributed; and, said he, what a great consolation to know that there were many who died in the faith of the Lord, and to think that perhaps my boy was one of the number.

INCLUDING ALL CLASSES.—A faithful brother recently prayed for the absent members "who were prostrated on beds of sickness and chairs of wellness."

From Bishop McTyeire.

We copy a few paragraphs from an excellent and most suggestive letter, dated Nashville, January 1, from the Bishop to the Pacific Methodist:

The death of our dear Bro. Howell profoundly affects me. These are mysteries—so young and capable, so consecrated and useful, so acceptable and so much needed; and yet "deprived of the residue of his years." We bow our heads and say: "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." He can raise up others, and will. He can carry on his work, and has been doing it, though the workmen die. It is now as it was before: "And they truly were many priests, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death." But Jesus, our High Priest, "continueth ever." This changeable ministry, "by reason of death," does not break the continuity of plan on which the church advances. Her divine Head lives and governs and shapes events in the interest of the church. The same Spirit calls and anoints a succession in the ministry. May the Lord lay his hand upon a score of other young men among you, and send them forth. Pray for it.

I am gratified that so excellent a use has been made of Bro. Howell's death, in the biographical sketch furnished through Bro. Simmons. Death is made the occasion of his clearest, strongest testimony for the true life, and becomes a proof of it. A poor "victory," that, for "the last enemy."

How suggestive, as well as comforting, are the facts given in his dying hours when the young preacher was, as we say, out of his mind. The miser, at that time, is counting gold, the ambitious soldier is at the head of armies, the man of the world is scheming against enemies who are trying to rob or ruin him, the devotee of fashion is incoherently muttering of its past scenes, and so the ruling passion dominates, and the underlying thought, in that unguarded hour, comes to the surface. The soul is then unmasked. A window is opened in the breast. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." The guileless, pure-minded pastor of Petaluma is organizing Sunday schools, holding prayer meeting, giving out hymns and pronouncing benedictions!

Our Annual Conference sessions are now over, except Florida, Louisiana and Baltimore; the two former will be before this reaches you. The statistics, so far as I have been able to keep pace with them, show an increase of members which is cause of gratitude to the Lord of the harvest. Only one Conference (the East Texas) has reported a decrease, and it is less than a score. Perhaps the summing up of the year will show an aggregate gain of between thirty and forty thousand souls.

While a true and living church must grow, and believers will be added daily to the Lord, she should habitually look to graces rather than numbers. Sin is a subtle thing, and while it does not consist in, yet it lurks about, "numbering the people." The heart may be lifted up with pride contemplating a multitude, and the attention called away from the true glory and strength. Let us "rejoice with trembling." The final test is in character, not figures; it is in fruit, not growth. There is a power in holiness that disregards numerical proportions. For all the purposes of a Christian church the few may be strong, and the many weak. These things may sound like platitudes, but we do well to consider them in this connection.

MARKING TIME.—There is a movement in military drill known as "marking time"—a great shuffling of the feet, but no progress. In the Christian church there has been a vast deal of this same thing—marching on one's post. Then, again, multitudes stand as if their feet were glued to the ground, with no motion at all; others have their feet pinched within tight and narrow ecclesiastical exclusiveness, so that they cannot walk without pain; others still have such clumsy, heavy and ill-fitting shoes that their feet are like lumps of lead; again, you see those who have undressed their feet altogether and relapsed into slippers and leisure. They think of nothing but their own ease. They have everything in their thoughts save motion. Familiar with the apostolical direction, "having done all, to stand," they are ready for defense should they be assaulted. But their feet are not shod with alacrity in active evangelical service.—William Adams, D. D.

LET IT ALONE.—The rats once assembled in a large cellar, to devise some method of safety in getting the bait from a steel trap which lay near, having seen numbers of their friends and relatives snatched from them by its merciless jaws. After many long speeches, and proposals of many elaborate but fruitless plans, a happy wit, standing erect, said:

"It is my opinion that if with one paw we can keep down the spring, we can safely take the food from the trap with the other."

All the rats squealed assent. Then they were startled by a faint voice, and a poor rat, with only three legs, limping into the ring, stood up to speak:

"My friend, I have tried the method you propose, and you see the result. Now let me suggest a plan to escape the trap: Let it alone."

"IT IS a sin to steal a pin," and a man in Philadelphia has been arrested for that very offense. The pin has a diamond attached to it.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1873.

LOVE-LIGHTENS LABOR.

A good wife rose from her bed one morn,
And thought with a nervous dread
Of the piles of clothes to be washed, and more
Than a dozen mouths to be fed.
There were the meals to get for the men in the fields,
And the children to fix away
To school, and the milk to be skimmed and churned;
And all to be done that day.

It had rained in the night, and all the wood
Was as wet as wet could be;
There were puddings and pies to bake, besides
A loaf of cake for tea;
And the day was hot, and her aching head
Throbbed wearily as she said:
"If matters but knew what good wives know,
They would be in no haste to wed!"

"Jennie, what do you think I told Ben Brown?"
Called the farmer from the well;
And a flush crept up to his bronzed brow,
And his eye half-bashfully fell;
"It was this," he said, and, coming near,
He smiled—and, stooping down,
Kissed her cheek—"'Twas this: that you were the best
And the dearest wife in town!"

The farmer went to the field, and the wife
In a smiling and absent way
Sang snatches of tender little songs
She'd not sung for many a day;
And the pain in her head was gone, and the clothes
Were white as the foam of the sea;
Her bread was light, and butter was sweet,
And as golden as it could be.

"Just think," the children all called in a breath,
"Tom Wood has run off to sea!
He wouldn't, I know, if he only had
As happy a home as we."
The night came down, and the good wife smiled
To herself as she softly said:
"'Tis so sweet to labor for those we love,
It's not strange that maidens will wed!"

The Alabama Conference.

THE SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY, ETC.

MR. EDITOR: The Alabama Conference, at its late annual session, passed resolutions by which the interest on $10,000 of its funds, at eight per cent., amounting to $800 a year, was turned over to the Southern University, at Greensboro, avowedly to pay the tuition of preachers' sons of the Alabama and the North Alabama Conferences; but the money is to go to the institution whether there be any of these beneficiaries in attendance or not.

Now against this action I voted, and was willing to enter my protest on the journal of the Conference; but, not having recorded any protest, I avail myself of the columns of the Conference organ to give my objections to said action and to enter a protest. The money thus belonging to the Conference should have been held for the benefit of all its members, or, if any distinction was to be made in its distribution or appropriation, it ought to have been in favor of the most needy. As it is now disposed of, but a few of the preachers will be benefitted. It will only pay the tuition of ten or twelve scholars, and none but those whose salaries are large will be able to pay board at Greensboro; and all others, per necessity, are cut off from the benefit of their own money, because it is placed entirely beyond their reach. Is it right for the preacher, with a salary of $300 or $500, to help pay the tuition of the son of the preacher whose salary is $2,500 or $3,000, while his own son is cut off from such benefit altogether? Any one can see that this would not be right. To be plain, it would not be just; and yet such is inevitably the result of this Conference action.

How much better to have invested the $10,000, and given the $800 interest to the preachers, to educate their children in the schools to which they might have access, without having to pay board.

At the rate of $3 per month for tuition, thirty scholars might have been in school nine months in the year, and fifty-four scholars for at least five months. If the preachers are to have any assistance in the education of their children, this is the way to give it.

What a fine nucleus this $10,000, together with the $3,000 turned over to the Alabama Female College, at Tuskegee, would have been to establish a respectable fund, the annual interest of which might have been used, as I have indicated, for the education of the preachers' children. For one, I would have been willing to pledge myself, in the next four years, to raise on the Camden district—the weakest financially, with one exception, in the Conference—the sum of at least $1,000; and, other presiding elders doing as well, we could have easily increased the $13,000 to $25,000 or $30,000, and thus we might have been enabled to ease and quiet the perplexed and troubled minds of many preachers, who cannot see how they are to give their children any education at all, to say nothing about sending them to college, unless in this or some similar way they get assistance.

It may be that some one will be ready to conclude that my dissatisfaction with the action of the Conference is because of opposition or unfriendliness to the Southern University. Not so. I have ever felt and taken more interest in this institution than any of its special guardians or custodians have in me. I put myself to some trouble and took special pains, last year, to bring its president and others of the faculty before and with the people of the district of which I had charge. My counsel for its management, success and prosperity may not be worthy of the notice or consideration of its special friends, yet my personal interest in education, and my devotion to the Conference in which I have spent twenty-two years of active ministerial life, would certainly cause me to be true to the institution claimed as "the college of the Conference."

The truth is that the plan I have suggested would have been one of the surest ways of permanently helping the University, as every preacher who could have done so would prefer to patronize the church school. The fund might have been increased to such an amount that fully as much might have gone to the University annually as it will get, and it would have gone upon such just and equitable terms as to have kept down any such prejudice or opposition as the action of the Conference will certainly engender and provoke. I could say more on this subject, and may at some future time, but will close for the present.

Stewards' Reports.

MR. EDITOR: I have a few things to say on this subject, and I would like to get the attention of stewards, for I believe the want of systematic conformity to the law of our church is the prime cause of our financial difficulties in most places.

Our Discipline is the result of the mature deliberation of the assembled wisdom of our church, from time to time, extending over a period of nearly one hundred years. It is therefore entitled to more consideration than it sometimes receives from those who, of all others—ministers excepted—should be the last to ignore its requirements. Besides this, the Scriptures require us to "let all things be done decently and in order."—First Corinthians xiv, 40. Conformity with this law of God will lead to obedience to the rules of the church to which we may chance to belong.

Again, every person, on being received into our church, promises to "be subject to the discipline of the church."—See page 203. And stewards are required to "both know and love the Methodist doctrine and discipline."—See page 97. And ministers are required "not to mend our rules, but keep them; not for wrath, but conscience' sake."—See page 78. So that the obligations we have voluntarily assumed, as members and officers of the Methodist Church, bind us to obedience to its Discipline.

Now what is the law of our church in regard to "stewards' reports?"

1. "The stewards"—after fixing the salary of their pastor—"shall report to each church meeting the whole amount to be raised, and that part of it which each congregation is expected to pay. The church conference shall adopt its own method of raising this money."—Page 145. The propriety of this is apparent. The churches are informed as to what they are expected to do, and are at liberty to adopt a method of doing it that will suit them best.

2. "It shall be the duty of the stewards * * * to make an accurate return of every expenditure of money, whether for the support of the ministry or the relief of the sick or the poor."—Page 97. The propriety of this rule is also apparent. The church has a right to know the disposition made of the money they contribute, and the stewards have a right to exonerate themselves of any suspicion of not properly using money placed in their hands for church purposes. I know this is a delicate point, and I write cautiously. While I have never known a steward whom I was unwilling to trust with any amount of church funds, and for any length of time that might be necessary, I have heard insinuations by evil-minded persons against many. I have heard it rendered as an excuse for not contributing to the church that probably the steward would use the money and account for it only when it was convenient for him to do so. It seems to me, if I were a steward, I would claim the right to "put to silence the ignorance of foolish men" by "making an accurate return of every expenditure of money" for church purposes.

But to whom shall this return be made?

1. To the Quarterly Conference. In this conference the following inquiries are made in regard to the money raised for church purposes: 8. "What amount has been raised the past quarter for the support of the ministry, and how has it been applied?" 9. "What amounts have been raised for other enterprises of the church?"—See page 55. This covers the whole ground of church finances; and the reports go down on the records of the Quarterly Conference, and become a part of the permanent history of the church.

2. But this return is also to be made to the church conference. A part of the business of a church conference is to "receive reports" "from the steward or stewards of that church."—Page 57. And here, it seems to me, a steward's report assumes its greatest importance, because it reaches the ear of the entire church. All the members can here be informed as to the exact financial state of their church.

Now a few words in regard to the form of this report. Shall the stewards report simply the amount raised, or shall they also report the names of the persons from whom they have collected this amount? It is clear to my mind that the obvious ends in view in these reports can be best subserved by reporting the names of the contributors of the various amounts, as well as the aggregate.

I have heard an objection urged against this plan: "Let not your left hand know what your right hand doeth." These are the words of Christ, and it is argued that, agreeably to this command, the stewards should pass quietly around among the members, collect the money for the church, appropriate it properly, and let nobody know anything about it.

I doubt this being a legitimate construction and application of our Savior's words. The whole verse reads: "But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth."—Matthew vi. 3. Our Lord was warning his disciples against the vain ostentation of the hypocritical Pharisees in their bestowments of charity. See whole passage, verses 1-4.

Now, in the first place, giving to the church is not a charity. The various claimants on the money raised by the church are not paupers. There, for instance, is the sexton. You pay him a stipulated sum for attending to the house of God. There also is the pastor, the presiding elder and the Bishop. You pay them for services rendered. Nor are superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers, exceptions to this rule. Should the poor be mentioned as an exception, then I urge, in the second place, that there is no semblance of vain ostentation about these reports in a Church or Quarterly Conference. The object is not "that we may have glory of men," but that we may know what we have done, and be stimulated to do more.

W. B. LEWIS.

The Sonship.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read, with much interest, the communication of your sprightly correspondent, Servetus, on Christ's Sonship. Servetus is evidently unconscious that his views have ever been held by any one besides himself, and he is of the opinion that those "who wear the livories and are fettered by the chains of fossil theology" will be startled by the suggestion of a possible disunion of the divine and human nature in the person of Christ. But this thought is not a new thing in the theological world.

The fact that Christ was tempted is in proof of the possibility of such disunion. This thought of his is, no doubt, a true thought, though it is far from being a new thought.

The views of Servetus on the sonship of Christ are, I think, in perfect accord with those entertained by Dr. H. Clark. That celebrated commentator supported his theory by a variety of plausible arguments, which were answered by the Rev. R. Watson, and by him the old orthodox view of the sonship was fully vindicated and triumphantly established.

Servetus thinks it absurd to say that the Son of God is co-eternal with God; he cannot believe that. But as to the attributes of God his faith is easy-going—too much so. He says the attributes of God are "self-evident." Then all men everywhere are agreed as to the attributes of God, for no amount of self-stultification can induce any one to deny a self-evident truth. But if all are agreed as to the attributes of God, they are also as to the existence of God, seeing his attributes cannot be separated from himself. But all are not agreed as to his existence; hence his attributes are not self-evident.

To my mind it is about as easy to conceive of the existence of the three-one God as to conceive of the existence of the Absolute at all, and about as easy to conceive of the Logos existing as the eternal Son of God as to conceive of his existing as the second person of the trinity. But Servetus says: "The proposition that the Son of God is co-eternal with the Father contradicts our reason and experience." It does not contradict my experience. I have no experience of the mode of the divine existence. There may be one God, or ten gods, or a whole universe of gods. These may be persons or not persons, pervading all space or not occupying space, so far as I know by experience.

I cannot consult experience touching this matter. I can know nothing of the mode of the divine existence by experience. I would be surprised to find a human being as old as his father, but not to find the Son of God as old as his Father. Servetus says: "The word son in our language, everywhere and in all cases, has a circumscribed and specific meaning, and necessarily presupposes an antecedent progenitor, and is expressive of the offspring of preceding parents." Without stopping to inquire how preceding parents differ from other kinds of parents, we remark that Servetus, in giving the meaning of the word son, begs the question at issue between him and those who believe in the eternal sonship of the Logos. He assumes as true what they emphatically and persistently deny. If the word son always and everywhere signifies the offspring of preceding parents—if it always and everywhere implies an antecedent progenitor—then, as eternity cannot antedate eternity, God cannot have an eternal son. But if the word son, when predicated of the Logos, indicates a relationship to God the Father, more nearly resembling the relationship of earthly children to their parents than any other with which we are acquainted, yet without implying any priority of existence on the part of the Father, then all that Servetus has said will appear to be what it really is—a mere play upon words.

In fact we know nothing of the mode of the divine existence save what is revealed. From the Bible we learn that there are three divine persons, yet but one God. These persons are the Father, Son and Holy Ghost—"and these three are one."

I intended to notice one or two other points in the article under consideration, but, having made this communication too long already, I will close.

AMICUS.

Items from North Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: The sons of the old Alabama Conference, with portions of her territory, have been partitioned off to four Annual Conferences. While the body of the former membership, united under the old name, still occupy the original territory, three other bands now belong respectively to the Mississippi, North Mississippi and North Alabama Conferences. In common with other brethren, now associated with these scattered bands, I still cherish a filial love for the Alabama Conference as for my mother Conference, and will ever hold in grateful memory the brotherhood and fellowship of toil once shared upon her pleasant fields. Some migratory birds, when captured and domesticated, still, with the approach of their periodic times of migration, manifest a desire to return to their former haunts. So we, who have wandered abroad into new fields of labor, with the return of the season for holding the Annual Conference, are wont to turn our thoughts toward the scenes of our earlier ministry.

"Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
My heart, untraveled, still fondly turns to thee."

These lines, if not correct in quotation, nevertheless express our true sentiments as we think of the old mother Conference. We hope, as her absent sons, ever to carry with us that spirit of enlarged benevolence, missionary enterprise and zeal which brought the old Alabama Conference up to the front of Southern Methodism.

An item or so from North Mississippi may be of interest to our former brethren, and to the general reader as well.

Verona is a pleasant village on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, two hundred and seventy-four miles north of Mobile. The Methodist Church here has a good working membership, and is served, now for the third year, by the writer as pastor. Bro. J. B. Stone, presiding elder of Verona district, makes his home in Verona and cultivates a small farm near by. He manages his farm as he does his district—well. He is a first-rate presiding elder and a good farmer. Bro. James A. Peebles also lives in Verona, and serves the Tupelo circuit. Sister Stone, a daughter of Rev. T. J. Koger, of precious memory; Sister Peebles, a daughter of Rev. G. Garret, one of the fathers of the Alabama Conference, and the better half of your correspondent, were all educated at Centenary Female College, Summerfield, Alabama. It is not, then, a far-fetched nor, as we hope, a vain wish that we sometimes cherish, to wit: that of making Verona the Summerfield of the North Mississippi Conference. We were favored, last summer, with the presence of our venerable and beloved Bro. Garret, who resides at Summerfield, and had come to Verona on a visit to his daughter. At threescore and ten his brow is still radiant with hope, his heart is yet warm, and his eye kindles with the fire that in youth made him a pioneer of Methodism. While here he preached two sermons, one of which, on the burning bush, I had the pleasure of hearing. It was systematic, suggestive and edifying.

Verona Female College, under the patronage of the North Mississippi Conference, is located at this place. This institution, now in the third year since its organization, is in successful operation. It has prospered beyond the expectation of its friends. Since the opening of the fall session we have received over one hundred matriculates, and other pupils are expected to enter soon. It is easy of access by the Mobile and Ohio railroad. Our friends living in the southern portions of Mississippi and Alabama, who have daughters to educate, are invited to consider the claims of Verona Female College.

The lands adjacent to Verona, by their fertility, invite the enterprise of the farmer. They are adapted to the cultivation of both cotton and corn, and sell at from $8 to $25 per acre. In politics our county is conservative, electing its own officers, and sending white men to the Legislature. As a consequence, we are not annoyed by carpet-bag interference, and the blacks are quiet and disposed to labor.

The late session of our Conference, at Corinth, was an occasion of lively interest. The personnel of this Conference suggests to the beholder a scarcity of gray hairs, and the idea of vigor. There are few venerable men. Most of the members are still in the prime and vigor of life. They have an inviting field to cultivate, and their reports generally indicate progress. Among the distinguished visiting brethren present was Dr. A. S. Andrews, whose stirring energy and talents are already telling favorably upon the prosperity of the Southern University. There were also present Rev. C. G. Andrews, of Centenary College, Louisiana; Dr. Green, the Ajax of the Central University enterprise; Dr. Wiley, of Emory and Henry, and Rev. W. C. Johnson, editor of the Western Methodist. At our next session, to meet in Grenada, we will be happy to greet the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in at least one of its representatives.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIE EDWARD, second child and oldest son of Mr. J. J. and Mrs. Ruth S. Denson, was born on the twenty-eighth of July, 1868, and died September 7, 1872, of severe scalds and bruises received by the explosion of his father's steam-mill. Willie had followed his father to the mill, and was playing on some sacks of meal, that they had just finished grinding, when the explosion occurred, and was picked up about thirty feet from where he was before the disaster. He lived three days, but did not seem to be conscious of his sufferings. This dreadful catastrophe has sent a thrill of sorrow to the hearts of the parents and relatives of this sprightly and promising little boy. He sleeps sweetly in the arms of Jesus. He cannot come to them, but they can go to him.

N. B. YOUNG.

MRS. MARGARET E., wife of Wiley Brown, and daughter of Jesse and Mary E. Edwards, was born in Pike county, Mississippi, on the sixteenth of August, 1831, and, after a brief illness, died of pneumonia, January 21, 1873.

She was happily married October 24, 1854, and became the mother of four children. She united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the fall of 1857, but was not satisfied of her conversion until 1863. After this her faith was at times timid, but for several years before her death she was entirely satisfied, and often spoke to her husband of her religious peace. Her husband states to me that his was a devoted wife and an affectionate mother. She had desired to live to train her children. But a short time before death had done its work she called her four children, kissed each, asked them not to weep for her, and stated that she had now given up all earthly ties and was ready to go.

N. B. YOUNG.

EAST BATON ROUGE, LA., Jan. 31, 1873.

MRS. FRANCES K. LEE, relict of Rev. Joseph E. Lee, deceased, was born in Oglethorpe county, Georgia, August 22, 1794, and died of cancer in the breast, near Autaugaville, Alabama, January 16, 1873. Sister Lee's maiden name was Taylor. She was married before leaving Georgia. Her husband first removed to Alabama, and lived several years in Autauga county, of that State. He then moved to Louisiana, where he died some twelve or fifteen years ago. After his death his widow returned to Alabama, where most of her relatives reside. Her husband was a minister of the Methodist Protestant Church, and she was a member of the same until after his death. A few years ago, when most of the members of that church, in this part of the State, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, she joined with them, and was a member of our church up to the time of her death. She professed religion and joined the church when about eighteen years old—about sixty years ago—and, so far as I have been able to learn, has led a consistent Christian life ever since. She was the third child of a large family, most of whom, if not all, have been or are exemplary Christians. She was the mother of eleven children, all but four of whom preceded her to the spirit-land. On Sunday before her death I visited her, and conversed and prayed with her. She expressed herself as having no fears in reference to the future. This, of course, was to be expected of one who had spent more than half a century in the Master's service. Of her it may be truly said that she "came to her grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." She was ripe for the garner in the skies.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

MRS. MARY M. STOUDENMIRE, relict of Lewis Stoudenmire, lately deceased, daughter of the late Emanuel Golson, and sister of the late Rev. L. P. Golson, who was a member of the Alabama Conference, was born September 1, 1811, and died of bronchitis, near Autaugaville, Autauga county, Alabama, January 27, 1873.

Sister Stoudenmire joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South at the early age of twelve, but was converted at a much earlier age. She told me years ago that she could not remember the time she was not religious. She was literally brought "up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and began to serve God as soon as she knew how to serve him. Here is, doubtless, an instance of one who glided into a conscious religious experience just as she passed from the state of infant justification into the state of accountability. If there ever has been one that never was conscious of the commission of a willful sin at any time through life, I suppose we have an instance in Sister Stoudenmire. It is the universal sentiment of the community that in her death we have lost one of the best and most useful members the church here has ever had. She was foremost in everything good. Her seat in the house of God was never vacant, unless she was providentially hindered. During revival meetings she was sure to be found among the penitents at the altar, giving them instruction and comfort, and was always ready, when called upon, to lead in prayer. She was found in the Sunday school too, and for years had been the teacher of a class. She was also liberal with her means, aiding every good cause, and paying her quarterage generally in advance. Her place will be hard to fill. The loss to the church and community is very great, but we have not a doubt that our loss is her infinite gain. She has doubtless rejoined her husband, her only child—a son that died at the age of four—and other friends that had preceded her to heaven, and is uniting with them in singing "the song of Moses and the Lamb."

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

DIED, at his residence in Walnut Grove, Mississippi, on the nineteenth of December, 1872, J. M. MCNAIR, in his sixty-third year.

The subject of this memoir was born in the State of Georgia, and emigrated to the State of Mississippi about the year 1854, and since that time has been well known in this region of country. He was at the time of his death, and has been for a number of years, a class-leader in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Bro. McNair was a man full of religion and the power of the Holy Ghost, though beset with many trials and temptations, which often caused him sorrow; yet through the power of God he would overcome these difficulties, and then was enabled to "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." He was a faithful class-leader, and though from feeble health was not able to attend church for nearly a year before his death, he refused to have another appointed in his place, as he said he wished to die in the harness. His disease was of a lingering nature, and he was allowed ample time to contemplate the final attack of the grim monster, death, and he did so with calmness and composure. The writer of this visited and prayed with him often during the last months of his affliction, and always found him calm and composed. He spoke of his departure with calmness, and with tears of joy trickling down his furrowed cheeks he would speak of the love of Jesus and of his home in heaven; and when told that his presence was much missed at the church he remarked that his great desire had been to live so that he would be missed when he was gone. The church here has lost one of its zealous supporters, the community a kind neighbor, his companion an affectionate husband, and his children a loving father. Bro. McNair has gone to rest. May we all be prepared to meet him in the glory-world. His house was a home for Methodist preachers, and many an itinerant brother will feel sad when he reads this obituary.

He was a zealous member of the Masonic fraternity, and held office in the lodge for years before his death. Peace to his ashes, and may the fraternal brotherhood strike hands with him in the grand lodge above.

Farewell, aged father in Israel. No more will we hear thy voice shout the praises of God on earth. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

IRVIN MILLER.

WALNUT GROVE, MISS., Jan. 8, 1873.

IF THE BIBLE did not tell us Jesus was poor, I should have known it from his own words. Who would have talked about putting pieces upon old garments, or about sweeping the house diligently, if he had not seen his mother do it? So while I was busy over these things, and a hundred household works like them, I knew that he knew exactly all about them, and that made them sweet to me.—Bede's Charity.

THE best constructed audience-room should be nearly as broad as it is long, with a ceiling about forty feet high; the pews should be in semi-circles, and the aisles converge to the pulpit.—Cuyler.

Pastors and Children.

A great deal is said about the duties of the pastor to the children. What are the children taught about their duties to their pastor?

It is often hard for the pastor to remember the names of all the little folks in the congregation. So many bright-eyed Marys and Susies and Nellies, and so many Johns and Harrys and Dicks, are apt to get as confused in his mind as the colors in a kaleidoscope, and it is not wonderful if he fails to recognize them away from their homes. But every boy and girl knows the pastor by sight at least, and ought always to speak to him pleasantly and respectfully. A bright "good morning" from a child's lips is as welcome as a sunbeam. It is very sweet to one who is trying to feed the lambs to find that they love him, and love to follow where he leads.

Another duty of the children to the pastor is to listen to him. They sometimes excuse themselves from this duty by saying: "Oh! Dr. —— is not preaching to us. The sermon is for father and mother. All we have to do is to sit still." And so many a child sits still, and preserves a quiet appearance, while under the surface the thoughts are flying here and there, backward and forward, over last week and on to next, and not a word of the sermon do they hear. If they would but attend they would find a great deal that they could understand. The great mistake in speaking to the young is that people try so hard to speak down to the intellectual level of their audience, rather than to lift the audience up to their level. An average child of ten or twelve, or even of younger age, can understand the larger part of an average sermon; not perhaps the whole of it in its breadth of scope, but enough to remember and be helped by. Intelligent children at home listen with interest to the talks of their elders on all sorts of subjects—political, scientific and religious. It is a part of their education, and a part that never fails to leave its impress.

Another duty of the children to their pastor is to pray for him. Every day when they pray—not merely say their prayers—they should think of their minister, and ask God to bless him. There is not the Christian worker alive who will not work better if he has the children's prayers.

Is love a duty? Surely, since love is the fulfilling of the law! Then, last of all, let the children love their pastor.—Sunday School Times.

Sleep of the Pious Dead.

Homer fittingly calls sleep "the brother of death," because of the striking resemblance between them; and often do we find the same phase in the writings of other celebrated heathens. But in the Scriptures it is employed to signify vastly more than ever entered into pagan mind. Hence no term has been in such frequent service among the "holy men" who "wrote and spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." In the lips of Jesus, however, this word is a new and living one, carrying with it a mightier and richer import than it ever possessed before. It has received the most ample and successful confirmation in the last hour of tens of thousands of his devout followers. They laid themselves down to die, not as those who dread the night because of the remembrance of hours when, like Job, they were "scared with dreams" and "terrified through visions," but like tired laborers, to whom night is indeed a season of peaceful refreshment. And how imperceptibly they sank into their last slumber! Their transition was so gentle and gradual that it was impossible for those who stood round their dying pillow to say exactly when it took place. There was no struggle, no convulsion. The angel of death spread his wide, white wings meekly over them, and then, with a smile upon their pallid countenance, serene and lovely as heaven itself, they closed their eyes on all terrestrial objects, and fell "asleep in Jesus."

"Night dews fall not more gently to the ground,
Nor weary, worn-out winds expire so soft."

"So he giveth his beloved sleep." And that sleep is as profound throughout as it was tranquil at the beginning. The happy fireside and the busy exchange, the halls of science and the houses of legislation, the oft-frequented walk and the holy temple are nothing to them now. Suns rise and set, stars travel and glisten, but they see them not; tempests howl, and thunders roll and crash, but they hear them not. Nothing can disturb those slumbers "till the day dawns and the shadows flee away;" then will the voice of the archangel sweep over "God's acre," and awake all. O wondrous awaking! what eternal consequences hang on thee!—Edwin Davies.

THE ANNUAL CAT SHOW has just been opened at the London Crystal Palace. It is said to be the most complete collection of domestic and foreign cats that has ever been exhibited. The specimens include importations from Siam, Java, Smyrna, Algeria, Archangel, etc. There is also a specialty in the shape of a tiger-cat from Santos, in South America, which, while in repose, does not look very fierce. Among the prizes gained was one for an Angora cat, and two others for the best tabby and white cats. Some curiosities are a singular cat from the Azores; a characteristic example from Java, which has one eye blue and the other green; and there is one remarkable animal which does not lap milk, but puts it into her mouth with her paw. The tailless cat, which is a favorite household divinity in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, does not appear in the exhibition. Perhaps it is too comical a creature for the English people, who, especially the old ladies, have a wonderful fondness for cats.

LAST YEAR the State of Maine brought out twenty families from Sweden, gave each one hundred acres of land, rations for twelve months, farming tools and implements. The small colony is prosperous and self-supporting, the emigrants declining further State aid.

MONOTROPA.

BY MARY E. ATKINSON.

The woods are wet with dew,
It hangs upon the leaves in glittering tears;
And see, the damp dead oak-leaves pushing through,
A group of flowers appears.

Flowers cold and deathly pale,
No flush upon their alabaster cheek;
They feel no sun nor bend to any gale,
No bees their white bells seek.

They do not smile and glow,
Or wave green leaves upon the summer air;
Their bended heads are still and white as snow,
And exquisitely fair.

They seem not real, live flowers,
But phantoms of last summer's lily-bells—
Pale ghosts, revisiting the forest-bowers,
Haunting the lonely dells.

Where are the leaves that played
High over them in fresh and breezy air,
The green delight of that last summer's shade?
Behold them lying there.

Brown, dark, decaying dust;
And these wan spirit-blossoms chilly grow
Where those dead leaves were scattered by the blast
And trampled by the snow.

Do you wild roses thrill
And shudder, think you, when they see their white
And ghostly faces, and with inward chill
Turn to the sun's warm light?

Rather, they bend and say,
With love and pity: "Ah! dear souls of flowers,
Ye bloomed so fair your fleeting summer day,
Come ye and look on ours!

"And if ye come to call
Us where our heaven, the rainbow, spans the skies,
Joyous we seek, while rosy petals fall,
The Flower's Paradise!"

The Wrong Cross.

BY MRS. JANE DUNBAR THAPLIN.

The expression "take up your cross" means, in the cant of some communities, to talk in meeting; and the persons whose persistent volubility at every meeting is an annoyance often talk of "taking up their cross," when by their course they only lay a cross on other people.

There was once a good lady, far up among the hills of New England, who felt herself competent to reprove, rebuke, admonish and comfort; and so faithfully did she fulfill her imaginary mission that she and the minister had it all about their own way at the conference meetings. By the time the opening services were over, and she had talked, and a few hymns had been sung, it was time to go home. The brethren had to possess their souls in patience.

Our good sister was a widow, with broad lands and large flocks and herds, and not a little money in the bank. In the lifetime of her husband, who was not a professor of religion, she had really flattered herself that she desired to accomplish great things in the church and in the world, but was crippled in her work by the honest old farmer's parsimony. But so deceitful is human nature that, when the estates became her own and there was none to check or to advise her, she at once curtailed all her charities, giving as an excuse that she was "a widow now, with no husband to work or to rummage for her."

But although Sister Crane ceased giving, she didn't cease talking; indeed, her volubility increased by the new field opened before her in her lonely lot. She took up "her cross" oftener and carried it longer than ever before. She invariably began her remarks by repeating the solemn statement concerning those who do not take up their cross and follow Christ, adding: "I feel that if I would be his disciple I must take up this cross."

Sister Crane could do a great deal of work, for she was a wonderful manager; but she was not quite equal to managing two farms, a grist-mill and a saw-mill! So hard as it seemed to pay out ready money, she was obliged to hire a farmer; and very soon a good, humble man from another town was installed, with his efficient wife and four bright boys, in the old cottage, a few rods from the large farm-house.

This farmer was a sensible, Christian man, but his usefulness in prayer meetings and Sunday schools was not a little hindered by a painful infirmity. He had an impediment in his speech, and when he tried to talk in presence of strangers he became so nervous as to stutter, till his exhortations sounded as if delivered in an unknown tongue.

Being a stranger in the place, he was wholly ignorant of his new employer's love for money and the tightness with which she drew her purse-strings. He knew her wealth, and looked on her as the chief pillar of this rather feeble church. Now to this good man, speaking in meeting, or, as he called it, "giving in his testimony," was indeed a heavy cross. It excited his nerves and gave him a painful consciousness of making himself and his subject ludicrous by his efforts to get out his words.

Night after night he listened to Mrs. Crane as she talked of this heavy cross she was lifting and bearing after the Master, and he concluded at length that she was a timid, gracious soul, urging herself to a sacrifice which God did not require of her. And ere long he got courage to set her right on the subject. One night, after her usual statement of the conflict between her soul and the adversary, in which he sought with diabolical temptations to ensnare her, but in which she always outwitted him, the humble man rose, and, as well as he could, sought to comfort her.

"I th-think," he said, "the d-dear sister is wri-writing bitter things ag-against herself, and lay-laying unjust bur-burdens on her s-soul. She's g-got hold of the wr-wrong cross. She's ta-taken up mine in p-place of her own. I must crucify my-m-my p-pride by showing this th-thorn in my fl-flesh. She must do it by gl-giving and giving, and gl-giving, till the cross makes her sh-shoulders ache. That's the cross for her; but O, bearing my tes-testimony before a g-gainsaying world, that's the cross that I'm tr-trying to c-carry up the hill, and that al-almost c-crushes me with its w-weight. T-take heart, sister, sh-shoulder up y-your own b-burden; it's better fi-fitted to your sh-shoulder than mine is, and it'll be easier borne and s-sooner b-blest."

The innocent man only meant to say that her duty was to give of her wealth to the Lord; but that he, being poor, and having nothing else to give, must render the offering of his lips, however painful the effort might be to his pride. But the way he put it fell in so exactly with the ideas of the people that some were seen to smile, and others dropped their heads that they might not be seen to smile.

Sister Crane, good woman that she was, took the suggestion so innocently given. She went home, asking herself if, after all, it was a real cross for her to make herself a leader in the social meetings; and if she might not, perhaps, have been mistaken in the department of labor to which she had so nearly confined her efforts. She looked over her land and herds and flocks, and reckoned up their value; and then she looked around in vain for the being who needed them when she should be called to give account of her stewardship.

The truth her poor hired farmer so unwittingly stammered out awoke her from her delusion, and showed her that casting in of her abundance to the treasury of the Lord was her real cross—the one which Christ required her to take up and bear after him—and that the exercise which she in false humility had called her "cross" had really been fostering her pride. Thenceforth she talked less and gave more; refrained from exhorting others; examined her own heart, and humbled herself before him from whom she had withheld the treasures of which he had made her the steward. She laid down the wrong cross and took up the right one, and carried it, until day by day it grew lighter, and soon it became a blessing to herself and others.—Watchman and Reflector.

Nobleness of Religious Decision.

If there be a loftiness and nobleness in decision, it is most lofty, most noble in religion. You need not go for instances of this, and for the admiration which they are calculated to afford, to such examples as Foster brings before you in his inimitable essay, to the examples selected from history, to Marius, sitting amidst the ruins of Carthage, to Pizarro, to Richard the Third, to Cromwell; nor even to those drawn from the records of Scripture, to Daniel, and to Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego; nor to those supplied by Christian martyrology, to John Huss and Jerome of Prague; nor to those borrowed from the annals of philanthropy, to Howard, to Wilberforce and to Mrs. Fry—these are all grand, impressive, beautiful; but they are not the only ones that may be cited; nor, with whatever lurid or milder radiance they may be surrounded and emblazoned, are they those which are the most appropriate for you to contemplate, or which perhaps will have with you the greatest weight. Look at that manly, pious young man, who has left the shelter and protecting wing of his father's house and home, and is now placed in a modern establishment, and surrounded by fifty or a hundred fellow-shopmen, among whom he finds not one to countenance him in the maintenance of his religious professions, and the greater part of whom select him on account of his religion as the object of their pity, their scorn, their hatred or their contempt. Among them are infidels who ply him with flippant and specious cavils against the Bible; pleasure-takers who use every effort to engage him in their Sunday parties and their polluting amusements; men of light morality who assail his integrity; a few lovers of science and general knowledge who endeavor to allure him from religion to philosophy. How fearful is his situation—and how perilous! Usually it would be better to leave it, for how few can hold fast their integrity in such a situation. But there he—this decided, this inflexible, this noble-minded youth—stands firm, unyielding, decided. He is neither ashamed nor afraid of his principles—he neither denies nor conceals them. Before that laughing crowd he bends his knees and prays—in presence of that jeering set he opens his Bible and reads—from that pleasure-taking company he breaks off, amidst their scoffs, to go to the house of God. He bears the pelting of their pitiless storm of ridicule or rage, unruffled in temper, unmoved in principle, and only casts upon his persecutors a look of gentle pity, or utters a mild word of expostulation, or silently presents the prayer: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He keeps, by his firmness, the whole pack at bay. Some are half-subdued by his wonderful firmness. A secret admiration is bestowed upon him by others, while even those who hate him most often are astonished most at his inflexible resolution, and it may be that one and another, at length, take hold of the skirt of his garment and say to him: "We must go with you, for we see God is with you." Talk of decision of character—there it is in all its force, beauty and utility. I know of no case, in God's world, in which it is exemplified with more power than in that.—J. A. James.

Private Reproof of Children.

Probably most parents, even kindly ones, would be a little startled at the assertion that a child ought never to be reproved in the presence of others. This is so constant an occurrence that nobody thinks of noticing it; nobody thinks of considering whether it be right and best or not. But if is a great rudeness to a child. I am entirely sure that it ought never to be done. Mortification is a condition as unwholesome as it is uncomfortable. When the wound is inflicted by the hand of a parent it is all the more certain to rankle and do harm. Let a child see that his mother is so anxious that he should have the approbation and good will of her friends that she will not call their attention to his faults, and that while she never, under any circumstances, fails herself to tell him afterward alone, if he has behaved improperly, she will spare him the additional pain and mortification of a public reproof; then, while that child will lay those secret reproofs to heart, he will still be happy. I know a mother who had the insight to see this, and the patience to make it a rule; for it takes far more patience, far more time, than the common method. She said sometimes to her little boy, after callers had left the parlor: "Now, dear, I am going to be your little girl, and you are to be my papa, and we are to play that a gentleman has just come in to see you, and I will show you exactly how you have been behaving while this lady has been calling on me, and you can see if you do not feel very sorry to have our little girl behave so." Here is a dramatic representation at once, which that boy does not need to see repeated many times before he is forever cured of interrupting, of pulling his mother's gown, of drumming on the piano, etc., of the thousand and one things which able-bodied children can do to make social visiting where they are a martyrdom and a penance. When we consider seriously what ought to be the nature of a reproof from a parent to a child, and what is its end, the answer is simple enough. It should be nothing but the superior wisdom and strength; explaining to inexperience and feebleness wherein they have made a mistake, to the end that they may avoid such mistakes in future. If personal annoyance, impatience, antagonism, enter in, the relation is marred and the end endangered. Most sacred and inalienable of all rights is the right of helplessness to protection from the strong, of ignorance to counsel from the wise. If we give our protection and counsel grudgingly, or in a churlish, unkind manner, even to the stranger that is in our gates, we are no Christians, and deserve to be stripped of what little wisdom and strength we have hoarded. But there are no words to say what we are or what we deserve if we do thus to the little children whom we have dared to bring into the peril of this life, and whose whole future may be blighted by the mistakes of our careless hands.

The Modesty of True Science.

Those who set up their own conceptions of the orderly sequence which they discern in the phenomena of nature as fixed and determinate laws, by which those phenomena not only are, within all human experience, but always have been, and always must be, invariably governed, are really guilty of the intellectual arrogance they condemn in the systems of the ancients, and place themselves in diametrical antagonism to those real philosophers by whose comprehensive grasp and penetrating insight that order has been so far disclosed. For what love of the truth as it is in nature was ever more conspicuous than that which Kepler displayed in his abandonment of each of the ingenious conceptions of the planetary system which his fertile imagination had successively devised so soon as it proved to be inconsistent with the facts disclosed by observation? In that almost admiring description of the way in which his enemy Mars, "whom he had left at home a despised captive," had "burst all the chains of the equations, and broke forth from the prisons of the tables," who does not recognize the justice of Schiller's definition of the real philosopher as one who always loves truth better than his system? And when at last he had gained the full assurance of a success so complete that, as he says, he thought he must be dreaming, or that he had been reasoning in a circle, who does not feel the almost sublimity of the self-abnegation with which, after attaining what was in his own estimation such a glorious reward of his life of toil, disappointment and self-sacrifice, he abstains from claiming the applause of his cotemporaries, but leaves his fame to after ages in these noble words: "The book is written; to be read either now or by posterity, I care not which. It may well wait a century for a reader, as God has waited six thousand years for an observer."

And when a yet greater than Kepler was bringing to its final issue that grandest of all scientific conceptions—long pondered over by his almost superhuman intellect—which linked together the heavens and the earth, the planets and the sun, the primaries and their satellites, and included even the vagrant comets in the nexus of a universal attraction, establishing for all time the truth for whose utterance Galileo had been condemned, and giving to Kepler's laws a significance of which their author had never dreamed—what was the meaning of that agitation which prevented the philosopher from completing his computation, and compelled him to hand it over to his friend? That it was not the thought of his own greatness, but the glimpse of the grand universal order thus revealed to his mental vision which shook the serene and massive soul of Newton to its foundations, we have the proof in that beautiful comparison in which he likened himself to a child picking up shells on the shore of the vast ocean of truth—a comparison which will be evidence to all time, at once of his true philosophy and his profound humility.—Dr. Carpenter's Address before the British Association.

THE peculiarities of great men are like clothes which hang not well on any but the man who was measured for them, not to say that the misfortune of imitators often lies in this: that, in copying the eccentricities, they forget that their idol is not great by these, but in spite of them.

"A WOMAN'S greatest enemy is the looking-glass," said a husband to his wife, who was admiring herself in a mirror, while he was sipping his wine. "That may be," she retorted; "but it does not cause her and her children half so much woe as her husband's wine-glass does."

EMIL RITTERHAUS, the most eminent of the younger poets of Germany, has made himself ridiculous by a poem on Lake Erie, in which he talks about the palm-trees and alligators of that region.

Let Your Light Shine.

A little earthen lamp, seventeen hundred years old, was recently found in the East, which bore this inscription: "The light of Christ shines for all."

What a beautiful revelation of devotion to Christ, and a knowledge of the true light, comes down to us with this little piece of clay.

The pious lamp-maker was not satisfied with the formal profession of his faith in the Messiah; he wanted to impress the precious lesson he had learned on the clay with which he wrought.

And what an encouragement to humble workers!

He could not chisel the lesson in marble or engrave it in silver or gold, but he could and did write it on the clay; and although it was the weakest and meanest of all substances, it has stood the test of ages.

Nations have fallen, empires have passed away, and cities with their marble temples and gold and silver adornings have crumbled to the dust, but from out their ruins the little lamp comes up unbroken, bearing the impress of the humble lamp-maker's hand, and the precious lesson of his faith.

And does not this little lamp speak to each one of us, saying: "Let your light shine?"

If the light of Christ shines for all, and we have received the light, will it not shine out in our daily lives with a holy radiance?

Sister, is your lamp trimmed and brightly burning, and have you oil in your vessel, or has your light gone out? If the voice were heard to-day, crying, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him!" are you ready?

Examine your lamp; does it bear the inscription, "The light of Christ shines for all," or do those who look to you for light read, "Pride, ambition and love of the world?"

Alas! we fear that there are multitudes in the church who bear the name of Christ, and are hoping at the last to reign in his eternal kingdom, who are living Christless lives, and are unwilling that Christ should reign over them in his earthly kingdom.

The chief attraction and glory of heaven is the presence and light of Christ. But if we cannot bear his presence, and reflect his light on the earth, how much less shall we be able to look upon him face to face, and reflect the blazing light of heaven.

Let us not deceive our own souls. "God is not mocked." The light is shining all around us now; and if our souls are so dead, or so buried in worldliness, that they cannot reflect this glorious light, the light in us having become darkness, we may not hope to see the heavenly light.

Let your light shine now, here in this dark, sin-deluded world, that some heavenly rays may fall on the fallen, despairing ones who are ready to perish.—Christian Woman.

A Philosopher's Opinion of the Bible

A learned Swiss writer (Jean de Muller) was deeply engaged in historical studies at Cassel, in the year 1782. Indefatigable in research, he wrote to his friend, Charles Bonnet, that he had studied all the ancient authors, without one exception, in the order of time in which they lived, and had not omitted to take note of a single remarkable fact. Among other works it occurred to him to glance at the New Testament, and we give in his own words the impression it produced upon him:

"How shall I express what I have found here? I had not read it for many years, and when I began it I was prejudiced against it. The light which blinded St. Paul in his journey to Damascus was not more prodigious, or more surprising to him than what I suddenly discovered was to me the accomplishment of every hope, the perfection of all philosophy, this explanation of all revolutions, the key of all the apparent contradictions of the material and moral world of life and immortality. I see the most astonishing things effected by the smallest means. I see the connection of all the revolutions in Europe and Asia with that suffering people to whom were committed the promises; as one likes to intrust a manuscript to those who, not knowing how to write, cannot falsify it. I see religion appearing at the moment most favorable to its establishment, and in the way less likely to promote its reception; the world appearing to be arranged solely with reference to the religion of the Savior. I can understand nothing if, such a religion be not from God. I have not read any book about it, but in studying all that happened before this epoch I have always found something wanting, and since I have known our Lord all is clear to my sight; with him there is no problem that I cannot solve. Forgive me for thus praising the sun, as a blind man, who had suddenly received the gift of sight."—Ernest Naville.

COFFEE IN FLOWER AND FRUIT.—It is not generally known that the flower of the coffee-plant is as fragrant in its way as the roasted berry. In Arabia, where the plant grows to the height of forty feet, the period of blossoming creates a kind of paradise. The flowers are white, shaped like the jasmine, and cover the bush, bursting out between every leaf and stem. The perfume fills the air, and the honey in the blossom attracts swarms of butterflies and flocks of birds. There are often three series of blossoms in a season, so that one may see bud and blossom and fruit.

Coffee has been in use in Europe only two centuries, but is now consumed by hundreds of millions of pounds. It is in equal favor in this country, but one can hardly be sure that he drinks pure coffee. A writer who knows says: "The coffee dealer adulterates his coffee with chicory to increase his profits; the chicory-maker adulterates his chicory with Venetian red to please the eye of the coffee dealer; and, lastly, the Venetian red manufacturer grinds up his color with brick-dust, that by his greater cheapness, and the variety of shades he offers, he may secure the patronage of the trade in chicory."—Youth's Companion.

Religious Intelligence.

REV. DR. MCCOSH thinks that if all the Presbyterian churches throughout the world were summed up they would show 20,000 churches and a population of 34,000,000.

ROMAN CATHOLICS in this country have church accommodations for 1,000,515, and evangelical Protestants for 16,642,183, the difference being eight to one. Not all going to popery.

THE new Methodist church at Tidioute, Pennsylvania, and Judge Harlan's residence adjoining, were entirely destroyed by fire a few days ago; loss on the church, $45,000; no insurance.

THE basilicas and churches in the city and provinces of Rome, Italy, yield a revenue of 3,436,576 francs. The aggregate of income from convents, monasteries, churches, etc., is 8,217,428 francs.

THERE are more than fifty Baptist churches in Indiana that are able to support pastors, and yet are destitute; and quite as many ministers who, though able and willing to preach, are yet unemployed.

THE one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the landing of Hans Egede, the first missionary (of modern times) to Greenland, was commemorated in that distant land in a love-feast on November 5, 1871.

SIX HUNDRED and fifty-three young men studying for the ministry were aided by the Presbyterian Board of Education last year, about twenty less than in the year previous. They require about $30,000 each quarter.

IN TWENTY-FIVE YEARS the Presbyterians of Nova Scotia have grown from having forty-eight ministers to having over one hundred and sixty, while the foreign missionaries have run from one to eight, and among the most successful of recent times.

THE progress of Christianity in Madagascar is attracting attention. During the last year the increase to the Christian community was 53,000 persons, including 18,000 church-members. In three years the total addition has been about 258,000 converts.

IN NEW HAMPSHIRE there are 192 Congregational churches, with a membership of 19,271, of whom 1,029 were received last year. There are 177 ministers, of whom 76 are pastors, 66 acting pastors and 35 without charge. The Sabbath schools have 22,838 members.

THE Lucknow Witness, speaking of a missionary who designs to work without salary or allowance for traveling expenses, says: "It is more than possible that one of the most serious mistakes we have made in India has been that of assuming that work cannot be done without money to support it."

THE late James B. Ritchie, M. D., of New Orleans, who died November 8, left a legacy which will amount to $30,000 or $40,000 for the benefit of the Theological Seminary at Charleston, South Carolina. Some months ago a legacy of nearly $6,000 was received by the same institution from the estate of Mr. John McKowen, of Louisiana.

PRACTICAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—The Baptist church at Orange, New Jersey, supported thirty-four students for the ministry last year, in various institutions, at an expense of $3,641. The subscriptions for the present year have reached $3,775, which has been appropriated to forty-one students in nine different institutions. This church is about to erect a new house of worship, at a cost of $75,000.

THERE are thirty branches of the Methodist denomination in the religious world, eleven of which are in the United States. The Western Advocate suggests that this is twenty-five branches too many, and thinks that there should be a union of these bodies—that "it is high time that Methodism begins to touch elbows the world over, in order that Wesley's plans may bear legitimate fruit."

THE week of prayer was inaugurated about fifteen years ago, at the suggestion of a company of Presbyterian missionaries in India, who sent forth a request through all Christendom that churches of every name would observe the first week of prayer for the conversion of the world. The week of prayer has been marked as a season of revival in Christian as well as heathen lands from the time of its observance.

A LADY of Bourg, France, lately bequeathed to her parochial church three thousand francs ($600) on condition that forty low masses should be said every year for her and her husband's souls' rest. The church council having, according to French law, either to accept or to refuse such a bequest, adopted the following resolution: "The council, considering that the price of masses has advanced, that it will continue to advance, that therefore the charges imposed by the will will not be in proportion with the advantages which would be conferred, refuses to accept the bequest."

A GENTLEMAN at Rome writes to the Rev. John R. Macdougall, of Florence: "In my printing office in Borgo Vecchio (at the entrance of St. Peter's square) we are now printing ten thousand copies of the New Testament, under the very eyes of Pius the Ninth, so to speak, for from the papal apartments they can see the printing office. Does not this appear to you a divine dispensation, which permits a printing office, established in the face of the Vatican and close to the Palace of the Inquisition, to publish that evangelical word which has been so persecuted by the Inquisition and the Vatican?"

IN THE Cologne Gazette the Abbe Michaud replies to some remarks of M. Labonlaye on the treatment of the Jesuits. He says: "The question is whether society is to be sacrificed to the conscience of the Jesuits, or the conscience of the Jesuits to society. The Jesuits are expelled from Germany not on account of their dress, but on account of the dagger underneath it. Not the clergymen are expelled, but the bad citizens; not consciences have been done violence to, but pernicious errors, taking the name of conscience. The question is not one of the material daggers of which the Jesuits have also made use; but of the much more dangerous daggers—the syllabus, the bulls, the decrees—wherewith souls are even more effectually killed than bodies are with material daggers."

THE Western Advocate reports a very remarkable revival of religion in progress in Norwalk, Ohio. It commenced some three weeks since, and has extended throughout the entire city, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists and Congregationalists working together like Christian brothers. Two hundred and fifty persons have already been converted, and among the converts are merchants, railroad men, lawyers, drinking men and gamblers. One of the last-named announced that whatever sums he had won of his fellow-citizens he would at once refund upon presentation of claims.

MR. GLADSTONE AND HIS RELIGION.—The Rev. Mr. Potter, of Sheffield, having in a lecture repeated the statement that Mr. Gladstone is a Roman Catholic, and the subject having been brought before the premier by a gentleman in Birmingham, the latter has received the following from Mr. Gladstone's secretary: "Mr. Gladstone directs me to inform you that the statement made in that lecture as to his religion has been publicly contradicted long ago; and that he regrets that it is not in his power to save the credulous from the annoyance caused by the impudent repetition of a falsehood."

FOUR costly synagogues have been erected in New York within the past five years, and as some of them have been moved from their former localities, many of the poorer worshipers are deprived of their accustomed services. The only missionary enterprises of the Jews here are their free schools, and these are not well sustained, notwithstanding the wealth of the denomination. The Jewish Messenger takes these facts to heart, and sees "nothing hopeful in heaping up masses of stone, brick and mortar, into what are called synagogues, and rushing into the wilderness of mortgages and loans, while the vital spirit, the religious idea is smothered or crowded into a secondary place."

THERE is no abatement on the part of the United Presbyterian Church in its opposition to secret societies. The Presbytery of Alleghany recently adopted three quite mandatory resolutions on the subject: The first requires pastors to preach against such societies; the second directs church sessions to call upon members of their churches who may belong to the societies, and endeavor to show them the sin of their course; and the third orders that, if this admonition has no effect, the erring brethren must be disciplined. There must be considerable laxity on this point among the lay members of the United Presbyterian church to call forth these strongly-worded expressions from a body of its ministers.

WE MENTIONED last week, says the New York Observer, that a legendary account of the deluge has been deciphered by Mr. George Smith, of the British Museum, from the Assyrian tablets recovered from the ruins of Nineveh. The description of the flood is curious, but coincides in the main with the Scriptures. A meeting was held on the third ultimo, at the rooms of the Society of Biblical Archæology in London, at which Mr. Smith read his translation of the inscriptions, made after long and exhaustive examination. General Sir Henry Rawlinson presided at the meeting, and among those present were Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Childers, the Dean of Westminster and Lady Augusta Stanley, Mr. Roebuck, Mr. Gifford, Q. C., Prof. Donaldson, Mr. S. Birch, Rev. J. M. Rodwell, Mr. Deutsch and many others.

THE statutes of the Swiss Society of Liberal Catholics have appeared. The aim of this society is, it says, to organize a sturdy resistance against the infallibility dogma, and further to bring about a reform in the Catholic Church. The means proposed are: 1. To withdraw children from under the influence of priests who favor the new doctrine. 2. To establish Old Catholic communities. 3. To assist and support worthy ecclesiastics in their opposition to the infallibility dogma. 4. To take the necessary steps for enabling Catholic students of theology to procure a thorough scientific education. 5. To get up public lectures and circulate enlightening works. 6. To keep up a regular correspondence with the Central Committee of the German Old Catholic Association in Munich. All important questions must be decided by assemblies of delegates, one of which must take place annually.

STATE OF THE CHURCH.—The report of the Committee on the State of the Church, read at the recent meeting of the General (German) Synod, gives the latest facts and figures of the denomination. The committee state that during the past three years "there has been growth in point of numbers, and a measure of progress in point of general efficiency, at least in some departments of our ecclesiastical activity. The number of ministers has grown from 526 to 586, a net increase of 60; the number of classes from 31 to 34; the congregations from 1,170 to 1,342, an increase of 133; the membership from 117,910 to 130,299, an increase of 12,389; the additions by certificate and confirmation from 28,992 to 32,809, an increase of 3,874; and the contributions from $228,817, the sum total for the three years ending with November, 1869, to $247,386; the sum total for the three years which have just ended, the increase being $18,568. Concerning our home missionary work, it is unnecessary to enter into particulars. There is, on the one hand, cause for rejoicing that so much has been done in aiding many feeble organizations East and West, and thus extending the faith of the Christian church; while, on the other, there is as much reason for humiliation that, owing to various restraining influences, this department of church work has been embarrassed, and is now in a languishing condition.

WHEN God's love is realized by the soul, his commands are cheerfully obeyed.

Form and Power.

We believe that the directions concerning public worship wherein the question occurs, "How shall we guard against formality in singing?" originated with Wesley himself. We doubt whether any of our pastors of the present day ever enforce that part of the remedy which is indicated in the words: "By often stopping short when the words are given out, and asking the people: Now do you know what you said last? Did you speak no more than you felt?" Probably nine-tenths of our people are hardly aware that what we have quoted is in the Discipline. But there it stands as a wholesome warning, if nothing more. Such a stopping short, and the propounding of those searching questions, would throw a quartette choir into confusion, and a singing congregation would be taken aback. Prayer meetings and class meetings might endure the literal cross questioning, but beyond this we suppose it must be given up as impracticable. The worshiper, however, during the interludes, or after the singing is over, might put the interrogatories to his own conscience, and so fend off this bane of formalism, and deepen his own spiritual apprehension of the words of praise.

For self-examination in other religious exercises those penetrating inquiries might be used to profit. In prayer, for instance, whether secret, family or public, "Do you know what you said last?" It may have come to be a perfunctory discharge of duty, a habit without much life, and a solemn routine made comparatively easy by long practice. If we were to stop short sometimes and ask ourselves the question, "Did you speak no more than you felt?" would the answer be always comforting and satisfactory? With unseemly familiarity and irreverence we have taken the name of God upon our lips, and have, with little thought of the greatness and awfulness of our petitions, asked for the highest blessings which Christ's death has purchased for us. If we know what we say, if we feel what we speak, there are no aspirations within the range of the promises too sacred or too sublime to be prayed for. But to launch out into the phraseology of communion with God, with the flippancy of a memoriter recitation, as a child turns off the task in his speller, is a most grievous offense.

In the relation of experience there is some danger of running into a rut of verbiage which covers our spiritual leanness, or has been so often repeated that we have ceased to feel the force which the words once had for ourselves. Right words, however often repeated, are always good if understood and felt when uttered. If they have the pith and juice of a living and growing organism in them they will not be like an old tree stripped of its verdure, but rather like an evergreen which never loses its freshness and beauty. A great deal of precious truth, and many dear memories, are canned up and preserved in the phrases and expressions which are familiarly current in the love-feast and the class meeting. We would not have them thrown aside, but we would have them understood and felt. Let the brother who always begins with, "If I know my own heart," hold on to this most suggestive exordium; and let the sister who is "as much as ever determined to serve the Master," not give up the time-honored form, and let that blessed peroration, "Brethren, pray for me," be continued to the end of time. But let us be jealous to guard against the most devout aspects of formality, let us be mindful of what we said last, and take care that we speak no more than we feel. And brothers, preachers and exhorters, do you ever stop amidst the tide of words and topics, or after the exposition and the application are done, to inquire about this matter of knowing and feeling? Did you speak no more than you felt when talking of trust in God and of holiness of heart? Was there tenderness, conviction of the appalling truth, and a sense of God's presence in delivering that message to the impenitent? A counterfeit earnestness and a sham pathos may be put on, and sinners sent to plead with sinners may without awe or trembling handle doctrines which angels would shrink from touching. The form of sound words is much, and to be held fast, but they should be living and burning words, not imprisoned and fossilized in the form, but warm and bright from the mint of thought and feeling.

The distinctive truths of experimental religion are formally accepted, and often on our lips. Our people make public profession of these fundamental doctrines. There is justification by faith at the root of all, there is charity in its supreme greatness as the grand essential, and the witness of the Spirit as something felt by believers. It is possible to talk much of these deep and glorious things of God, and even to boast of them, while they are to us in word rather than in power. The husk hangs upon the stalk rifled of its grain; the golden fruit appears intact and fair to look upon, but the pulp and sweetness are gone. There is danger of putting a pernicious gloss on our forms of profession, and of uttering them more as a matter of form than of deep conviction and real experience.

Thus the tendency to formalism lies in every direction. Not alone in our singing, but in our praying, preaching and confessions of faith. Having the form and seeking the power is the grade of conviction and repentance; having the form and the power is the mature experience. Having the form and denying the power is put by Paul as showing the relation which these two things may sometimes have, and this has always been one of the most common and lamentable aspects of the subject. An increase and enlargement of form, beyond a certain point, seems ever to lead to the loss and finally to the denial of the power. As Methodists, with our simple worship and brief ritual, we have about all the form we can safely carry. Less, rather than more, would be the safer direction to take. Worship is a utility, but where it is so amplified as to crush out the freedom and power of the spiritual life, it is to be avoided as the greatest of evils. Our chief concern should be to maintain the power in connection with the few and necessary forms which we have.

For When I am Weak Then I am Strong.

BY J. B. WALKER, D. D.

Christian doctrines, from their greatness and spirituality, are necessarily mysterious; but Christian experience has its mysteries and apparent paradoxes as well. The declaration of Paul, "When I am weak then I am strong," sounds and seems like a contradiction; but when it is examined, and looked at in the light of its surroundings, its shades of mystery are dispelled, and it becomes a simple truth, exemplified in many mental and physical illustrations and spiritual experiences, and constitutes another illustration of the oneness of truth.

Let us consider some illustrations of this statement; and first in its physical and mental aspects. An acknowledgment of our weakness and insufficiency to contend successfully with the force of natural elements has led our race to the invention and use of a thousand mechanical contrivances by which we overcome or wield natural forces, and vastly increase our power and our comfort. Wide lakes, seas and oceans have separated men from rich continents and beautiful islands. Over these floods they could neither wade nor swim. This weakness was felt and acknowledged, and hence they resorted to ship-building and the study of navigation. In this direction men have become so strong that deep floods and wide and perilous seas no longer impede their travels from continent to continent and from island to island.

Man is too weak to transport heavy burdens to distant lands. Acknowledging this weakness, he domesticates the horse, the ox, the camel, the elephant. He has constructed vehicles, cars, roadways and vessels. He has invented levers, screws and wedges, and various machines that have increased his strength a thousand-fold. It is said the steam engines of the British Islands alone can do more work than all the able-bodied men in the world. The barbarians who have remained in proud barbaric ignorance, without realizing or at all acknowledging their weakness, and who have sought no help in science and machinery, are weak and ignorant still, and never can be strong until they first acknowledge that they are weak.

The intellectual history of our race illustrates the truth of the apostolic statement. While an individual or a nation continue puffed up with the false assumption of mental strength and self-sufficiency they must continue really weak. This is the actual condition of all barbarians. This unwillingness to acknowledge intellectual weakness kept some of the ancient nations, whose organization and type showed them to be capable of great things, ignorant of many of the most important and useful facts in natural science. They assumed knowledge instead of acknowledging ignorance and weakness; they dogmatized and uttered theories as absurd as they were false, and made little useful progress in natural science. Bacon taught men a new lesson: that they knew nothing intuitively of nature, but must, humiliating as it might be, acknowledge this ignorance, set down humbly at her feet like little children before a teacher, and learn lessons of wisdom. Since the peoples of Christendom have acknowledged their weakness and ignorance, how great has been the increase of strength, what vast forward strides have they made! The wonders of astronomy—its sublime and beautiful laws—of botany, of chemistry, geography and medicine! All this improvement is due to the acknowledgment of ignorance and weakness. The felt necessity has sent men abroad outside of themselves to seek for aid, and in seeking they have found. So each individual must acknowledge his need before he will seek, or even receive assistance from outside. The most incorrigible and hopeless of all dunces is the dunce who thinks he is wise, and needs to learn no more.

The statement of the apostle is found to be true, and is illustrated by a multitude of facts in science and human experience; but no doubt its primary meaning and chief significance is found in the moral and spiritual bearings of the statement. We have indulged in these illustrations to show that what seemed a paradox in the apostle's statement is literally true of man in all his relations—that he must everywhere feel that he is weak before he can be strong. When men, in matters that relate to God, to the soul and to salvation, realize and acknowledge that they know nothing, they go to God, and thus become wise unto salvation; but so long as they continue puffed up with self-importance, and claim to be wise above what the pen of inspiration has written, they grope in the dark, and fall into grievous and hurtful errors. Never, while man relies on his own strength, can he be strong. His strength in things spiritual is to acknowledge his weakness, and avail himself of the strength of God. Then he is strong in the Lord of hosts and in his mighty power.

The little child is never so strong as when in its helplessness it cries out and brings to its aid and rescue the strength of all the house. The Pharisee who felt that he had no need to pray for himself, but whose so-called prayer was merely a fulsome eulogy of his imaginary virtues, and an unkind disparagement of others, went down to his house unjustified, and with no increase of spiritual power. But the publican, who acknowledged his sins, his spiritual helplessness, and threw himself, without one jot or tittle of self-reliance, upon the mercy of God, found strength to help in time of need, and went down to his house justified; for every one that exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

The people of Laodicea, who said they were rich and increased in goods, and had need of nothing, were, as God declares, really poor, miserable, blind and naked. The rich man, who said to his soul, "Thou hast much good; take thine ease; eat, drink and be merry," was really in the most destitute, perilous and helpless circumstances. If we would be strong we must realize our weakness. It was not until Jacob became weak and fell upon the angel that he received the blessing, and became "Israel—a prevailing prince with God." It is when the soul realizes its utter and hopeless destitution that it becomes "poor in spirit," and wins the kingdom of heaven. Peter essays to walk on the water in his own strength, but soon the perils are greater than his feeble faith; he begins to sink, and would have gone down if he had not acknowledged his weakness and have cried out: "Lord, save me, or I perish." Then the Arm that is girded with omnipotence and grace rescued him from the engulfing grave. But this impressive lesson failed to teach Peter his weakness and the source of his strength.

When the Master sadly predicted that some would betray and forsake him, Peter exclaimed that though all men should do this, yet he would never, but would die with his Lord. But soon, when only a servant-maid charges that he is a disciple of Jesus, in cowardly weakness he basely denies his Lord. But when he is strong in the Lord he calmly faces a ferocious mob. In perfect reliance on God, he sweetly sleeps, chained to his guards, and waits for the morning to die. When martyrs were chained to the stake, to perish in consuming flames, they were never so strong and so eloquent to persuade as in this hour of mortal agony and utter weakness.

It is when the Christian's earthly strength is gone that he shouts: "Thanks be to God, who giveth me the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The Old Methodist Ground.

Bishop McTyeire writes to the Pacific Methodist briefly but pungently about worldly amusements. His words are needed in every section, and may do good even here in the Southwest. The Bishop says:

The holidays just closing have shown an increased pressure upon the well-known position of Methodism. The question has even been raised in timid minds: "Will we not be obliged to yield our ground?" The world is resolved to have us, if we will not have it.

The safeguards and barriers are persistently and ingeniously assaulted. Shall we surrender? We cannot, we dare not. The old fight which the church of the first centuries kept up with theaters, carnivals, revelings and such like is transmitted to us. It rages afresh. There can hardly be a social gathering without a dance. Card-playing is getting to be a dangerously common pastime. No betting, you see, but only becoming familiar with the devil's tools. Horse-racing is intruded into agricultural fairs. A few mangy camels and stuffed crocodiles are placed at the entrance of the circus, and religious people are enticed in, with their children!

Let us be steadfast. The old Methodist ground will do to stand on.

It might help the attitude we hold toward these "amusements," and give our people and preachers more credit and courage in their opposition, if it were generally known that we were not the first to condemn, and call for separation from these things as inconsistent with the Christian profession. Read Neander's Church History on this point, away back in the centuries. The Methodists have not found out a new thing. They have not risen up to restrain where there was no restraint before. Take a sentence or two from the "Books of the Apostolic Church," as restored by the researches of Bunsen. How like some of our general rules do the following extracts read from the Greek constitutions and the Coptic canons on the admission of persons into the church:

"If any one be a maintainer of harlots, let him either leave off to prostitute women, or else let him be rejected.

"If a harlot come, let her leave off her whoredom, or else let her be rejected.

"If a maker of idols come, let him either leave off his employment, or let him be rejected.

"If one belonging to the theater come, whether it be man or woman, or a charioteer, or a fighter in single combat, or a racer, or an exhibitor of a show of gladiators, or an Olympic gamester, or one that plays on the flute or on the lute at these games, or a dancing-master, or a keeper of a public house, either let them leave off their employments, or let them be rejected.

"He that is guilty of sins not to be named, a Sodomite, an effeminate person, a magician, an enchanter, an astrologer, a diviner, an user of magic verses, a juggler, a mountebank, one that makes amulets, a charmer, a soothsayer, a fortune-teller, an observer of palmistry, let these be proved for some time, for this sort of wickedness is hard to be washed away; and if they leave off those practices, let them be received, but if they will not agree to that, let them be rejected.

"If any one followeth the sports of the theater, their huntings, or horse-races, or combats, either let him leave them off or let him be rejected."

We make no apology for this classification of certain sports and amusements that some people would indulge in and yet be counted Christians, if only these Methodists would let them alone. We refer all objectors to the fathers, and to the church of martyr days.

Well Put.

The Pacific Methodist of the sixteenth of January has a trenchant article on Methodist Union. We quote the conclusion of the article:

The two Methodisms are found side by side on the Pacific coast. It is said there should be but one Methodism here. Very well. Which should be permitted to live? Which should be killed? What rule should be adopted in the settlement of this question, if it must be met in this form? The Southern Methodist Church is to be killed, say those who alone present this issue of but one Methodism. Why this, and not the other? But one reason is urged in support of this demand for the destruction of the Southern Methodist Church on the Pacific coast: It is said that it is the smaller and weaker of the two, and therefore it should be destroyed. It is then a question of size, rather than of soundness, of quantity rather than quality. Ridiculous as it is, this is the sum and substance of the appeals for one Methodism which have been so industriously circulated during the last few months. We are bigger than you; therefore hold still and be swallowed! On the same principle we should swallow (absorb) the church next in size to us, that the next in size to it, and so on until all our Protestant churches shall have disappeared one after another, leaving the largest of them alone like a ldg pike that had swallowed all the little fish in the ecclesiastical mill-pond. If on this principle the Southern Methodists are to be swallowed by the Northern Methodists, on the same principle the Roman Catholics might swallow both, as they outnumber any one Protestant church.

One Methodism, forsooth! Southern Methodists present no such issue. They grudge nobody's prosperity. They seek nobody's life. They covet nobody's possessions. They only ask liberty of conscience, and freedom to worship God and serve him in their own way. But if the issue of one Methodism must be met, they have made their choice and will abide by it. They have chosen the Methodism that has never spotted its standards with political legislation. They have chosen the Methodism that has never organized or approved a raid against the life of a sister church. They have chosen the Methodism that faces and the ordeal both of prosperity and adversity, and come forth unscorched by the one and unflattered by the other. They have chosen the Methodism which the sword could not kill nor greenbacks purchase. They have chosen the Methodism that does not count numbers, but searches the oracles of God for its credentials. They have chosen the Methodism which, baptized in sorrow, endured in the martyr-spirit and triumphed by faith in God alone. They have chosen Southern Methodism as the purest form of Methodism known to them, and they will maintain that choice to the end. If those who clamor for "one Methodism" mean this Methodism, all right. If they mean another, they waste their time in talking to us. Our memories warn us, our convictions require us to turn a deaf ear to them. Our Methodism suits us. Instead of giving it up, we hope in the coming time it will attract to its happy communion multitudes who through its instrumentality shall be brought with us to swell the ranks of the ransomed millions upon the mount of God.

A College Agent.

The Pacific Methodist, which we seldom get more than once a month, always brings a rich supply of good things. We have taken liberal extracts already, but here is something from Dr. Fitzgerald and his work as agent of the college at Santa Rosa. We suppose all college agents have similar experiences:

The amount of money needed for the college could be given by the church and not felt. If our own people would do their whole duty in this crisis the money could be raised without asking an "outsider" for a dollar. But our people won't do their duty—some will, many will not. Why? Because some are selfish; stingy, mean. Their ideas are narrow. They lack largeness of heart. They shirk. They wait for others. They refuse to give to connectional church enterprises at a distance. Their charity, beginning at home, ends there—and the beginning is small and the end speedy. The unselfish, the generous, the large-hearted are the exceptions; but there are such among us. May their tribe increase!

This matter of our college is looked upon somewhat as a test of our strength and fidelity as a church, both by our friends and enemies. Shortly after I became agent a man stopped me in the street and said to me: "You are wasting your time—you can't succeed." He didn't wish us to succeed. He was an enemy. I have heard of similar talk from others who would like to make their prophecies of failure come true if they could. The reply I made was this: "We are succeeding finely—no school in the State has equaled ours in prosperity since its removal to Santa Rosa;" in saying which there was no exaggeration. Yes, the college is indeed prospering—with this only exception, the debt. Let us wipe it out! How much would you give rather than lose the college altogether? Let that idea be the gauge of your contribution. Let each act on this principle, and all will be well. On the other hand, let each one hold back and wait to see what others will do, and all will not be well—we will fail, and be disgraced by failure because it will be our fault, not our misfortune.

A gentleman in Monterey county—an "outsider"—sent me $100 for the college the other day. Who will do likewise? A gentleman in Nevada (State) has hinted that he will be one of fifty to give $500 each for the endowment of the college. The other forty-nine—?

REV. B. J. BALDWIN, M. D.—We learn that Dr. Baldwin has been transferred to the Louisiana Conference, and at its late session was appointed to Opelousas. The doctor was for several years connected with the South Georgia Conference, and maintained an unblemished reputation as a devout Christian and useful minister of the gospel. The numerous friends left behind him in Georgia commend him heartily to the church in Louisiana, and wish for him the widest success in his new field of labor.—Southern Christian Advocate.

BISHOP MILES, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of February 8, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, gave us a call this week. He was in good health and spirits. He expects to preach in Macon, Georgia, February 9, and then at other places in Georgia and South Carolina. He will hold the South Carolina Conference at Valentine chapel, near Abbeville, February 19; North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Edenton, North Carolina, March 5; and then attend the General Conference, which meets at Augusta, Georgia, March 19.

Death of Rev. J. L. Cotton.

From the following communication from Rev. George W. Brown, of the North Mississippi Conference, it will be seen that this well-known and much-loved minister of Christ has been called to his home and reward in heaven. By his death the Alabama Conference has lost one of its most active and effective members. We trust that some one well acquainted with Bro. Cotton will furnish a suitable memoir for the columns of the ADVOCATE.

MR. EDITOR: The Rev. J. L. Cotton, an old and prominent member of the Alabama Conference, died this morning, at one o'clock, near Durant, Holmes county, Mississippi. He came over here on business, apparently in fine health. On Sunday morning, January 26, he was violently attacked, and, after an illness of nine days, passed to his reward in heaven. The four last days of his illness he was unconscious of his surroundings. His remains will be interred to-morrow, at Spring Hill, on the Durant circuit.

Yours in Christian bonds,
GEORGE W. BROWN.
DURANT, HOLMES CO., MISS., Feb. 4, 1873.

Valuable Memorials.

From the letter of President Lopez, which we subjoin, it will be seen that the Martha Washington College is the recipient of some very interesting mementoes:

PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
MARTHA WASHINGTON COLLEGE,
Abingdon, Va., December, 1872.

Hon. John A. Campbell, President Board of Trustees, Martha Washington College:

DEAR SIR—Mrs. General John B. Floyd has presented to this college the following interesting and valuable articles, viz.: The handsomely gilded and figured China teacup and saucer owned and used by General George Washington; a large photograph likeness of her brother, General John S. Preston, the distinguished orator of South Carolina; a transparent crystal, taken from the mountains of southwestern Virginia, beautifully cut and engraved in Paris; a small statue of General Taylor, and some Indian relics; besides these Mrs. Floyd presented to the Enterpean Literary Society one hundred and nine valuable books. It affords me unfeigned gratification to make to you this announcement of another act of considerate liberality on the part of this true and noble lady to the college. She has been its constant friend, and by repeated kindnesses has associated her name with its most pleasant records. With great respect, I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

R. W. JONES,
President M. W. College.

THE Rev. Baptist Wriothesley Noel, M. A., died in London, January 26. He was the younger son of Sir Gerard Noel Noel, Bart. He was born in 1799, educated at Trinity, and was subsequently appointed Queen's chaplain. For several years he occupied the pulpit of St. John's chapel, Bedford Row, London, but seceded from the Established Church in 1848, and joined the Anabaptists. He was the author of "Sermons on the First Five Centuries of the Church," "Sermons to the Unconverted," "Case of the Free Church in Scotland," "Essay on Union of Church and State," "Essay on Baptism," "Christianity Compared with Unitarianism," "Freedom and Slavery in the United States of America," "The Rebellion in America," and "The Case of G. W. Gordon, of Jamaica." He was well known as an eloquent preacher and as a most devoted laborer among the poor of London, in concert with the city mission and kindred societies. A year or two ago he resigned his pastoral functions.

THE death of Dr. William A. Sykes, of Aberdeen, Mississippi, is a great loss to the church, as well as the country; but, full of years, beloved and honored, ready for the Master's call, he passed away in peace on the twelfth of January. We deeply sympathize with his widow and children. The funeral services were performed at his residence, Bishop Paine preaching a sermon upon the occasion of the death of his old friend and neighbor, and Bros. Ramsey and Shepherd assisting in the services. We learn that two sons, the eldest and youngest, of Dr. Sykes, and a son-in-law, joined the church of their father upon the occasion of his funeral. Blessed fruit of his pious counsel and bright example through life! A memoir of this venerable and faithful servant of God will, we hope, be furnished for publication. A brief sketch of his character will appear next week. Western Methodist.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC EXCHANGE, after mentioning the recent death of "Father Jandel," the general of the Dominicans, states that he is the seventy-fifth of the members of the Ecumenical Council who has died since it was opened on the eighth of December, 1869. Among the seventy-five were eight cardinals. The number of living cardinals amounts to forty-five, of whom twenty-one are seventy or more years of age. Cardinal Billiet, who has reached the age of ninety, is the oldest. During the reign of Pius the Ninth ninety-seven cardinals have died. All the cardinals are now at Rome with the exception of Cardinal Hohenlohe. Twenty-five cardinals' hats are vacant.

A WILL AND THE WAY.—An ear of corn was last year shelled and ten grains were given to each child in a Sunday school in Friendship, South Carolina, who wanted to do something for missions. The harvest realized five bushels, which, when sold at auction, brought $16.25, the first contribution of the school for foreign missions.

REV. JEFFERSON SHOOK, of the East Texas Conference, died on December 20.

FAITH is the master-key to the treasury of Jesus: it opens all the doors, and brings out every store.

Books and Periodicals.

GENESIS, OR THE FIRST BOOK OF MOSES. With a commentary. By Right Rev. E. Harold Browne, Lord Bishop of Ely. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co., 1873.

About seven years ago the speaker of the House of Commons, the Right Hon. J. Evelyn Denison, conceived the idea of a new commentary on the Scriptures, adapted to general and popular use, and embracing the most recent results of science and scholarship. The first volume of this proposed work, including the Pentateuch, has been published, and other parts of the work are now far advanced. Two volumes, embracing the historical and poetical books, will probably be printed within twelve months. The general plan has been this: A committee was formed to select the editor and the writers of the various sections. The Rev. F. C. Cook, Canon of Exeter, and preacher of Lincoln's Inn, was chosen editor. The work has been divided into eight sections. Each book has been assigned to some writer who has paid attention to the subject of it. The Archbishop of York, with the regius professors of divinity of Oxford and Cambridge, are a committee of reference in cases of dispute. The text is the authorized English version from the edition of 1611, with the marginal references and renderings. Amended translations are supplied in the notes, and printed in distinctive type, darker than the rest of the note. The volume before us is on Genesis alone, and is a part of the speaker's commentary on the Pentateuch, and issued separately, to meet the demand of the International uniform series of Sunday school lessons for the present year. The work is judiciously performed, and for general use promises to be most valuable and satisfactory.

THE LOST FOUND, AND THE WANDERER WELCOMED. By William M. Taylor, D. D. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co., 1873.

The lost sheep, the lost coin and the prodigal son are treated of in four lectures. Mr. Taylor is an Englishman, we believe, and for the last two or three years minister of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York. The exposition of these parables is very fine, abounding in illustration and practical application. For sale by Kahn & Co., New Orleans.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW for January, 1873, contains the following articles: 1. The Present Crisis; 2. Solar Spots, Prominences, etc.; 3. Paris and its People; 4. Smith's Blanchets' Legendre; 5. Armageddon; 6. Jesus of the Evangelists; 7. Oceanic Circulation; 8. Peggy O'Neal, or the Doom of the Republic; 9. Poem; 10. Notices of Books. Of these articles we can only say, in a general way, that they are able, scholarly and readable. It will be seen from their titles that they deal with subjects of present and living interest, and that they include such variety of topics as becomes a quarterly review. There are questions of civil government and statesmanship, science and religion in some of their freshest and gravest aspects, presented and discussed with rare acumen and power. Such a publication is calculated to awaken thought, to inform, and to exert a healthful influence upon public opinion. The Southern Review has a grand mission in the statement and vindication of sound doctrine and fundamental principles, and in the exposure and refutation of error. We know not what the circulation of the Review is, but it ought to be large. Our laymen, preachers and citizens generally should subscribe for it and read it.

LIVINGSTONE'S AFRICA is a 12mo of 508 pages, lately issued by Hubbard Bros., Philadelphia and Boston. About one-fifth of the volume is devoted to the Herald Stanley expedition, the most of the materials for which have already appeared in the newspapers. The first part of the book, say four-fifths of the whole, contains an account of Dr. Livingstone's travels and explorations, abridged, we suppose, from the great traveler's own works, and which have been before the public for several years. The chief value of the volume consists in the summary which it gives of Livingstone's explorations, and the gathering into convenient form for reference what has already been published in a fragmentary way. We are indebted to S. T. Goodwyn & Co., 112 Camp street, New Orleans, for a copy.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the grand illustrated catalogue of the educational publications, school furniture, etc., of A. S. Barnes & Co. Branch office, 112 Camp street, New Orleans. Those needing things in their line will do well to send for catalogue.

THE SOUTHERN MAGAZINE for February has a varied and vivacious array of articles. A Group of Poets, No. II, on Alfred DeMusset, is a very thoughtful and discriminative essay by Prof. James A. Harrison, of Randolph Macon College.

CRYSTAL FOUNT is the name of a new weekly, published by C. W. Buck, editor and proprietor, at Tuskaloosa, Alabama. It is a handsome paper, tastefully made up, and devoted to the cause of temperance.

THE ALDINE for February contains twelve fine engravings, besides the usual amount of fresh, original literature in prose and verse. There is no publication in this country comparable to it.

MARRIED.

ROBERTSON—HINSON.—At the residence of the bride's father, on the twenty-second of January, 1873, by Rev. N. B. Young, Mr. D. A. Robertson to Miss T. C. Hinson, all of East Baton Rouge parish, Louisiana.

JACKSON—HIGGINBOTHAM.—January 23, 1873, by Rev. S. A. Hadou, Mr. I. L. Jackson to Miss E. O. Higginbotham, both of East Feliciana parish.

FLOWERS—TURRENTINE.—On the twentieth of January, 1873, by the father of the bride, Rev. M. C. Turrentine, at his residence in Tallassee, Alabama, Mr. James H. Flowers, of Tipton county, Tennessee, to Miss Fanny V. Turrentine, of Tallassee, Alabama.

Nashville Christian Advocate please copy.

JACKSON—CASETTY.—At the residence of T. S. Mabins, four miles south of Floyd, Carroll parish, Louisiana, February 5, at three P. M., by the Rev. George M. Liverman, Mr. E. C. Jackson to Mrs. M. M. Casetty.

A Short College Sermon.

BY THE AGENT.

Text—"And the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now the place where we dwell with thee is too strait for us. Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye. And one said, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go. So he went with them, and when they came to Jordan they cut down wood. But as one was felling a beam, the ax-head fell into the water, and he cried and said, Alas, Master! for it was borrowed. And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he showed him the place, and he cut down a stick, and cast it in thither; and the iron did swim. Therefore said he, Take it up to thee, and he put out his hand and took it."—Second Kings vi, 1-7.

A long text—the sermon will be short. Leaving out the "Introduction," there are four "points" in it.

1. A want recognized. That want was a religious school—a "school of the prophets." The world has always needed such schools, and always will. God approves them. His inspired prophet in this case was president of one. California needs such a school. The Southern Methodist Church needs such a school.

2. A good location sought. Down on the Jordan was a good place—the soil was fertile, wood was plentiful. The right sort of a place for a college—just like Santa Rosa in essential features. A very good location.

3. Labor properly distributed. Every man took his beam—all their beams put together made the building. That made light work and quick work. That is what we must do for our college at Santa Rosa. Every man among us must do his part. Every Southern Methodist in the State must have a beam, brick or shingle in it. Yes, every one. This will make sure work and quick work. There are several thousands of us, and there will be many thousands more, thank God!

4. The borrowed ax. This is the point of the whole sermon just now. We know how the one felt who lost his borrowed ax. We have been borrowing. A miracle was wrought to get him out of the scrape. Can we expect as much to be done for us? Most certainly. The swimming of iron is not the greatest of miracles. The hearty consecration of gold and silver to doing good is a greater. The faith of the prophet made the iron swim. O God, give us the faith that will work miracles of gracious liberality for thy cause! Amen.—Dr. Fitzgerald, in Pacific Methodist.

DENTISTRY WITHOUT PAIN.—Dr. J. M. Magee, No. 11 Baronne street.

THE GENERAL R. E. LEE MONUMENT.—The grand monument to the memory of General Lee is now rapidly being constructed under the direction and skill of Prof. Valentine. And in order to complete it at the earliest possible day, the Executive Committee of the Lee Memorial Association, of Lexington, Virginia, which is composed of such distinguished men as General Pendleton, General Terry, Hon. William McLaughlin, Colonel Preston Johnston, Charles Davidson and others, have authorized the publication and sale of a perfect life-size steel-engraved portrait of General Lee, the proceeds of its sale to be applied in furtherance of the object of this association, namely: to the erection of a monument to the memory of General R. E. Lee, at the Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Virginia. The portrait will be sold only by subscription, through regular authorized agents. Every subscriber for the portrait will receive a certificate signed by the secretary and chairman of the Lee Memorial Association. We commend this portrait to the public.

Messrs. R. L. DeLee & Co., No. 112 Camp street, New Orleans, have been constituted and appointed general agents for the State of Louisiana, and any communications addressed to them for circulars, terms, certificates and local agencies will receive prompt attention.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER.—We call special attention to the advertisement of the above-named machine. From the number of the certificates which Mr. Hayes inserts, from persons well known and of the highest respectability in our city, there can be no doubt of the satisfaction which it gives, and the certificates are no loll, specific and complete that we can say nothing more strong and convincing, and therefore advise all who are interested to read the advertisement and certificates.

NOTICE OF REMOVAL.—J. L. Dunnica & Co., in our advertising columns, give notice of their removal to 66 Tchoupitoulas street, where they succeed to the business of Messrs. Stanard, Bronson & Co. Messrs. Dunnica & Co. have been leading wholesale linen dealers and commission merchants in this city for many years. There is no firm more reliable or more thoroughly conversant with the business in which they are engaged.

FASHIONABLE DRESSMAKING.—In another column appears the advertisement of Miss A. E. Barrett, whose dressmaking, cutting and fitting establishment is at No. 131 Prytania street.

COOPERAGE.—William J. Beirne, Nos. 28 and 29 Front street, is prepared to do all kinds of cooperage. Molasses casks, hogsheads, barrels, half-barrels, etc., always on hand.

CONSUMPTION.—New treatment by Dupro's Alimentary Elixir. Depot in New Orleans at Mr. P. Cusachs', corner of St. Philip and Royal streets. See advertisement.

THE NEW LOUISIANA REMEDY, for coughs, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis, consumption, etc., etc., is for sale by all the wholesale drug houses in New Orleans.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

ONE SIP of this will bathe the drooping spirit in delight beyond the bliss of dreams. Be wise, and taste.—Milton's Comus.

Verily do the words of the inspired poet gleam with the light of prophecy; for if there is anything that is swift to operate beneficially on the human system, inspired by physical ailments, it is Price's celebrated Aromatic Stomach Bitters. Those whose eyes "drag their slow length along," harassed by the petty but fretful annoyances of indigestion, dyspepsia, debility, febrile excitement, nervous irritability, exhaustion, or the general suffering that results from hepatic causes, deserve the fate to which they are consigned when, like the physician to whom the voice of sacred wisdom cried, "Heal thyself," they turn away from the means placed within their grasp. Price's Bitters will do the work. A vigorous stimulant, an agreeable elixir, a strengthening tonic and a grateful adjuvant, the very universality of whose use is confirmative of its efficacy, it stands to-day stamped with the signet-seal of medical approval, and radiant with the award of a high popular appreciation.

SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, if persisted in, it is claimed, will cure the most stubborn case of liver disease. There is no failure about it. fe13 1t

UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS.—Within the past year two hundred thousand boxes of Dr. Tutt's Vegetable Liver Pills have been sold, and not a single instance is known where they have failed to give satisfaction. If you would enjoy life, have a fine appetite and robust health, use these Pills.

AUGUSTA, November, 1869.

DR. W. H. TUTT: It affords me much pleasure to testify to the great value of your Liver Pills. They are all they are represented to be. In my opinion there are no Pills so well adapted to the Southern climate as they are. Yours truly,

JOS. BRUMMEL,

REMOVE from the liver those wastes arising from the action of the system which, if allowed to remain in the circulation, give rise to diseases which speedily destroy life. Nature has appointed the kidneys and liver as her agents, by whose action impurities shall be eliminated from the system; and when these agents are torpid or debilitated, or disabled from any cause or their business, Hamilton's Buchu and Dandelion imparts fresh tone and vigor to them, and makes of them the best blood purifiers one can have. This preparation is for sale at Frederickson & Hart's and E. J. Hart & Co.'s drug stores. jan5 2m

J. C. TILTON, PITTSBURG, PA.

WOMAN'S FRIEND AND STEAM WASHER

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOLD.

WILL CLEANSE YOUR CLOTHES WITHOUT RUBBING.

EVERY ONE SOLD IS FULLY WARRANTED.

NO FLUIDS OR EXTRA SOAP USED.

IT CONSUMES LESS SOAP, LESS TIME AND LESS FUEL THAN THE USUAL method. It saves Labor, Wear and Tear, and the Annoyance of Wash-day. It requires no attention while the process of cleansing goes on. It will do the Washing of the Family while you are eating breakfast and doing up dishes.

Steam has long been known as the most powerful agent in removing dirt, grease and stains from clothing, and bleaching them white. Papermakers have for many years used steam in cleaning and bleaching their rags, and they succeed in making, by its agency, the lightest picking from the gutter perfectly pure and white. Until the invention of the STEAM WASHER or WOMAN'S FRIEND, although often attempted, no method had been discovered of applying Steam directly to the clothing, which could be used in a portable manner for domestic purposes. The WOMAN'S FRIEND washes without labor. It will do the washing of an ordinary family in from thirty minutes to an hour. The STEAM WASHER is superior to all other devices for the following reasons:

1. It does its own work, thereby saving a large portion of the time usually taken in a family.
2. It uses much less soap than is required by any other method.
3. It requires no attention whatever while the process of cleaning is going on. A lady can do her washing while she is eating her breakfast and doing up the breakfast dishes.
4. Clothing wears double the time, washed in this Washer, that it will washed by a machine, or by hand-labor or a washboard.
5. Lace Curtains and all fine fabrics are washed in a superior manner. For Flannels this Washer is most desirable, as it will not full them, as a machine or hand-rubbing does. All fabrics, from the finest lace to a bed-blanket, can be washed perfectly and with ease without the rubbing-board.

IT IS TRULY A LABOR AND CLOTHES-SAVING INVENTION.

READ THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIALS:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., January 16, 1873.

This is to certify that I have used the Steam Washer sold by E. B. Hayes, General Agent, and fully indorse all the claims for it, having used it four or five weeks.

I am using the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and consider it the best invented Washing Machine in use. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes.

(Signed) N. MILLER, No. 86 Gravier street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 21, 1873.

This is to certify that I have tried the Washing Machine known as the "Woman's Friend," and find it all that it is claimed to be. I gave it a fair and honest trial, and I take great pleasure in recommending it to every housekeeper. It is very simple. A small child can use it. There is no rubbing necessary, and consequently no damage to clothes. Very respectfully, (Signed) MRS. N. JENKINS, No. 100 Baronne street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30, 1873.

I have used the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and am perfectly satisfied that it will do all that Mr. Hayes claims for it. It is truly a labor-saving invention.

(Signed) FRANK SCHAEFFER, corner First and St. Dennis streets.

NEW ORLEANS, January 30, 1873.

This is to certify that I have purchased from Mr. Hayes the Steam Washer called the "Woman's Friend," and I find it to be a great invention. It saves labor, soap, fuel and clothes, and I can fully recommend the same. No family should be without one.

(Signed) MRS. J. F. ROHRBACHER, No. 237 Camp street.

NEW ORLEANS, January 31, 1873.

E. B. HAYES, Esq., NEW ORLEANS, LA.—Dear Sir: The Steam Washer I bought of you, called the "Woman's Friend," I find, does all that you promised for it, and ought to be in every family.

(Signed) MRS. R. M. WALMSLEY.

WANTED—MEN WHO WANT TO MAKE Money.—Here is an opportunity for making money rarely presented in a lifetime. We have got the best and surest-selling article ever invented, that every housekeeper buys on sight. It is a small Furnace, weighing only six pounds, that can be used with or without a stove. It will fit in the holes of any sized stove or range, and will do as much work with one quart of fuel—charcoal, chips, coke, corncobs, wood or soft coal—as can be done on any stove with one-half bushel. It will boil, broil, roast, toast, bake and stew. It is the best air-tight heater in the world. Its economy in saving fuel is marvelous. You have no smoke, gas or heat in the room. It sells the year round. Retail price only $2. Thousands are sold every week. Any man with a small capital can clear from $20 to $40 per day by owning the right of any good county, and a whole State is of incalculable worth to a man of enterprise. We will send a sample Furnace to any part of the United States on receipt of $2. Address, for circular,

SPRINGFIELD, TENN., Sept. 13, 1872.

GENTLEMEN: Please ship us six dozen Allen's Lung Balsam. We have not a bottle in the store. It has more reputation than any Cough Medicine we have ever sold. I have been in the drug business twenty-seven years. We mean just what we say.

Very truly yours, HURT & TANNER.

What the Doctors Say.

Drs. Wilson & Ward, physicians and druggists, write from Centerville, Tennessee: "We purchased Allen's Lung Balsam, and it sells rapidly. We are practicing physicians, as well as druggists, and take pleasure in recommending a great remedy, such as we know this to be."

Physicians do not recommend a medicine which has no merit. What they say about Allen's Lung Balsam can be taken as a fact. Let all afflicted test it at once, and be convinced of its real merits.

It is harmless to the most delicate child. It contains no Opium in any form.

Directions accompany each bottle.

THE LIFE-CLOCK.

There is a little mystic clock,
No human eye hath seen,
That beateth on, and beateth on,
From morning until e'en.

And when the soul is wrapped in sleep,
And heareth not a sound,
It ticks and ticks the livis-long night,
And never runneth down.

O wondrous is that work of art
Which knells the parting hour!
But art never formed, nor mind conceived,
The life-clock's magic power.

Nor set in gold, nor decked with gems,
By wealth and pride possessed;
But rich or poor, or high or low,
Each bears it in his breast.

When life's deep stream, 'mid beds of flowers,
All still and softly glides,
Like the wayfarer's step, with a gentle beat,
It warns of passing tides.

When threatening darkness gathers o'er,
And hope's bright visions flee,
Like the sullen stroke of the muffled oar,
It beateth heavily.

When passion nerves the warrior's arm
For deeds of hate and wrong,
Though heeded not the fearful sound,
The knell is deep and strong.

Such is the clock that measures life,
Of flesh and spirit blended;
And thus 'twill run within the breast
Till that strange life is ended.

The Little Girl's Conversion.

Dear readers, and especially those of you who have found Jesus, who know him as your own precious Savior, I am going to tell you a true story of how a poor little Irish girl came to know the same precious Savior.

A good many years ago, in a large town in Ireland, I used to go every Sunday morning to a Sunday school called a "ragged school," to speak to some little children about Jesus. Perhaps you would like to know why it is called a "ragged school;" it was because most of the children who went there were very, very poor, and were dressed in very old, torn clothes, with no hats or bonnets, and no shoes and stockings for their poor little feet.

Well, the little girl I am going to tell you of was just like that; she never wore a bonnet, and her little bare feet were often pinched with cold; but she was a bright, happy little girl, and did not seem to mind about not having many clothes to wear, and she loved to come to Sunday school, and used to listen so earnestly when I told the children about Jesus, and what he had done to save poor lost sinners. Then little Bridget—for that was her name—became very anxious, and I often used to ask the Lord to open her heart to receive Jesus.

About this time she was absent one or two mornings, and I felt rather disappointed, fearing that she was getting careless. When the next Sunday came I had the pleasure of seeing her in the class again, looking rather pale. She told me she had been very ill, and that was the reason she had not been to Sunday school.

The subject we had that morning was a very beautiful verse in First Samuel, seventh chapter and ninth verse: "And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord; and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him." I spoke to the children about the Lord Jesus as being the Lamb of God—the one great and only sacrifice for sin. Then I said that Jesus bore the sin of the world, and that when he hung on the cross he was bearing the penalty of man's sin. "The wages of sin is death," and so he died on the cross, and was put down into the grave; but he rose again the third day—where did he leave the sin? Little Bridget looked up at me, her eyes beaming with joy as she cried: "Oh, teacher, then he left it all in the ground." I did not take any notice of the remark just then, but went on to say that if she believed that Jesus had borne all her sins on the cross, and put them away, and that he had died in her stead, then she was free from all stain of sin, and as perfect in God's sight as Christ himself. I stopped for a minute, and she said with deep earnestness: "Oh, teacher, what a nice thing it is to believe!" I said: "And do you believe that the Lord Jesus bore all your sins?" "Yes, teacher, I do." "When did you believe it?" "Just now, when you were speaking to me, I felt sure of it."

Now, dear ones, there is one thing I would like to say to you. There were many little girls in the class that morning besides little Bridget, and they all heard the same sweet story of the Savior's love; but they did not seem to care about it. They had heard it before, and I have no doubt that they thought they should often hear it again, and so they went away laughing and chattering, and forgot that wonderful tale of the sufferings and death of the Son of God, and grieved the heart of that dear Savior who was yearning over each of these poor lost little ones, and desiring to bring them to himself.

Now is this what you will do, any of you who have not yet come to Jesus? Will you read this little story, and then throw it down and run away to your play or your lessons, and forget about the dear Lord Jesus? Do you ever think that the Lord Jesus loves you far more tenderly than even your mother does? Will you continue to disappoint his loving heart? You know you cannot get to heaven without the Lord Jesus, and you know in your heart how naughty you are, and how often you do and think things that you would not like any one in the world to know anything about. Now, except you take the Lord Jesus as your substitute—that is, believe, as little Bridget did, that Jesus had died instead of her, and borne all her sins on the cross—you will have to bear the punishment yourself; and God says: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Come, then, to Jesus just NOW, dear little ones, and then you will be happy here and happy hereafter.

HOW TO TREAT STRANGERS.—A Sabbath school missionary in the West, while addressing a Sabbath school, noticed a little girl, shabbily dressed and barefooted, shrinking in a corner, her little sunburned face buried in her hands, the tears trickling between her small brown fingers, and sobbing as if her heart would break. Soon, however, another little girl, about eleven years old, got up and went to her, and, taking her by the hand, led her toward a brook, then seated her on a log, and, kneeling beside her, she took off her ragged sunbonnet, and, dipping her hands in the water, bathed her hot eyes and tear-stained face, and smoothed the tangled hair, talking in a cheery manner all the while.

The little one brightened up, the tears all went, and smiles came creeping around the rosy mouth.

The missionary stepped forward and said:

"Is that your sister, my dear?"

"No, sir," answered the noble child, with tender, earnest eyes; "I have no sister, sir."

"O! one of the neighbor's children," replied the missionary—"a little schoolmate, perhaps?"

"No, sir; she is a stranger. I do not know where she came from. I never saw her before."

"Then how came you to take her out and have such a care for her if you do not know her?"

"Because she was a stranger, sir, and seemed all alone, and needed somebody to be kind to her."

Where are the Butterflies?

We watched the swallows sitting in long rows upon the house-tops, chattering, consulting and settling their plans for their travels; and though we did not actually see them go, we know quite well they are gone, and that somewhere in the sunny South they are living and catching flies, till April will bring them back to us none the worse. And we know what becomes of the squirrel and the harvest-mouse, and many another little creature which has safely packed itself away in some cozy hole till the spring-time.
